But the rifle that never missed its mark spoke again. Tobias' arm fell shattered, and he staggered away screaming. Still once more, Charlie Webster's gun spoke, and the staggering figure fell with a crash on the deck.

"Now, boys, ready," I heard Charlie's voice roar out again, as the sloop tore alongside the schooner—where the rest of the negro crew with raised arms had fallen on their knees, crying for mercy.

All this I saw from the water, as I swam wildly toward the two boats, which now had closed on each other, a mass of thundering canvas, and screaming and cursing men—and Calypso there, like a beautiful statue, still lashed to the mast, a proud smile on her lovely lips.

Another moment, and Charlie had sprung aboard, and, seizing a knife from one of the screaming negroes, he cut her free.

His deep calm voice came to me over the water.

"That's what I call courage," he said. "I could never have done it."

The "king" had been right. He knew his daughter.

By this I was nearing the boats, though as yet no one had seen me. They were all too busy with the confusion on deck, where four men lay dead, and three others still kept up their gibbering of fear.

I saw Calypso and Charlie Webster stand a moment looking down at the figure of Tobias, prostrate at their feet.

"I am sorry I had to kill him," I heard Charlie's deep growl. "I meant to keep him for the hangman."

But suddenly I saw him start forward and stamp heavily on something.

"No, you don't," I heard him roar—and I learned afterward that Tobias, though mortally wounded, was not yet dead, and that, as the two had stood looking down on him, they had seen his hand furtively moving toward the fallen revolver that lay a few inches from him on the deck. Just as he had grasped it, Charlie's heavy boot had come down on his wrist. But Tobias was still game.

"Not alive, you English brute!" he was heard to groan out, and, snatching free his wrist too swiftly to be prevented, he had gathered up all his remaining strength, and hurled himself over the side into the sea.

I was but a dozen yards away from him, as he fell; and, as he rose again, it was for his dying eyes to fix with a glare upon me. They dilated with terror, as though he had seen a ghost. Then he gave one strange scream, and fell back into the sea, and we saw him no more.

* * * * * *

It will be easier for the reader to imagine, than for me to describe, the look on the faces of Calypso and Charlie Webster when they saw me appear at almost the same spot where poor Tobias had just gone bubbling down. Words I had none, for I was at the end of my strength, and I broke down and sobbed like a child.

"Now, Do Your Worst!" Cried Tobias.

"Thank God you are safe—my treasure, my treasure!" was all I could say, after they had lifted me aboard, and I lay face down on the deck, at her feet. Swiftly she knelt by my side, and caressed my shoulder with her dear hand.

All of which—particularly my reference to "my treasure"—must have been much to the bewilderment of the good simple-hearted Charlie, towering, innocent-eyed, above us. I believe I stayed a little longer at her feet than I really had need to, for the comfort of her being so near and kind; but, presently, we were all aroused by a voice from the cliffs above. It was the "king," with his bodyguard, Erebus and the crew of the Flamingo—no Samson, alas! The sound of the firing had reached them in the woods, and they had come hurrying to discover its cause.

So we deferred asking our questions, and telling our several stories, till we were pulled ashore.

As Calypso was folded in her father's arms, he turned to me:

"Didn't I tell you that I knew my daughter?" he said.

"And I told you something too, O king," I replied—my eyes daring at last to rest on Calypso with the love and pride of my heart.

"And where on earth have you been, young man?" he asked, laughing. "Did Tobias kidnap you too?"

It was very hard, as you will have seen, to astonish the "king."

But, though it was hard to astonish and almost impossible to alarm him, his sense of wonder was quite another matter, and the boyish delight with which he listened to our several stories would have made it worth while to undergo tenfold the perils we had faced. Our stories, said the "king," were quite in the manner of "The Arabian Nights," dovetailing one into the other.

"And now," he added, "we will begin with the 'Story of the Murdered Slave and the Stolen Lady.'"

Calypso told her story simply and in a few words. The first part of it, of which the poor murdered Samson had been the eloquent witness, needed no further telling. He had done his brave best—poor fellow—but Tobias had had six men with him, and it was soon over. Her they had gagged and bound and carried in a sort of improvised sedan chair; Tobias had done the thing with a certain style and—she had to admit—with absolute courtesy.

When they had gone a mile or two from the house, he had had the gag taken from her mouth, and, on her promise not to attempt to escape (which was, of course, quite impossible) he had also had her unbound, so that her hurried journey through the woods was made as comfortable as possible.

They were making, she had gathered—and as we had surmised—for the northern shore, and, after about a three hours' march, she heard the sound of the sea. On the schooner she had found a cabin all nicely prepared for her—even dainty toilet necessaries—and an excellent dinner was served, on some quite pretty china, to her alone. Poor Tobias had seemed bent on showing—as he had said to Tom—that he was not the "carrion" we had thought him.

After dinner, Tobias had respectfully asked leave for a few words with her. He had apologized for his action, but explained that it was necessary—the only way he had left, he said, of protecting his own interests, and safeguarding a treasure which belonged to him and no one else, if it belonged to any living man. It had seemed to her that it was a monomania with him.

While he had been talking, she had made up her mind what she would do. She would tell him the plain truth about her doubloons, and offer him what remained of them as a ransom. This she did, and was able at last half to persuade him that, so far as anyone knew, that was all the treasure there was, and then the digging among the ruins of the old house was a mere fancy of her father's. There might be something there or not—and she went so far as to give her word of honor that, if anything was found, he should have his share of it.

Tobias had seemed impressed, and promised his answer in the morning, leaving her to sleep—with a sentry at her cabin door. She had slept soundly, and awakened only at dawn. As soon as she was up, Tobias had come to her, saying that he had accepted her offer, and asking her to direct him to her treasure.

This she had done, and, to avoid passing the settlement, they had taken the course round the eastern end of the island. As they had approached the cave (and here Calypso turned a quizzical smile on me, which no one, of course, understood but ourselves), a sloop was seen approaching them from the westward . . . and here she stopped and turned to Charlie Webster.

"Now," said the "king," "we shall hear the story of Apollo—or, let us say, rather Ajax—the Far-Darter—he of the arrow that never missed its mark."

And Charlie Webster, more at home with deeds than words, blushed and blushed through his part of the story, telling how—having called at the settlement—he had got our message from Sweeney, and was making up the coast for the hidden creek. He had spied what he felt sure was Tobias' schooner—had called on him "in the king's name" to surrender— ("I had in my pocket the warrant for his arrest," said Charlie, with innocent pride—"the d—d scoundrel") but had been answered with bullets. He had been terribly frightened, he owned, when Calypso had been brought on deck, but she had given him courage—he paused to beam on her, a broad-faced admiration, for which he could find no words—and, as he had never yet missed a flying duck at—I forget how many yards Charlie mentioned—well . . . perhaps he oughtn't to have risked it.

And so his story came to an end, amid reassuring applause.

"Now," said the "king," "for the Story of the Disappearing Gentleman and the Lighted Lantern."

And then I told my story as it is already known to the reader, and I have to confess that, when I came to the chestful of doubloons and pieces of eight, I had a very attentive audience. The "king" was for starting off that very night. But, reminded of the difficult seclusion in which the treasure still lay, he was persuaded to wait till the morrow.

"At dawn then," he said, "tomorrow—what time, the rosy-footed dawn' . . . so be it. And now I am going to talk to Ajax the Far-Darter of duck shooting."

"But wait!" I cried. "Why did 'Jack Harkaway' go to Nassau?"

Calypso blushed. The "king" chuckled.

"I prefer not to be known in Nassau, yet some of my business has to be done there. Nor is it safe for beauty like Calypso's to go unprotected. So from time to time, 'Jack Harkaway' goes for us both! And now enough of explanations!" and he launched into talk of game and sport in various parts of the world, to the huge delight of the great simple-hearted Charlie.

But, after a time, other matters claimed the attention of his other auditors. During the flow of his discourse night had fallen. Calypso and I perceived that we were forgotten—so, by an impulse that seemed to be one, we rose and left them there, and stole out into the garden where the little fountain was dancing like a spirit under the moon, and the orange trees gave out their perfume on the night breeze. I took her hand, and we walked softly out into the moonlight, and looked down at the closed lotuses in the little pool. And then we took courage to look into each other's eyes.

"Calypso," I said, "when are you going to show me where you keep your doubloons?"—and I added, in a whisper, "Jack—when am I going to see you in boy's clothes again?"

And, with that, she was in my arms, and I felt her heart beating against my side.

"Oh! my treasure," I said—ever so softly—"Calypso, my treasure."

POSTSCRIPT.

Now, such readers as have been "gentle" enough to follow me so far in my story, may possibly desire to be told what lay behind those other locked doors in the underground gallery where I so nearly laid my bones.

Those caverns, we afterward discovered; did actually communicate with Blackbeard's ruined mansion, and the "king," who has now rebuilt that mansion and lives in it in semifeudal state with Calypso and me, is able to pass from one to the other by underground passages which are an unfailing source of romantic satisfaction to his dear, absurd soul.

As to whether or not the mansion and the treasure were actually Blackbeard's—that is, Edward Teach's—we are yet in doubt, though we prefer to believe that they were. At all events, we never found any evidence to connect them at all with Henry P. Tobias, whose second treasure, we have every reason to think, still remains undiscovered.

As for the sinister and ill-fated Henry P. Tobias, Jr., we have since learned—through Charlie Webster, who every now and again drops in with sailors from his sloop and carries off the "king" for duck hunting—that his real name was quite different; he must have assumed, as a nom de guerre, the name we knew him by, to give color to his claim. I am afraid, therefore, that he was a plain scoundrel, after all, though it seemed to me that I saw gleams in him of something better, and I shall always feel a sort of kindness toward him for the saving grace of gallant courtesy with which he invested his abduction of Calypso.

Calypso . . . She and I, just for fun, sometimes drop into Sweeney's store, and, when she has made her purchases, she draws up from her bosom a little bag, and, looking softly at me, lays down on the counter—a golden doubloon; and Sweeney—who, doubtless, thinks us all a little crazy—smiles indulgently on our make-believe.

Sometimes, on our way home, we come upon Tom in the plantations, superintending a gang of the "king's" janissaries—among whom Erebus is still the blackest—for Tom is now the lord high steward of our estate. He beams on us in a fatherly way, and I lay my hand significantly on my left side—to his huge delight. He flashes his white teeth and wags his head from side to side with inarticulate enjoyment of the allusion. For who knows? He may be right. In so mysterious a world the smallest cause may lead up to the most august results and there is nothing too wonderful to happen.

(THE END.)

Key of Happiness.

It is very difficult to realize it sometimes, and it is very hard on our pride to admit it when we do realize it, but it is a fact nevertheless, and a fact that we should let get hold of us, and stay with us—that the joy and happiness and satisfaction of our lives depend very much more upon ourselves and the kind of people we are than upon the kind of things that happen to us. It is the kind of will we carry round with us, and the attitude of our mind and the temper of our spirit and decides whether our lives shall be happy and hopeful, and not the things that come to us. Given the right kind of will, the same attitude and the wholesome temper of soul, we shall be able to adjust ourselves to life with some comfort and satisfaction, no matter what its accidents and incidents, until they become quite satisfying. We carry the key of our own happiness ourselves and no one can give it to us or take it away.

"But suppose I get it wet in the rain," asked the woman, "What effect will the water have on it? What will happen to it then? Won't it spoil?"

"Madam," answered the furrier, "I have only one answer: Did you ever hear of a skunk carrying an umbrella?"

HAVE TO "HAND IT TO THEM"

Modern Youngsters Quickly Get Wise as to the Intricacies of "High Finance."

The three brothers, aged seven, nine and eleven, were fighting among themselves almost all the time. Their mother was complaining of this to their grandfather on the occasion of his weekly visit. "All of them have fought like this?" grandfather inquired, looking reproachfully at the three offenders.

Mother was always just. "Well, John hasn't fought as much as the two younger ones," she informed grandfather.

Then grandfather handed John a half-dollar for his abstinence. The money had its effect, and that week there was more peace and harmony in the household than there had been for a long time. Mother reported the change to grandfather at the end of the next week. And he rewarded all alike by handing each a dime.

Half an hour later mother happened to hear the boys discussing the gift. "Only a dime apiece," John was scornful, "and last week he gave me a whole half-dollar. I'll tell you what let's do. You two fight. Then when he gives me the half-dollar I'll divide up. Then we'll have 15 cents apiece, besides a between nickel. Will you do it?" And the other two agreed.—Indianapolis News.

"KILL-JOYS"

Constipation, Headache, Colds, Biliousness ended with "Cascarets"

Nothing takes the joy out of life quicker than a disordered liver or waste-clogged bowels. Don't stay sick, bilious, headachy, constipated. Remove the liver and bowel poison which is keeping your head dizzy, your tongue coated, your breath bad and stomach sour. Why not spend a few cents for a box of Cascarets and enjoy the nicest, gentlest laxative-cathartic you ever experienced? Cascarets never gripe, sicken or inconvenience one like Salts, Oil, Calomel or harsh pills. They work while you sleep.—Adv.

Clemenceau's Explanation of Appointment of Colleague Shows "Tiger" Can Be Bitter.

During his first presidency of the council, as today, M. Clemenceau was frequently reproached for the inefficiency of certain of his collaborators and, as today, he got out of it by making jests at their expense, says Le Chi de Paris. In 1906 Charles Benoist happened to hear "the Tiger" expressing himself rather strongly to one of his ministers. Mr. Benoist was astonished at the premier's severity, and said as much.

"But," exclaimed Clemenceau, "he's a fool."

"So much the worse for you; it's your fault."

"What; my fault that he's a fool?"

"No; but your fault that he is a minister. By the way, how did you happen to choose him?"

Clemenceau hesitated a moment, looken Benoist straight in the eye and suddenly shot at him in a triumphant voice:

"Do you happen to know one that's more stupid?"

NEW SAVINGS CERTIFICATES CALLED MARVEL OF FINANCE

U. S. "Baby Bonds" of $100 and $1,000 Denominations Are Becoming Popular Investment.

Reports from all parts of the Seventh district show the increasing popularity of the new $100 and $1,000 Treasury Savings certificates. They are virtually "baby bonds" and their investment value is readily seen. Both banks and individuals are investing in this new form of government security. Secretary of the Treasury Glass has characterized these certificates as "the marvel of finance," and Albert Boswell, manager of sales for the Seventh District War Savings organization, has pointed out six reasons why this term of the secretary of the treasury fits them. The reasons are:

1. They carry valuable tax-exemption privileges.
2. They cannot depreciate in value, not being subject to market fluctuations.
3. They are a liquid investment, redeemable for cash on ten days' notice.
4. They yield a substantial income, actually more than 4¼ per cent.
5. They are short term, maturing January 1, 1924.
6. They represent absolute safety as obligations of the United States government.

The $100 certificates may be purchased at post offices of the first and second class and at banks; $1,000 certificates may be obtained through banks or trust companies and certificates of either denomination may be ordered direct from the War Savings district headquarters, 105 West Monroe street, Chicago, Ill.

The new certificates are issued only in registered form with the name of the owner written in at the time of the purchase. The registration records are kept in Washington and this feature is a protection to the investor.

War Savings certificates filled with twenty War Savings stamps, series of 1919, may be exchanged for Treasury Savings certificates in denominations of $100, and ten such War Savings certificates may be exchanged for a $1,000 Treasury Savings certificate. The price of the $100 certificate in November is $84.40. The increase in cost is 20 cents each month. The $1,000 certificate in November costs $844. The price of this denomination increases $2 a month.

—BUY ONLY WHAT YOU NEED—

$700,000,000 IN FOOD WASTED.

The National Association of Waste Material Dealers estimates that Americans throw away $700,000,000 worth of food each year. If only one ounce of food is wasted or spoiled in each of the 20,000,000 homes in America, the total loss is 1,800,000 pounds a day. As much coal is wasted annually as all the mines of the country could produce in two weeks.

MAKE MONEY WORK FOR YOU.

An investment of $100 in Liberty Bonds increases to $150 in about 17 years, if interest is reinvested as received at 4 per cent, interest compounded quarterly. War Savings Stamps pay this rate, beginning the day purchased. Make your money work for you.

THIS is just what you need, madam. Many women who were troubled with indigestion, a sallow, muddy skin, indicating biliousness and habitual constipation, have been permanently cured by the use of Chamberlain's Tablets. Before using these tablets they felt miserable and despondent. Now they are cheerful and happy and relish their meals. Try them. They only cost a quarter.

Many People Poisoned

Scores of people meet death each year by a slow process of poisoning that is going on within our bodies. This poisoning is caused by the liver and kidneys failing to perform their proper function. Poisonous matter accumulates within the body and health declines. The unsightly liver splotches, billiousness, headache and dizziness, bad taste in the mouth, coated tongue, a pain in the back or under the shoulder blade, a tired or achy feeling are some of the most common symptoms of this poisoning. If this poisoning it not expelled and the cause removed the resisting power is finally gone and life pays the penalty. Are you of the heedless class or are you safeguarding your health? If you want health you must keep the liver, kidneys and bowels active. Glando Tonic is what you need to restore this activity and expell the poisons. Keep on the safe side and use a reliable remedy. Glando Tonic is put up in a treatment form and guaranteed to do the work. Ask your druggist for a large $1 treatment. Take it as directed and you will be surprised to know how much poison was stored up within your body. When the liver is inactive a mucus or slime collects within the stomach and bowels which hinders digestion and the assimilation of food. This is called catarrh of the stomach or bowels. Glando Tonic cuts this slime and mucus and removes it. A nauceated feeling is sometimes experienced when this mucus is breaking loose but as soon as it is removed from the bowels, you will feel fine, the complexion clear, the appet te return and you will want to tell others of your wonderful cure.

Glando Tonic is sold by druggists or may be secured by sending direct to the Gland-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Indiana.

Catarrh Cannot Be Cured

with LOCAL APPLICATIONS, as they cannot reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure it you must take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, and acts directly upon the blood and mucous surface. Hall's Catarrh Cure is not a quack medicine. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing catarrh. Send for testimonials, free.

REVISED VERSIONS

There was a little man,
Who laid down his little gun,
With its bullets all made of lead, lead, lead.
And he got a little book,
And when in it he did look,
Why many happy things he said, said, said.

So he took it home
To his good wife, Joan,
And bade her to sing and smile, smile, smile,
For a Thrift Stamp new,
A War Savings Stamp, too,
He'd buy her every little while, while, while.

Humpty Dumpty sat on a wall,
Humpty Dumpty had a great fall;
Not all the king's horses nor all the king's men
Could set Humpty Dumpty up again.
(For Humpty, you see, saved never a cent;
The money he made he most carelessly spent.)

Now Humpty Dumpty sits on his wall
As proud as can be and with never a fall.
He doesn't need horses, he doesn't need men
To rescue and set him on wall-top again,
For Humpty, you see, learned his lesson with care;
War Savings Stamps cherish the change he can spare.

Hippety hop to the Government shop,
To buy a War Savings Stamp dandy;
One for you, and one for me,
And one for Brother Sandy!

THRIFT IS HABIT; GET IT.

"Thrift is a habit. A habit is a thing you do unconsciously or automatically without thought. We are ruled by our habits. When habits are young they are like lion cubs—soft, fluffy, funny, frolicsome little animals. They grow day by day. Eventually they rule you. Choose ye this day the habit ye would have rule over you. The habit of thrift is simply the habit which dictates that you shall earn more than you spend. In other words, thrift is the habit which provides that you spend less than you earn. Take your choice."—Elbert Hubbard.

Sherman Wolff Was The Lucky Fellow.

During the week of the centennial and style show in Fort Wayne, at the Velie automobile exhibit, a toy balloon was bought by Mr. J. Kemp exhibitor and salesman for the Poinsatte Auto company, of 1018 20 Maumee avenue, Fort Wayne. Ind. and was sent on its way with a catalogue of the Velie automobile attached to it, with this inscription: "If the finder of this balloon is interested in the Velie automobile, call at our office, the Poinsatte Auto company, 1018 Maumee avenue and Mr. Kemp will gladly give you a demonstration in the new type Velie automobile with the four bearing counter-balanced motor, operating on low grade fuel, or coal oil. If not interested in purchasing an automobile would be pleased to hear of its landing place" This note was dated October 8, 1919, leaving the exhibition grounds at 3:45 p. m. This balloon was found October 10, at St. Joe, Ind, 28 miles from Fort Wayne, by Mr Sherman Wolf on his farm, R. F. D. No. 2, landing in his potato patch, winding itself around a very healthy stock of potatoes. Mr. Wolf, thinking it a note of mystery, so digging up the stock of potatoes, he decided to return the balloon to its owner with eleven of the potatoes, which were weighed, the smallest one tipping the scale at 4 ounces, the largest ones weighed from five to seven ounces. All from the one stock.

Mr. Kemp was surprised on arriving at his office one morning to find Mr. Wolf waiting with the messenger balloon, and the potatoes as a present. Mr. Kemp proceeded immediately to purchase ten bushels of the fine potatoes. After having a good visit together, Mr. Kemp decided to take Mr. Wolf for a ride in the Velie automobile around the city. After learning of the wonderful performance of the Velie, Mr. Wolf expressed himself, saying, it was the most wonderful car he had ever ridden in and without a doubt would be a Velie owner in the near future.—Sunday Journal.

PUT LIBERTY BOND INTEREST IN U. S. SAVINGS SECURITIES

On November 15 Uncle Sam Will Pay Out $148,517,248; Keep Dollars Working.

The United States government will have one of its biggest pay days on November 15, when Liberty bond interest to the amount of $148,517,248 will be available for the wise investors who bought Liberty bonds to reinvest their interest in War Savings stamps and Treasury Savings certificates of $100 and $1,000 denominations, which virtually are "baby bonds."

The wise person will not join in the orgy of spending which now seems to be going on in all sections of the country. The wise spender is the wise saver. Keep your dollars growing. A dollar now in purchasing power is not worth more than 50 cents as compared with five years ago. That dollar, in due season, will go back to the one hundred cents. So if a dollar is invested now, it will be worth approximately twice as much when the War Savings stamps or the Treasury Savings certificates mature. It is wisdom for every one to keep their income increasing until money is worth more. You can do that by re-investing your Liberty bond interest on November 15 in War Savings stamps and Treasury Savings certificates, which pay 4 per cent interest compounded quarterly.

All you have to do is to take your Liberty bond coupons to any post office and almost any bank and exchange them for War Savings stamps, which are nondepreciable and nonfluctuating. In case you ever need the money, you always can cash them at any post office on ten days' notice. Each purchaser of War Savings stamps gains sure profit and insurance for the future. The government gains some money and assures and stabilizes its financial safety and prosperity by assuring the financial future of its citizens.

Uncle Sam has another pay day on December 15 when $148,533,376.65 will be available for re-investment.

Don't forget these dates. Go to a post office or bank and put your Liberty bond coupons in War Savings stamps.

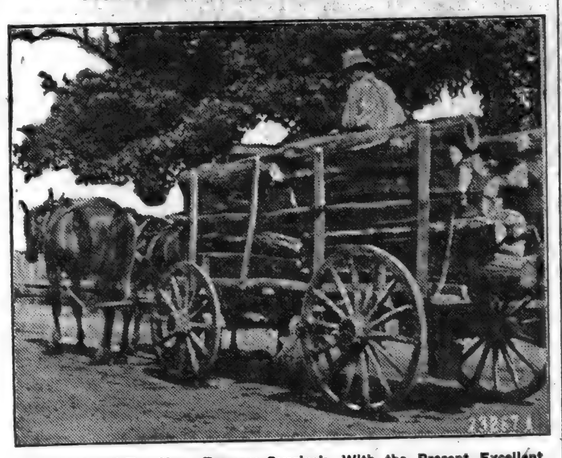
GOOD INCOME FROM FARM WOODLAND IS ASSURED TO FARMER BY PROPER CARE



A Farm "Crop" Too Many Farmers Overlook. With the Present Excellent Prices for Its Products the Farm Woodland Can Be Made a Valuable Asset.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A source of regular income lying at the door of many a farmer, but too often neglected, is the farm woodland. With increasing scarcity of lumber, and with excellent prices now being offered for forest products, proper care of the wooded area on the farm will amply repay the farmer.

To secure a fair price for this timber the owner should know how much material he has and for what purposes it is best adapted. The first thing for him to do, according to the forest service of the United States department of agriculture, is to find out how much timber of each kind the woodland contains, what products it will yield, and what is its general condition and quality.

If the wooded area is small, it will be best to measure each tree separately. The diameter should be measured at about 4½ feet above ground with calipers made for the purpose. Heights should be carefully estimated, or measured with some sort of height instrument to the first large limbs. Knowing the diameter and height, the amount of timber in board feet in each tree can be found by the use of volume tables. Such tables are included in Farmers' Bulletin 715, Measuring and Marketing Wood-lot Products, which will be sent free on application to the department of agriculture. The quantity of cordwood a tract will yield can hardly be estimated by an inexperienced person. Sales of such material will usually have to be made on the basis of actual cut.

Measuring on a Large Tract.

If the woodland is large it will, of course, seldom be possible to measure each tree separately. In such cases every tree may be measured on parallel strips 66 feet wide running through the tract. Every 660 feet in length of such strips comprises an acre. Averaging all the acres comprised in the strips and multiplying by the total acreage of the tract gives the total stand. The strips should include at least 10 per cent of the woodland. Proper allowance must also be made for defective timber. Dead trees, except those killed by fire or other outside agencies, are apt to be very defective and should be culled. When the tract is exceptionally large, it may pay to employ a professional "cruiser" to estimate the timber.

If the owner depends altogether upon local industries to buy his product, he is likely to find his market extremely limited. Some products, such as crossties and fuel wood, have to be sold locally; it would not pay to transport them far. But other products, among them tan bark, can be shipped 150 miles, and still others, like walnut timber for gunstocks, can be shipped almost any distance.

Railroads Large Purchasers.

Railroads are the largest purchasers of crossties. Any station agent will furnish information concerning specifications and prices. Electric railways in cities and towns also use ties, but unless the distance to town is short it will not pay to ship them. Electric interurban lines offer the same opportunity for disposing of ties as do the steam roads. Telegraph and telephone companies are always on the market for poles. Electric power and electric railway companies also use poles.

The market for piling is not very extensive, but railroads, large construction firms, and docking companies purchase considerable quantities. Piling timbers, which must be straight and long, bring good prices. Mines are large users of timber.

Sawmills, veneer mills, and fruit and vegetable package factories offer a market for the particular kinds and qualities of the woods they handle. These industries buy their material in log form, and all the farmer needs to do is cut and deliver his timber in the rough to the mill. Veneer logs must be of good quality and usually 16 inches and over in diameter. Selected stock brings a high price.

The forest service has prepared bulletins on the wood-using industries of a number of states which tell the uses to which various woods are put and the quantity used annually for each purpose.

The forest service has prepared bulletins on the wood-using industries of a number of states which tell the uses to which various woods are put and the quantity used annually for each purpose. A list of these bulletins and information as to how to procure them may be had upon application to the forest service, Washington, D. C.

Ways of Selling Products.

The way in which farm forest products are sold may have a good deal to do with the profit an owner gets from his tract. There are four ways of selling: (1) By scale measurement of rough products; (2) by the piece, for such products as ties and poles; (3) by the boundary, for a lump sum; and (4) by lumber scale of sawed products.

Selling by the log or piece is the simplest method. Ties, poles, piling, etc., are always sold by the piece. The important things to know are the different grades of each product and their relative value. Fire wood, pulp wood and excelsior wood are sold either by the cord or rick. This, too, is a comparatively simple method of marketing. To be sure of selling profitably by boundary for a lump sum, the owner must make a very careful estimate of the amount and value of his timber.

When to Cut Timber.

In the majority of cases the best time to cut timber is in the winter months. Winter-cut timber seasons slowly and evenly, and by the time the warm weather comes is air-dried. Products which must be peeled, however, such as ties, poles, and tan bark, should be cut in spring, when the bark peels most easily. Veneer logs can be cut in any season of the year, provided they are delivered without long delay after being cut, and the ends are painted to avoid rapid drying and checking of the wood. Pulp wood and tannin-extract wood may be cut and shipped at any season of the year.

New Stallion Farm Established at Buffalo, Wyo., to Produce High-Class Animals.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A new stallion farm, the only one of its kind in the country, was established by the United States department of agriculture in co-operation with the Wyoming Agricultural college, at Buffalo, Wyo., the 1st of July. It is to be known as the United States-Wyoming Horse Breeding station, where the work that has been done for the past 15 years by the department in co-operation with the Colorado Agricultural college will be continued. The object of the work at this station will be to produce high-class stallions suitable for the production of utility horses adapted to western range and farm conditions. Stallions at this station are available for use by mare owners in the community, and from time to time they will be sent for service to different parts of Wyoming and Colorado. Stallions developed for the range weigh from 1,200 to 1,400 pounds.

Most Varieties Are Able to Withstand Severe Conditions if Given Some Protection.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Currants and gooseberries are very hardy and withstand extremely low temperatures; in fact, if windbreaks are provided, most varieties are able to withstand the severe conditions in most parts of the upper Mississippi valley and the northern great plains area.

ROAD BUILDING IS BOOMING

States in All Sections Are Filing Their Projects and Receiving Proper Allotments.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Since early in 1919 there has been a steady increase each month in the federal-aid business in the bureau of public roads of the United States department of agriculture. States in all sections of the country are filing their projects and receiving allotments. The road-building era is in full swing, and it would seem that the end is not yet. All indications point to greater records in the months immediately to come.

Based on complete reports from 44 of the states cash expenditures on the rural roads and bridges of the United States for the calendar year 1918 amounted to $286,098,193. To this should be added the value of statute and convict labor, which cannot be fixed with any great degree of accuracy but probably amounted to not less than $14,000,000, thus making the grand total expenditures for the year $300,000,000. This total is made up of the actual expenditures for such items as labor, materials, supervision and administration directly connected with the construction, improvement, and upkeep of public roads and bridges outside the limits of incorporated towns and cities, and does not include any item for sinking fund payments or redemption and interest on road and bridge bonds.

The year 1918 offered an unprecedented condition in practically all lines of highway work. There was not only a tremendous increase and expansion in the amount of heavy truck traffic on public roads and an unprecedented shortage in regard to road materials, labor and ready funds, but also a decided increase in maintenance work, which was, however, partially offset by a decrease in the amount of new construction.

TRUCKS AND COUNTRY ROADS

Noticeable That Highways Have Been Improved Along All Motor-Vehicle Routes.

In and around all communities on motor truck routes it is noticeable that all roads have been improved to enable motor trucks to maintain consistant speed as well as to decrease depreciation. Thus the motor truck not only makes communities independent of any one particular line of transportation, but serves the interests of that community efficiently and economically. These improved roads increase realty values along the routes, creating a higher standard of public improvement and fanning into life a community pride that is reflected in the prosperity of that community.

BIG PROBLEM IN ROAD WORK

Not to Show Need of Improved Highways or to Raise Money, but to Spend Funds Properly.

The value of roads to a rural district is becoming more and more apparent The modern problem in road work is not to show the need of good roads or to raise money. The greater problem before the whole country is to organize so the funds in sight can be properly spent. No longer will the rural highways be allowed to remain neglected. But it must be remembered that with over 2,000,000 miles of roads in the United States that it is not a problem to be solved in a month or a year or in several years.

Road Building Rocks.

In building roads the rocks selected should possess three qualities: Hardness to resist wear; toughness to resist fracture; and binding power to cement rock fragments.

Good Roads Will Be Better.

Good roads will be better when they no longer cross railroad tracks at grade.

Mean Extended Prosperity.

Good roads mean extended prosperity to America.

COAT SEASON IS BIG PARIS CARD

Sometimes it is the separate dress and coat and sometimes it is the suit that holds the sway of style during a season. In Paris, without a doubt, declares a fashion writer, it is the coat this season.

Such attention as has been shown to morning and afternoon dresses in Paris would be hard to equal, and instead of their having declined in popularity after several seasons of attention, quite the contrary has happened. They are more in the limelight than ever.

In spite of the fact that there is so little conspicuous change in the line of the gowns, it is upon these "little dresses" that some of the most artistic touches have been lavished. The inconspicuous, unassuming gown for morning or for afternoon can have about it much genuine feeling. At each of the couturiers the same story is true; each one has outdone himself in presenting new reasons for the continued life of this popular garment.

Materials have for their leader one that has the sanction of ages behind it—blue serge. Then there are all of the soft surfaced fabrics—duvetyn, rusella, burella, and the allied fabrics. For afternoon there are charmeuse, of which there are a great many models to be seen, taffeta, and velvet which has lost none of its vogue. There was nothing smarter then than a black velvet gown and there is nothing smarter now.

The trimmings and touches on these dresses for daylight wear are fascinating in their variety. It is not so much the thing that is done as the way it is done. When one sees the clever little bits of hand-made braid and the inserts of bead work, the facings and the edgings, one wonders how there can grow so many new ideas in the course of a single season. But there they are, to be copied interminably by less ingenious Americans.

Not so much hand work is to be seen about these dresses as was the case in former seasons. The little girls who used to do this work have learned by their connection with the war-time munition factories that a female is entitled to more of daily sustenance than it was possible for her to attain by doing embroidery. So the new frocks show the strain. But the Parisian designer gives us something quite as lovely even though it has but one-fourth its former embroidery for adornment, yes, even though there be no hand work at all and the decoration is found to be a product of the good old American machine. Rows of braid and bits of bright ribbon do their part in producing an attractive effect.

Gown of Black Taffeta and Velvet Forms Charming Combination.

Leather Frocks and Trimmings.

A trimming that has taken first rank is leather. It is handled in unheard of ways and the result is charming. Sometimes it is a narrow strip of belt colored in a happy contrast to a gown. Again it is used as satin would be for outside facing on cuffs and skirt pockets. Sometimes it is pieced into an all-over pattern and sometimes it is gotten up into whole suits. An extravagant suit was made of pink leather and trimmed with a high collar of fuzzy black fur. Then there was an attractive gown of white leather in the cut pattern. This was trimmed with rows of black nail heads and some strips of black patent leather. It, too, was bizarre but attractive, perhaps a thing more for Paris than for an American city.

While the sleeves on most of these dresses for day wear are short—often extremely short—they are time and again trimmed or finished with flowing cuffs which give an interesting line to the silhouette. The cuffs are set onto three-quarters or half-length sleeves, and sometimes they even finish, in a thoroughly well done manner, the ends of sleeves that are of the shortest.

Fur is used sparingly on frocks of any sort. When it is seen there are apt to be narrow strips of it used as though they might be strips of embroidery. For this purpose moleskin is popular, while kolinsky and seal come in for their usual attention.

Blue Chiffon, Blue Leather.

By way of using two materials showing as great a contrast as it was possible to obtain one designer showed a frock made of dark blue chiffon with dark blue leather (or kid) trimmings You will wonder, if you have not seen it, how this could possibly be and what would be the effect produced. Well, it was as pretty as anything that could be imagined. The leather was used as a wide edging for the full peplum and it was worked into the bodice as well as making cuffs on the ends of the flowing sleeves. Not a little of the charm of this gown lay in the fact that the whole was built over a lavender foundation.

An Attractive Tailored Suit of Velours de Laine and Kolinsky.

Some of the neck lines on the new fall gowns are interesting because they are quite different from anything we have seen for some time. I mean those which are cut in a V and which are finished with frilled or shaped collars standing up quite high at the back of the neck, graduating in width as they reach the front, and gradually tapering off into nothing in a point somewhat below the bust. These are sometimes made of silk or satin to match the material of the gown in color and sometimes they are composed largely of lace or organdie in a plaited frill.

There are many varieties of blue serge. One has a plaited waistcoat made of crisp white organdie and a high collar tied with a pert black bow under the chin. This frock, for a very young person, has a little flat apron effect at front and at back and the panels are edged all around, with the serge done into a knife plaiting about two and a half inches in width. The panels, it may be added, are extensions of the waist and the skirt is a tight and short thing by itself.

Black Velvet Gowns.

A black velvet gown which attracted attention was made with a round neck and cut practically in one straight piece. For trimming there ran up the back in a straight line at either side, from hem to neck, rows of little white crocheted roses. They were continued round the neckline. By this method all of the trimming was confined to the back, the only hint in front being the inconspicuous neck edging.

A black velvet gown was made with two puffs over the hips. They were not overly sumptuous in appearance, just large enough to show that paniers were in fashion. From these the gathered skirt dropped straight to the hem, and the bodice was slightly fitted.

Many of the afternoon dresses show a strong Louix XIV influence. There are upstanding collars and frills, and even high necks with plaitings that stand out underneath the chin. The frills often form themselves into a fichu line.

Curling Feather Boa.

A boa may be curled by simply taking a sharp instrument, such as a knife, scissors or a hatpin. Curl the same way as one does when making a paper rose. Use light, quick strokes.

Help That Bad Back!

Why be miserable with a "bad back?" It's time you found out what is wrong! Kidney weakness often causes much suffering from backache, lameness, rheumatic pains, headaches, dizziness and kidney irregularities. Neglected, it may lead to dropsy, gravel or Bright's disease, but if taken in time it is usually easily corrected by using Doan's Kidney Pills. Doan's have helped thousands.

INDIANA WOMAN TELLS OF EXPERIENCE

Laporte, Ind.—"Eighteen years ago I first became acquainted with Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It was during expectancy and I was very frail and delicate. But the 'Favorite Prescription' strengthened me and I had a comparatively easy time. My baby was a strong, healthy girl, and has always been fine and healthy. For the expectant mother I think there is nothing to equal 'Favorite Prescription.'

"The 'Pleasant Pellets' I keep in my medicine closet for immediate use and feel that I couldn't keep house without them."—Mrs. Minnie McGregor, 612 Clement St.

COULD NOT SLEEP

Lafayette, Ind.—"A short time ago I was in a terribly nervous condition so that I could not sleep at night. I would have simply dreadful nightmares. My druggist recommended Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription to me and it helped me wonderfully. The first half bottle cured me of my nervousness and made me able to sleep at night just as quiet as a child. It also relieved me of periodical suffering which used to bother me a great deal. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a grand tonic for women and I do not hesitate to recommend it."—Mrs. Charles Coleman, 631 Ferry St.

Frankfort, Ind.—"When living in Kirksville, Ohio, I took Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. I was always complaining. Nervousness troubled me, caused, I think, by woman's weakness. This medicine was recommended to me and I thought I would try it. I found results good; it certainly helped me. I will recommend it to anybody."—Mrs. Carrie Headlee, 451 E. Barner St.

Women who are worn out, who are nervous or dizzy at times, should take that reliable temperance, herbal tonic, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, in liquid or in tablets. Send Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., 10 cents for trial package.

Shorthorns in America 133 Years

The first purebred Shorthorn cattle were brought to the United States in 1783, a small shipment being imported from England to Virginia that year. The Shorthorn has had more to do with the improvement of cattle in this country than any other breed—probably than all other breds. It is the combined beef and milking quality of the Shorthorn that has made the profits on the farms, plantations and ranches. It pays to use Shorthorn bulls. INDIANA State News

Lawrenceburg.—All county bridges in Dearborn county are to be painted white, to protect the traveling public after darkness has fallen.

Vincennes.—One thousand farmers attended the first county convention of the Knox County Farmers' association here, and voted to affiliate with the State federation.

South Bend.—By seed selection before planting, Charles Swain, a farmer, reported to the county agent, he had obtained as many potatoes from 17 rows as he did from 34 rows of unselected seed.

Lafayette.—Twenty-eight out of thirty-two stock-selling schemes were branded as worthless by the Sheldon county "blue sky" committee, which is composed of officers of the County Farmers' association and Shelbyville chamber of commerce.

Lafayette.—There were 57,100 rats killed in 28 counties in Indiana May 27, 1919, according to figures compiled by Walter Q. Fitch of Purdue university. No records of rats killed in other counties have been obtained, but it is estimated by Mr. Fitch that 150,000 rats were put to death. The campaign was arranged by Mr. Fitch at the request of the Indiana food production committee.

Indianapolis.—Any person who sells bay rum with the knowledge that it is to be used as a beverage, is guilty of violating the prohibition law, according to a ruling of Judge S. Robbins, in the court here. Judge Robbins made the ruling in the case of two local druggists, who had been charged with operating a "blind tiger." The evidence showed that a half pint of bay rum had been sold as a beverage.

Evansville.—Schools of Vanderburg county, outside of Union township, will become $10,455.47 richer when back money from the seminary school lands in Union township has been paid. This was learned when a report of the state board of accounts was received by the Vanderburg county auditor. The report was made out by A. L. Donaldson, field engineer, who recently made an extensive survey of affairs in Vanderburg county.

Cincinnati.—Fifteen farmer delegates representing Indiana, Kentucky and Ohio sat in the zone meeting of the Mississippi Valley association here, and joined unanimously in adoption of resolutions pledging the convention's support to the enforcement of laws and the constitution, and bluntly condemning radical trade unionism, bolshevik propaganda, and all movements resulting in existing strikes and general industrial unrest.

Princeton.—Washington township, Gibson county, resembles scenes in the old days of the Indiana gas field, with its flambeaux at night in farm yards and at pumping stations. A. E. Morrison, president of the Farmers' association of Gibson county, estimated that 2,500,000 cubic feet of gas daily is available for piping to Princeton, with the nearest well three and one-half miles distant. This city is at present using manufactured gas.

Indianapolis.—Resolutions setting forth the necessity of adopting definite federal and state policies for reforestation to the end that the timber supply may be conserved for future generations; for the acquisition by the states of forest lands and for more equitable taxation of forest land; the importance of informing the public and state and federal legislators of existing conditions, and suggesting a method of co-operation between Indiana, Illinois and Ohio in an educational campaign, were adopted at the session of the tri-state forestry conference held under the auspices of the department of conservation of the state of Indiana.

Indianapolis.—That the farmers of Indiana and of the United States propose to exert their influence for an increase in production through a longer working day for labor was the prediction of William Bosson, a member of the executive committee of the Indiana Federation of Farmers' associations. Mr. Bosson expressed the opinion that the national convention of farmers' associations, which meets at Chicago November 12, 13 and 14, would adopt resolutions condemning the Adamson eight-hour law and recommending a longer working day and unstinted production. He added that similar resolutions probably would be adopted by the state convention of the Indiana Federation of Farmers' associations, which meets in Indianapolis November 18. The farmers of Indiana, Illinois, Missouri and Michigan, at a meeting held recently in this city, went on record in favor of a ten-hour day, and condemned the use of the strike as an industrial weapon.

Warsaw.—The anniversary of the signing of the world war armistice, November 11, will be celebrated in Warsaw by a soldiers' homecoming.

North Vernon.—North Vernon is shown to be a winner of the special election held July 22, 1919, to decide whether the Jennings county seat should be moved from Vernon, according to a commission which made an official recount of the ballots cast. Results of the recount have been announced as follows: For the removal, 2,188; opposed to the removal, 1,851; illegal ballots, 182; total of legal ballots, 3,489.

Logansport.—Many Cass county farmers say much of the wheat sown early is affected by the Hessian fly. All wheat sown after October 1 apparently is free of the pest.

East Chicago.—State militia companies from Goshen, Fort Wayne and Bloomington, which have been on steel strike guard duty in the Calumet region, were ordered by Harry B. Smith, adjutant general of Indiana, commanding, to entrain for their homes.

Anderson.—An investigation of recent attacks on men wishing to resume work at the American Sheet and Tin Plate company's plant at Elwood, which was affected by the nation-wide strike in the steel industry, will be ordered soon, according to Samuel E. Johnson, prosecuting attorney for Madison county.

Indianapolis.—Gov. James P. Goodrich, in a formal statement, gave his support to the appeals of the Indiana Tuberculosis association to the people of the state in its campaign for $270,000 with which to fight tuberculosis, indorsing particularly the association plan to establish a tuberculosis nurse in every county of the state.

Indianapolis.—The number of foreigners leaving Indiana to return to their old homes has increased about 200 per cent in the last month, according to H. M. Tebay, deputy revenue collector in charge of the income tax division. It is thought that the labor troubles in Lake county are chiefly responsible for the movement.

Gary.—Out of the strike of steel workers has come the Labor party of Lake county. It is proposed to put complete tickets in the field and to contest elections with Republicans, Democrats and Prohibitionists. The Socialists also will have a ticket, but it is to be a mere blind, just as the name Labor party is to be a blind.

Clinton.—The Clinton agent for the Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad company says that in one day the past week there were 497 cars of coal loaded in the Clinton mining field along the Chicago & Eastern Illinois line. This is the greatest number ever mined in one day in mines served in this field by the road. The Chicago, Terre Haute & Southeastern road serves several mines in this field and all of these, it is said, have been hauling coal out at an unusual rate.

Warsaw.—W. R. Zechiel, county agent, has issued a warning to the hundreds of bee raisers of Kosciusko county that their swarms face starvation this winter because of the small stock of honey which is in most of the hives. Investigation shows the bees this year failed to make sufficient honey to carry them through the winter. This condition is extremely serious because of the shortage of granulated sugar, which is practically the only food for bees.

Indianapolis.—The state board of tax commissioners is ready to review any individual or corporation assessment in the state and to make reassessments either on appeal or on its own initiative in any cases that come to the board's attention. The action will be taken under the new power given to the board by which, at its fourth session, ending December 6, it has authority to make any change necessary to effect a proper assessment or to correct an erroneous one.

Hammond.—The strike of 3,000 men at the plant of the Standard Steel Car company in Hammond, which cost the lives of five strikers, resulted in injury to 70 other persons and entailed millions of dollars' loss in wages and non-production since it started on July 18, was ended the past week when the guards were withdrawn and 1,500 workers filed back to their jobs. The electrical workers, blacksmiths and machinists, who walked out in sympathy with the car workers, also returned.

Indianapolis.—Governor Goodrich, after a conference with Lewis Bowman, deputy auditor of state, and John Williams, audit clerk in the auditor's office, arranged for the state purchasing committee to use $10,000 of his emergency contingent fund as a revolving fund. The committee wishes to have a certain amount of ready cash with which to take up "bargains" it has opportunity from time to time to seize, and also to take advantage of cash discounts. The revolving fund will be reimbursed at the end of each month when the boards of trustees of the state institutions meet.

Indianapolis.—A proposed bill to legalize the adoption of commission or commission-manager form of government for Indiana cities is being distributed by the Indiana Commercial Secretaries' association, and at the recent meeting of the City Managers' association Gov. James P. Goodrich said he was in favor of such a bill. A measure of this kind failed to get through the last Indiana legislature and it has since been redrawn and perfected. Governor Goodrich explained to the members of the association the merits of the proposal for the amendment of the Indiana constitution so as to permit a modern budget system for state expenditures.

Lawrenceburg.—Merrit W. Sullivan, a farmer living in Miller township, has sold more than 10,000 pounds of new tobacco to a local tobacco broker, for 41 cents a pound for the entire crop. The crop is one of the best in southeastern Indiana.

Greensburg.—The Hessian fly has made its appearance in early-sown wheat in this county, according to reports reaching the county agent, and heavy damage has resulted. He is of the opinion that late-planted wheat will not be affected. He urges farmers to replant the infected fields to rye in order to get a return on the land.

Save the Babies

INFANT MORTALITY is something frightful. We can hardly realize that of all the children born in civilized countries, twenty-two per cent., or nearly one-quarter, die before they reach one year; thirty-seven per cent., or more than one-third, before they are five, and one-half before they are fifteen!

We do not hesitate to say that a timely use of Castoria would save many of these precious lives. Neither do we hesitate to say that many of these infantile deaths are occasioned by the use of narcotic preparations. Drops, tinctures and soothing syrups sold for children's complaints contain more or less opium or morphine. They are, in considerable quantities, deadly poisons. In any quantity, they stupefy, retard circulation and lead to congestions, sickness, death. There can be no danger in the use of Castoria if it bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher as it contains no opiates or narcotics of any kind.

Genuine Castoria always bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher.

A Matter of Address.

Considerably out of patience, he was endeavoring to play golf at the Muncie Country club and in his first attempt at a drive sliced the ball miserably. The words he used, although spoken in an undertone, were sufficient to make the caddy look up appreciatively, accustomed as the boy was to the use of eloquence by players under such circumstances.

A short distance away was the player's wife who inquired ever so gently: "Did you say anything to me, Fred?"

"No, I was just addressing the ball," he replied.

"I am afraid if the ball goes to that address it will melt," she remarked, still gently.

IT'S NOT YOUR HEART; IT'S YOUR KIDNEYS

Kidney disease is no respecter of persons. A majority of the ills afflicting people today can be traced back to the kidney trouble.

The kidneys are the most important organs of the body. They are the filterers of your blood. If the poisons which are swept from the tissues by the blood are not eliminated through the kidneys, disease of one form or another will claim you as a victim.

Kidney disease is usually indicated by weariness, sleeplessness, nervousness, despondency, backache, stomach trouble, pain in loins and lower abdomen, gall stones, gravel, rheumatism, sciatica and lumbago.

All these derangements are nature's signals that the kidneys need help. You should use GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules immediately. The soothing, healing oil stimulates the kidneys, relieves inflammation and destroys the germs which have caused it. Go to your druggist today and get a box of GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules. In twenty-four hours you should feel health and vigor returning.

After you feel somewhat improved continue to take one or two capsules each day, so as to keep the first-class condition and ward off the danger of other attacks.

Ask for the original imported GOLD MEDAL brand. Three sizes. Money refunded if they do not help you.

ARMISTICE DAY DRIVE ON H. C. L. START TO SAVE

W. S. S. Organization Urges Celebration of Nov. 11 by Dealing Blow to Extravagance.

"Armistice Day" is November 11.

Just one year ago the American people celebrated the end of the world war. This year they have a chance to celebrate again. The War Savings organization of the Seventh District has formulated plans to start a campaign on the anniversary of the cessation of hostilities by urging the people to enlist in a new war on the high cost of living—to start to save on that day, if you have not already done so, and to set forth on November 11 with a determination to buy only what is necessary, to help stop extravagance, curtail waste and invest, at least in part, the money thus saved in government securities.

The "Armistice Day" plans of the War Savings organization include:

"Armistice Day" sermons in every pulpit in the five states of the Seventh District, urging judicious spending, regular saving and investment in government securities.

"Armistice Day" proclamations by the governors of the five states and the mayors of the principal cities of the Seventh District.

Resolutions to be passed by labor organizations and fraternal orders.

"Armistice Day" exercises in all the schools. Every child to be asked to buy at least one Thrift Stamp.

"Armistice Day" pamphlets, showing why every one should join in helping bring down high cost of living by enlisting in the government's campaign on November 11, will be put in the hands of every family in the district. The War Savings organization points out that there could be no better occasion than the anniversary of the end of the war for the people to reflect their joy and thanks by enlisting in the new war—this time on the high cost of living.

William Mather Lewis, director of the Savings Division of the Treasury Department, recently made the following comment on the fight against high prices:

"Waste is the American weakness and waste is a contributing cause to the present high prices. The average American citizen must get in the habit of taking a personal inventory; of studying the leaks in his own financial system; of policing his own pocketbook before the high cost situation will be materially bettered.

"The profiteer's slogan is 'Easy money.' The profiteer fattens today because easy money is universal in America, because extravagance is habitual, because men are content to deal in glittering generalities about the situation and stubbornly unwilling to face the matter personally."

Armistice Day gives everyone the opportunity to "face the situation personally" by enlisting in the savings campaign of the government. Among the slogans suggested for this campaign are:

Work, Save, Succeed (W. S. S.)
Buy only what you need.
Put Liberty Bond interest in W. S. S.
Start Saving Armistice Day.
Police your own pocketbook; save.

November 15 is one of the biggest of the Liberty Bond interest paydays. Then Uncle Sam will pay out to the investors in that class of government security a total of more than $148,000,000 in interest. On that date you have a chance to "TURN YOUR INTEREST INTO PRINCIPAL" by reinvesting it in War Savings Stamps or the new Treasury Savings Certificates of $100 and $1,000 denominations.

On Armistice Day complete the ranks of the national army mobilized to fight the high cost of living to a finish.

Tuberculosis In Cattle.

The eradication of tuberculosis in cattle will practically solve the problem of controlling this disease among hogs, it was stated today by Dr. L. E. Northrup, state veterinarian, who is directing a campaign among Indiana live stock feeders and breeders for the control of this infection.

Dr. Northrup said that a simple system of records is the only requisite to the farmer's ability to trace infection brought to his farm by a hog. In this manner, he says the source of the disease may be established and quarentine established to prevent its further spread. Hogs become infected with tuberculosis principally from cattle which follow feeding in lots or pastures where diseased animals have fed, or by being permitted to eat of the carcasses of diseased animals that have been slaughtered.

Dr. Northrup stated further, that live stock men may be of great assistance to the campaign as well as to their own interests, by keeping newly purchased animals isolated for a time long enough to establish positively their freedom infection, and by maintaining sanitary surroundings for all live stock. It is believed by Dr. Northrup and the Indiana Live Stock Sanitary Board, that once live stock owners realise these facts they will be free to co-operate to make them effective.

Fall Suits On Tailored Lines

The 1919 autumn suit is strictly tailored. Its lines have none of the softness of recent seasons and often the edges of the coat are bound in braid, which makes it even more severe, notes a prominent fashion writer.

It seems certain that the strictly tailored effect with the three-quarter length coat and a skirt with circular fullness will remain with us during the season.

Reminiscent of the time of Louis XV and Louis XVI with the "nipped-in" shoulder and semifitted waistline are many of these jackets with coat skirts that are full and flaring and equipped with big pockets at the sides, and though the skirts have more fullness than the models of the past season they are still straight of line.

The lines of the coat as well as the one-piece dresses have the effect of the redingote. The fullness, a little below the hips, is set in by cartridge plaits, as well as by cleverly placed stitched tucks, which gives the slim silhouette.

Distinctive Models.

A smart coat and skirt costume is fashioned on the lines of those which no doubt will be seen on the modish woman this fall and winter.

This suit is made of soft, green duvetyn. The closing of the front is effected by one single button at the waistline. The collar is high and fastens with two buttons. There is a single wide revers faced with velvet. The full flaring coat skirts slant away from the front. The skirt is also made with a seam which begins at the left side of the waistline and slants toward the right. A hat of green velvet in same tint as the coat revers completes the costume.

Another suit is made of black velveteen, the coat semifitted and fastened straight down the front from chin to a little below the waistline with a row of small, round, material buttons and loops. The sleeves are also button trimmed. At the hips three flounces have been inset, which gave the modish flare. This unusually smart costume is topped by a small black draped toque.

Still another is an exceedingly attractive frock of velvety finished brown duvetyn. It has the new high collar buttoned close up around the neck and chin and the new flaring sleeves button trimmed to the elbow. The bodice is made basque effect. The skirt is rather wide and has large pocket draperies at the sides. The costume is accompanied by a chic dark brown velvet hat trimmed at the edge with an antique gold cord.

The Dressy Blouse.

After the momentous question of the fall suit has been settled the average woman immediately turns her attention to the blouse to accompany it. In former years the white lingerie waist was considered good form and quite elaborate enough for ordinary wear and most occasions. But conditions have changed. Such charming blouses have been developed these latter years that the simple shirtwaist—forerunner of them all—now seems to be relegated to the row of discarded garments. Perhaps the laundry problem has had something to do with this. While many business women prefer the tailored shirtwaist it is now apt to be of a soft pliant crepe or satin or silk requiring no starch and the simplest laundry attention.

Well-dressed women everywhere recognize the value of the blouse in the exact shade of the coat suit, making thus a perfect costume as a rule suitable for almost every occasion.

Smart Georgette Models.

This fall there are the smartest of little blouses of georgette crepe or crepe de chine in all the fashionable colors. Often a blouse, say of navy blue or brown georgette crepe, will have a relieving note of beige or some light harmonizing tone and frequently they are made over a lining of the lighter tone material.

One blouse, admirably adapted as an accompaniment of a smart fall suit, was of navy blue georgette over beige. The beige formed a round yoke and short undersleeves. Tiny colored buttons trimmed the beige yoke and undersleeves, and the edges of both the overblouse and underblouse were piped in dark blue.

Another equally charming blouse was made of brown georgette over bisque lining. This blouse was also fashioned with a yoke and undersleeves of the lining material. The bodice was trimmed with green buttons and tiny frills of the bisque crepe.

To be sure, there are more elaborate models, many of which are of chiffon or georgette crepe and are elaborately embroidered in beads or silk, dull gold or silver thread. But blouses of this class deserve a story all their own. Models in the dressy blouse class as well as those intended for more practical wear, are made with a peplum or in the form of a basque—the latter doing away with the necessity of a belt.

New and Vivid Colorings.

The smart woman of limited income will pay little heed to the new and rather vivid colorings. She will quite wisely choose one of the lovely browns or blues or greens which are offered, leaving the new Liberty reds for her more fortunate sisters with a larger wardrobe. For the materials, she will choose duvetyn—that is, if she can afford it—but, if she finds this too expensive, then she will favor fine velours or a soft velveteen, a Poiret twill or a heavy English serge.

The phrase "unbelted, yet belted," may be used in describing a suit with a coat which is straight and long to the knees. It has a flat back and front, while circular rippling fullness is held under narrow belts at the waistline at either side. A narrow rolled collar runs almost to the waistline where the two front sections of the coat meet and fasten with link buttons of black bone. There are pockets outlined with bands of the material, but no trimming is used. The skirt, which is ever so slightly circular, falls in ripples to a becoming length.

Especially created for the woman who favors loose lines in spite of the new semifitted effects is a lovely design that would be charming in duvetyn or velvet, materials to which it is very well adapted. Most distinctive are the lines of the coat. Though back and front are flat, there are loose flowing sides that tuck in under at the bottom. The narrow belts of the material confine the waist in front, while a straight band of the material forms the collar, crushing softly around the neck. Long fitted sleeves are finished with unusual cuffs, loops of the material. The skirt is very simple with easy fullness.

Box Style for Coats.

New jackets on fall suits are in box coat style with a single row of buttons and buttonholes down the front. Bands of the material are stitched at even distance apart around the edge of the jacket and sleeve and sometimes these bands reach as high as the bust line on the jacket and the elbow line on the sleeve. Many of the new coats have narrow Eton collars, the fronts of the coat buttoning high to meet the collar.

When knitting socks, if you knit a thread of silk or coarse crochet cotton in with the wool at the heel and toe they will wear longer.

COMMUNITY ORGANIZATION PLACES SMALL BREEDER ON SAME BASIS HELD BY LARGER

The Kind of Dairy Cows That a Small Farmer Can Be Proud Of.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Time was—and not so long ago—when the small farmer could not afford to breed purebred animals.

The time has come—just now, perhaps—when the small farmer can hardly afford not to breed purebred animals, and at least he should use purebred sires.

That is particularly true if his line of live stock is cows and, more particularly, if they are dairy cows, according to men in the United States department of agriculture who have given their lives to the study of dairy farming.

What has brought about the change? Principally, community organization. The small farmer who has to operate alone and unaided—as practically all of them did ten years ago—has a rocky road if he aspires to pure-bred stock. Now the whole situation is changed, or is rapidly changing. The small farmer does not stand alone, and he has all kinds of aids. There, to start with, is the county agent, ready to bring the accumulation of expert knowledge to bear on the problems of the small farmer. There is the county farm bureau, perhaps. There is the cow-testing association. There is the co-operative bull association. There are enough things, if they are used, to pull the community together and make it possible for the smaller scale breeder to enjoy many of the advantages formerly obtained only by the largest scale breeder.

A Land of Pure-Breds.

"Why not," inquire the dairy experts of the department of agriculture, "make the United States a pure-bred country, put it in the mind of the world as a pure-bred country?" People do not think of it that way now. Try it out with yourself. You think of the Island of Jersey, say, as simply a breeding ground for pure Jersey cows, of Scotland as the top notch in Aberdeen-Angus cattle, of Clydesdale horses, even of Collie dogs. Your picture of England is likely to be one of pure-bred Herefords or Shorthorns. And you have a sort of feeling of reverence toward them.

Do you think of America, from a live-stock standpoint, in that way? Of course not. You think of it as a meat-producing country, a range country, a grade-cattle country.

Both estimates are, in a manner, correct. But, to the individual farmer on the Island of Jersey or in the white-face country of England or the black-cattle country of Scotland, the matter of having his animals pure bred is a matter of doing what everybody else is doing. It is easier—or, to say the least, just as easy—to do it as not to do it.

Until just now that condition never existed in the United States; it does exist now. Communities have organized and are organizing still more closely. Breeding associations are being formed with secretaries who can give help in keeping the records of all animals straight one of the things with which the small farmer operating alone has greatest difficulty. When a community organizes and starts raising pure-bred stock of any kind it brings a market for that kind of stock to the door of every farmer in the community. The man who operating alone, could not have sold a pure-bred animal for a dollar more than he could have got for a good grade animal can get the worth of every animal he raises under the community system.

Opportunity Is Here.

America has the opportunity just now to develop as a great breeding institution. South America wants pure-bred "stuff." As an indication of how active the want is, Argentina recently appropriated $100,000 to encourage the importation of pure-breds. If the United States gets any considerable portion of the business in South America, department experts say, it must be because American animals compete successfully on final test with animals from anywhere else in the world. They see no trouble in doing that with dairy cattle where production is the test. The thing to be done is to give the South Americans what they want in dairy cattle.

There is likely, also, to be a pretty big market in France for American pure-bred dairy cows. The problem of supplying the demand is somewhat different from the South American problem. France wants a general-purpose cow, while the United States is the home of the specialized cow. The thing that is to be done in that case is to give France the specialized dairy cow that most nearly meets the requirements, with the hope that when her production records show up they will be so good that other Frenchmen will want other cows like her.

Big Pure-Bred Market at Home.

But after all, the big market for pure-bred animals is at home. The same facts that apply to foreign markets ought to apply to beginners in this country. Take the man who has been operating a dairy farm with grade cows. Let him have a pure-bred that not only looks better than any cow he ever owned before but also produces better, and he is pretty certain to start substituting pure-breds for his grades. If he gets a poor producer, of course, he is likely to make up his mind that "the pure-bred business is mostly bunk." Community organization tends to see to it that the beginner gets a good producer, which, in turn, tends to make him a steady customer for pure-bred cows until he has placed his herd on a pure-bred basis.

Now that he can afford to do it, the small farmer should give himself the pleasure—and the actual benefit—of having dairy animals that he can be enthusiastic over.

"You never saw a man," says one of the government's dairy experts, "just boiling over with enthusiasm about grade cows. The grade-cow man may think about getting up early in the morning to work with his cows, but the pure-bred man is perfectly willing to stay up all night with them." In all of this discussion the good pure-bred is understood, and not a scrub pure-bred, for there are some of that kind.

TYPES OF BABY-BEEF COWS

Three Very Important Factors Should Be Kept in Mind in Making Proper Selection.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

In selecting cows from which baby beef is to be produced, three very important factors should be kept in mind:

1. The cows should have at least a fair amount of beef blood. Purebreds are not necessary, but two or three crosses of such breeding is essential. Cows with a preponderance of dairy blood will not do for the production of baby beef.

2. Cows best suited for this type of breeding usually weigh 900 pounds or over in thrifty breeding condition. So long as early maturity is not sacrificed, the heavier cows are the most suitable for baby-beef production. Size of frame rather than weight should govern in selecting cows which are to be used for this purpose.

3. The cows used to produce baby beeves should produce enough milk to keep the calves fat and growing without much additional feed up to weaning time.

In addition to these three factors, such things as constitution, uniformity of breeding, color, size, and early maturity should be considered.

SMALL FRUITS IN ORCHARDS

Currants and Gooseberries May Well Be Planted Among Trees and Left There Permanently.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

In gardens where the available land is limited in extent, currants and gooseberries may well be planted among the tree fruits and left there permanently. The shade of the trees protects the fruits from sun scald, and the foliage is usually healthier in such localities than when grown where it is freely exposed to the sun.

LIVE STOCK NOTES

The breeding sows should be selected carefully.

A steady, even-tempered feeder makes tame cattle.

A good sow is an asset to the farm; a poor sow is likely to be a liability.

Grass is nature's feed for cattle and horses with a moderate ration of grain.

A water heater will cost much less than the loss of flesh occasioned by cattle drinking ice water.

ROAD BUILDING

MOTOR TRUCKS ON HIGHWAYS

Series of Impacts Being Conducted at Arlington to Determine Impact on Roads.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

To determine the destructive effect of heavily loaded auto trucks on highways and streets, and to meet the demand for data on the design of road surfaces and foundations to withstand such heavy traffic, a series of experiments is being conducted by the bureau of public roads at the Arlington experiment farm to determine the impact of auto trucks on roads.

The most striking single development in the highway field in 1918 was the tremendous increase in motor-truck traffic. Five years ago heavy motor trucks were few in number and limited practically entirely to the paved streets of larger cities. These vehicles now comprise probably 4 to 5 per cent of the grand total of all motor vehicles and are to be found wherever traffic conditions permit profitable use. But very few roads were designed to carry any large volume of this class of traffic. Consequently, the cost of adequate maintenance was increased greatly during the year. In many places the damage due to the incessant pounding of these fast and heavy vehicles was so great as to require complete reconstruction.

ADVICE ON BUILDING ROADS

Much Investigational and Experimental Work Done by the Department of Agriculture.

Much investigational and experimental work on road building has been in progress for a number of years and road engineers are able as a result of this work to give valuable advice as to the most economical method of building and maintaining roads for the varying conditions existing in different localities. Much of this investigational work has been done by the highways division of the United States department of agriculture and some by the various state highways commissions. No road building operations ought to be undertaken without the aid and expert advice which these agencies are willing and able to give. Taxpayers should insist upon this.

COMPACT SURFACE OF ROADS

Excess Water Successfully Removed By Use of Piece of Pipe, Operated by Two Men.

A simple method for compacting the surface of concrete roads and removing excess water has been evolved by an engineer, B. F. Batchelder, of Ravenna, Ohio.

After striking off the surface with a template, according to Mr. Batchelder's plan, a piece of ordinary gaspipe, operated by two men, is used as a roller. After the excess water has come to the surface, another trip up and back with the roller removes all the water and leaves the surface in good condition for further finishing if necessary. A wave of mortar is carried ahead of the roller the "first time over," which fills in porous places or depressions. The second rolling removes nothing but water that is virtually clear.

This method is especially useful when using crushed stone or slag.—Popular Science Monthly.

FIND WEAK PARTS OF ROADS

It Should Be Especial Business of Every Road Commissioner to Make Observations.

It should be the special business of every road commissioner to find the weak and susceptible parts of a road, and if there is any likelihood at all of the creation of a "bottomless pit," the saying of "a stitch in time" will apply very truthfully to the question in hand.

Interest in Road Building.

The increasing interest in road construction in Cuba is an indirect result of the world's demand for sugar in the war period.

Motor Truck Is Best.

For all the general haulage on the farm a motor truck is the best vehicle if the roads in the neighborhood are good.

Campaign Moving Rapidly.

The good roads campaign is moving more rapidly than ever before.

Prominent Indiana Women Testify

Lafayette, Ind.—"Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is truly a 'boon' for women. Last summer I just felt 'down and out,' was terribly pained at times and had very little energy to do my housework. My husband was quite concerned about me, and one day brought me a bottle of 'Favorite Prescription.' It is the finest medicine and tonic I have ever known. I would advise other women who suffer as I did to at least give it a trial."—Mrs. Myrtle Dilden, 1117 N. Sixth St.

Women When Dragged Down and Worn-out

Laporte, Ind.—"When approaching middle life I suffered severely, but one bottle of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription completely removed my pains, and the critical time passed so easily that I was scarcely conscious of it. It is over fifteen years since I took that one bottle of 'Favorite Prescription' and I have never had the least sign of weakness since. I think it the most wonderful medicine for women, and would advise its use by all women at the critical time of life."—Mrs. S. J. Baker, 916 Scott St.

Kokomo, Ind.—"Some time ago I felt 'draggy' and wornout and greatly in need of a tonic when a friend suggested to me to try Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. I taken taken other tonics, but I never took anything that helped me so quickly as the 'Favorite Prescription.' It was not an unpleasant medicine to take and my whole system seemed to be benefited. I have also used the 'Lotion Tablets' and found them to give just as perfect satisfaction."—Mrs. F. LaFollette, 410 W. Elm Street.

Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription is prepared from nature's roots and herbs, and does not contain a particle of alcohol or any narcotic. It's not a secret prescription, for its ingredients are printed on the wrapper.

Weak women should try it now. Don't wait! Today is the day to begin.

Diamond Cut Diamond

SEVEN BIG PERFECTLY MATCHED, BLOOD RED DIAMONDS!

That's what this fascinating mystery-detective story is about and no wonder they make interesting complications when they bob up in New York in the possession of an interesting woman-clairvoyant who admits they are smuggled and thinks they are rubies—and especially when a mysterious stranger appears and says they belong to Wilhelm of Germany! Such a complicated web as is spun about the possession of these seven wonderful gems—easily worth a million or so! Those who have them from time to time naturally try to hang on to them, and those who haven't them try to get them—all of which makes a thrilling yarn.

Moreover, there are some unusual and interesting characters, including the "staid, proper spinster," who tells the story; a beauteous young French girl, who appears a darling in one chapter and an adventuress in the next; a young man much sought after by the various sleuths, and a bright young newspaper man who makes an excellent hero.

Jane Bunker has told the story well and the action moves along swiftly, keeping the reader interested in both what is happening and what seems likely to happen.

CHAPTER I.

Claire.

I've always thought this adventure might credibly have happened to anybody else but me. Since it did happen to me I've come to the incredible conclusion that it's your staid, proper spinsters who get into some of the bluggiest adventures, only the world, just because of the bred-in-the-bone propriety of the people involved, never hears about the adventures.

Ann Preswick and I had spent the summer casually roving through Holland and Belgium, accompanied by two large suitcases, a bunch of extra soft lead pencils—mine—and a large paintbox and a white umbrella—Ann's—searching such adventures, literary and artistic, as two rather staid and prosaic women would be likely to find, which adventures we hoped to convert into cash through the American magazines.

At the end of three months Ann thought she saw two real live books as the offspring of our joint labors, so with my typewriter I went down to Vevay for the winter to work. However, I had hardly found myself nicely settled and "Belgian Byways" spurting along when I was cabled for to come home on family business.

While I was having the portier buy my Paris ticket for me a lady's card was brought to my room by the proprietor himself, telling me that the madame below stairs was the highly respected principal of a young ladies' school.

The madame turned out to be a pudgy, self-important person, speaking voluble and understandable English, who dived without waste of opportunity into her reason for visiting me: one of the young ladies of her school had just been telegraphed by monsieur le pere to meet him in Paris in the morning and must go up by the night train—of a necessity, mademoiselle must be chaperoned upon the journey—and madame had elected me to the privilege of doing it.

"That is something I never do, madame—chaperon strange young ladies."

"Madame—if you please—one moment. See the message of the father." She pulled out a long telegram in French. "You see—he goes to America at once with his daughter. She must be in Paris in the morning—must, you comprehend?"

"Madame, you really must excuse me and allow me to say bonjour. I never chaperon strange young ladies."

With that I sailed off upstairs as fast as my legs could carry me.

After what I'd said to madame and the way I'd treated her it never occurred to me that she'd laugh at my refusal. But it's what she did. She simply brought the child to the station and put her in my hands. And I saw a pair of beautiful big round eyes and a pair of beautiful big braids behind—I'd seen the braids the moment I entered the station and before madame had discovered me—and a charming, charming little creature about fifteen, in short frocks, and she put her little exquisitely gloved hand in mine and said, "Oh, do let me go with you! I'll not cause you a bit of trouble. You make me feel so safe and I'm so scared."

The last came out with a little gulp, and, silly old thing that I am about children of just that age—where childhood's world is closing them out of its innumerable protections and womanhood is opening the door to the world of straying feet—I said, "Come on, my dear," and put my arm around her, and away we went.

Claire—she asked me to call her by her first name—was as good as her word. She didn't make me the least trouble and she saved me a great deal at the frontier, for she spoke both French and German fluently—which I don't—and when a dingy, villainous-looking customs official eviscerated our compartment I was only too thankful I had the child with me. I thought I heard her say, "C'est ma mere," and why she should be telling them about her mother I couldn't make out. So I asked her.

The child blushed furiously and took my hand.

"Don't be angry with me, please. The man insisted on knowing who you were and I told him you were my mother."

And actually—that will show you the old softy I am and the way I'd fallen in love with the little thing—I wished it were true.

"I was so frightened," she went on, "that I hardly knew what to do. So I told him—I told him that"—she was red as a rose now—"I told him that you were the duchess de Pauncefort—English, you know—and were traveling incognita. That's why they were all so civil."

"Why, my dear child," I expostulated, for I do hate unnecessary lies, "I don't think all that was called for. I had nothing the officers might not have seen in welcome."

She hung her head and admitted, "I was afraid you wouldn't like it, but papa told me what to say in order to escape indignity. You see there are so many Russian spies passing the frontier—some very important ones have been escaping with papers and they are mostly women."

She seemed reticent about her father, saying he traveled most of the time and was in the diplomatic service and that she and her mother lived in Paris. But last September dear grandpa had had a stroke and her mother had to rush to America to a place called California, and she—Claire—was sent for safekeeping to madame's school.

Monsieur le pere met us at the station. Claire saw him in the distance, and with a cry of joy skimmed along the platform and into his arms. I came up sedately, just as her father set her down, and was introduced and thanked.

Monsieur de Ravenol had an air and a way, and the way was as convincing as the air. He gave me all the gratitude for the favor rendered that it was worth—and I thought rather more, and then immediately insisted on my breakfasting with them.

Monsieur de Ravenol Had an Air.

Where monsieur took us I don't to this day know, but it was an expensive, obsequious place and he seemed to be at home there.

"It was when I was biting into my second roll that monsieur came out plop—no less than that I was to take Claire on the steamer with me and let her share my stateroom!

Oh, it was more than a favor he was asking—madame and himself and Claire would be forever in my debt. He himself had expected to sail in two days and join madame in New York, but he was "recalled to court" (what court he didn't trouble to tell me), and he could neither take Claire with him nor yet leave her alone in Paris. Madame de Ravenol would be awaiting her child in New York, hence if I could continue to keep the girl under my so estimable care until I delivered her on the other side monsieur would retain for me an everlasting gratitude.

Claire started and exclaimed, "Papa!" when she heard he was not sailing, and was moaning to send her on alone, but he gave her a hard look and a sharp sentence in what sounded German, but I've since learned was a dialect I couldn't be supposed to understand. All I got of it was a stern, "Du must," which silenced the girl completely.

It was that—the callous rudeness toward me, though at the moment he was in the very act of asking a great favor—that nailed my resolution to have nothing whatever to do with him or his affairs. I replied, the moment I got the chance, "It is quite impossible, monsieur. I never share a stateroom with anyone."

"Ah, madame—a child—a little child alone, alone,"—he looked at me reproachfully. "What shall she make alone on that long voyage? And coming to your customs house in New York—I hear zat zey are terrible—zat ladies receive indignities beyond belief—being stripped to ze skin to be searched by monsters in human form."

I flared up at this—our customs house isn't anything to give one particular pride, but it's nothing indecent, and I told him very flatly it was not so.

In an instant of unreserve I mentioned that I had a fourth cousin in the service who always met me and saw that I got through—he was in charge of the inspector who examined baggage on the line I always took.

"Ah, how excellent it would be for Claire to accompany you," monsieur exclaimed with feeling. "All her anxiety would zen be set at rest by your so estimable cousin. Surely you will not refuse her to share your stateroom?"

I was exasperated again in a minute. I've got Quaker blood in me, and come from a people whose yea is yea and whose nay means "that settles it." I snapped out that my stateroom was too small even for one, in comfort.

"But I shall most gladly engage ze largest on board for you and my daughter," he cried, brightening. "Indeed it is no more zan right zat I pay ze entire passage."

Claire started and turned furiously red. Child as she was, she had a breeding and a delicacy of feeling that her father lacked. As for me, my eyes were popping. I threw my napkin on the table and let this icicle slide off my tongue: "Monsieur, I am perfectly able to pay my way through the world without the help of strangers," and with that I rose, adding, "I must say farewell to you and your daughter. I have many things to attend to and my friends are expecting me."

Monsieur and Claire immediately followed my example in rising, monsieur calling the garcon to bring the bill and telling Claire to go with me to the saloon. As she was leaving he called her back for another communication not meant for me to understand. She, poor child, wasn't equal to the task he set, for she blurted out, very red in the face, "Papa wants me to beg you to take me with you—" and then stopped and looked at the floor, for the smile she saw in my face.

"I understand just how you feel, my dear," I said gently. "You're too beautifully well bred to urge the granting of a favor that has been and must be refused."

"Oh, how did you know how I felt?" she gulped, looking up with her big eyes relieved of their embarrassment. "It's just how I felt, and I'm ashamed that"—she bit her lip and kept back what she was going to say—that her father had asked it—and said, artlessly, "I love you."

She put up her face and we kissed.

That one little moment—the feeling that she was the real thing—kept me believing in her later in spite of everything, and when I couldn't believe in her at all—except as the finished accomplice in a detestable crime.

Monsieur le pere hurried in. A glance quite plainly passed between them in which she told him it was no use. Then he said the carriages were outside, and he saw me into one and gave the driver the name of the hotel I told him, and I was off in a cloud of adieus and bows and hand-waves and whip-cracks and was presently at my hotel.

CHAPTER II.

The Slipper.

Ann was waiting for me at the hotel. While I unpacked and washed she sat on the bed and regaled me with the news. "Who do you think turned up from home last week? You'll never guess. Billy Rivers. And he's just the dearest ever."

Now, ages upon ages ago Billy Rivers had gone to school to me in the year of my initiation into the sacred mysteries of pedagogy in North Tonawanda, and I rather think—now that I see things from the middle-aged point of view—that Billy taught me more than I taught him. He had been in New York now for some little time—since his graduation—a cub reporter on one of the big dailies.

"What's Billy doing over here?"

"His mother had a stroke or something while she was at Aix for the baths and Billy had to come over to get her home. They're going Cunard day after tomorrow if she's able to travel."

* * * * * * *

When I came out of my stateroom on the steamer the next-day-but-one after seeing my suitcase stowed the first person my eye lighted on was—Claire!

Claire tripped up to me, delighted but a little embarrassed, and in her wake followed a lady whose face was very familiar, as mine was to her, and a smile of recognition broke out on both of us at once and we exclaimed at each other, "Why, you're the Lady of the Slippers."

Now "the slippers" were the top notch of my wild extravagant life in Paris and I'd never mentioned them to Ann. I came by them in this wise: Just as I was leaving for Vevay I had passed a little shop on a funny little street and in the window was a pair of slippers. They were high over the instep—so they'd keep my feet warm—and decorated with the queerest oriental pattern you ever saw, and they had low heels.

I bounced into the shop to ask the price, and at the counter stood another American lady with an identical pair in her hand. I demanded the price.

"One hundred and twenty-five francs," beamed madame, "and most reasonable."

The other American woman and I dropped the slippers like hot cakes—our reckless passion for spending wasn't equal to twenty-five dollars for a pair of slippers. Madame came down ten francs and inveigled us into trying on the slippers. There was a difference of half a size in the pairs and they fitted as though they'd been made in heaven. Madame came down ten francs more and then knocked off five, and we bought them at a hundred francs a pair, laughingly telling each other we'd caught each other in the act and promising never to give each other away.

I had liked this American woman and should have been glad to see her again; and here she was. She was pleasant and unaffected, a woman of possibly forty; dark hair, black eyes, waxy as to complexion; not what I would call handsome but with a distinct air.

Claire had introduced her as Mrs. Delario and later the child confided that her father had found her by accident as he had me. That he paid her fare over as an inducement to her to come on this steamer—with me, I even then surmised. Claire and she shared the largest stateroom on board.

There were two other women going over, but Mrs. Delario and I seemed the only ones able to keep our sea legs, while Claire stayed in her berth for almost the entire passage.

But the really friendly acquaintance between Mrs. Delario and me began by our being flung into each other's arms when our frisky little craft took an unexpected dive, trying to see if she could hit bottom with her nose. We made profuse apologies and dropped for safety into the nearest chairs. I was clutching vigorously at the arm of mine, when she fastened her gaze on a ring I wore, reached out and took my hand.

She said, "What a very curious ring—it looks as though it had a history," turning it for different angles and fumbling at it as though she meant to draw it off.

I said it had, and she asked me to let her take it off and try it on. I had curled my fingers over hers to prevent it, for I hate to have people trying on my rings. So I shook my head and replied, "That would break the spell."

She dropped my hand instantly; said, "Excuse me—I didn't know it was that, though I felt the spell—the occult influence—before I touched it. You know I think I felt it that first time we met when we bought the slippers, though I didn't see the ring. I felt something occult all around you. You are under the protection of very powerful influences."

Those extravagant slippers give the spinster quite a shock.

Hans Christian Andersen.

Hans Christian Andersen, styled the children's poet, was a celebrated Danish writer, born at Odense in 1805 and died at Copenhagen after a brief illness, August 4, 1875. His last years were unharnessed by criticism and attended by all the honor and love that should accompany genius combined with old age. As the child of poor, shiftless parents, he had little instruction and few associates, but his dramatic instinct was developed by Fontaine and the Arabian Nights, and the visit of a theatrical company to his native city led him to seek his dramatic fortune in Copenhagen, where for four years he worked diligently but produced nothing of note. In 1835 he essayed the "Fairy Tales," by which he was to receive world wide recognition. The classic "Tinderbox" and "Big Claus and Little Claus," are also of this year. A short time afterwards "Only a Fiddler" gave him a European reputation.

RELIEVED MIND OF HOSTESS

California Newspaper Man Proved Himself a Diplomat in Situation That Called for Tact.

While a Los Angeles publisher was abroad, a few months ago, with a newspaper crowd he was invited, with the rest of the party to dine with a duke and duchess who were burdened with a double last name, such as Kelly-Angus.

The Californian was in an awful stew from the time the dinner started as to how he should address the hostess in case he fell into conversation with her, but finally, when the opportunity came, he proved himself every inch a diplomat.

The duchess, it seems was apologizing for the dinner not being more formal, or something like that, and the newspaper man, desiring to make her feel at ease, just reached his right hand across the table, took the hostess by the hand, and said:

"Oh, that's all right, Mrs. Kelly, all of us like good home cooking."—Washington Star.

PHILOSOPHY TO THE RESCUE

How Mr. Johnson Resigned Himself to the Advent of the Unnecessary Quadruplets.

Andrew Johnson, negro, of Forsyth, Ga., father of quadruplets, three boys and a girl, never overlooks a business opportunity. The day following the arrival of the four pickaninnies, white citizens journeyed out to the little log cabin on the outskirts of the town to look 'em over. Whereupon Andrew painted a sign and nailed it to his door. The sign read:

"Come and see the babies. Admission, adults, 50 cents; children, 25 cents."

Money rolled in.

"I sure needed a lot o' things a heap worse than dem four chillun," Andrew said. "But you got to take dem as dey come."

Outguessed Him.

Pauline Lord went to call on William Harris, Jr., anent an engagement just before he set sail for Europe.

"What's your salary?" demanded Harris, after the other details had been discussed, Miss Lord told him.

"Ouch!" decried the manager, wincing at the sum.

"Why, don't you think I'm worth it?" Miss Lord asked.

"Yes," admitted Harris, "but I didn't think you did."

PUT COLLEGE SAVINGS CLUBS IN ALL THE HIGH SCHOOLS

Seventh District W. S. S. Organization to Aid Children Build Up Fund for Education.

College Savings clubs in all the high schools of the Seventh district is the aim of the War Savings educational committee, of which Shailer Mathews is the chairman. This new plan was decided upon at a recent meeting of the committee at the Chicago headquarters. The object is to get high school students to prepare for a college education through saving and investment in War Savings stamps. To secure special training in a college, technical school, normal school, professional school or university costs money, but regular saving by high school students will open the way for any boy or girl of determination. Money can be earned after school, on Saturdays and during the vacation periods. Some boys and girls have an allowance from parents. Frequently they receive cash gifts. This money put into Thrift and War Savings stamps will work for the high school students while they are getting their preliminary education.

Mrs. Alfred J. Benson, manager of the division of schools and churches for Illinois, strongly urged the keeping of a personal account by children. She points out that there are three sources of income for the school child. They are individual earnings, allowances by the parents and gifts. Some system of individual accounts for school children may be worked out by the committee later.

The normal schools and teachers' colleges of the district will receive the attention of the committee. An effort will be made to have Thrift courses put in both these classes of educational institutions at once.

At the meeting of the committee were: Shailer Mathews, chairman; E. U. Graff of Indianapolis; J. V. McNally, Detroit; Thomas Boyce, Milwaukee; Mrs. P. O. Altman, Detroit; Mrs. Alfred J. Benson, and Albert Boswell, manager of sales.

U. S. ADVISES FARMERS BEST WAY TO INVEST

Transfer of Liberty Bonds Held by Banks Urged as Aid to Cut H. C. L.

Through the State Agricultural colleges of the Seventh district, as well as the other districts of the country, the savings division of the treasury department is starting a campaign to promote savings and investment in government securities, especially for the benefit of the farmer. In a letter to the State Agricultural colleges Benjamin R. Andrews, vice director of the savings division, said in part:

"The treasury department is offering Thrift and War Savings stamps, $100 and $1,000 Treasury Savings certificates (War Savings stamps in larger denominations), and Treasury Certificates of Indebtedness. It is also urging the transfer to private investors of the Liberty bonds still held by banks, which, as the federal reserve board has pointed out, by reducing the inflated credit situation will be one effective factor for checking rising prices.

"The farmers of the country took their full share in the war loans and for the first time became generally investors in securities. The problem arises: Can they to their own advantage continue to invest money in securities, and if so, what form shall the investment take? A leading rural economist recently pointed out that the farmers could not do better than place their surplus funds in Liberty bonds. From many quarters comes the warning against the danger in rising land prices which are in part due to the investment of the farmer's surplus in land which he does not intend to cultivate, but to rent or sell again.

"The government is interested in promoting the holding of Liberty bonds, in preventing fraudulent practices by Liberty bond manipulators, and in continuing the flow of money into Liberty bonds and other government securities."

Following are the chief points the treasury department wishes to be brought to the attention of people in rural districts:

Possible investments for farmer: (a) Re-investment in his own farming desirable as long as more capital can be profitably employed; (b) land mortgages—safe but not readily convertible to cash or convenient as collateral for temporary bank loans; (c) personal notes—risky; (d) shares of stock—speculative and risky, farmer not in position to have special knowledge; (e) government securities, absolutely safe as to principal and interest—no question as to prior claims, always marketable or redeemable.

Government securities now available: $5 War Savings stamps and $100 and $1,000 Treasury Savings certificates, maturing January 1, 1924, redeemable on demand sooner, paying 4 per cent compound interest; Treasury Certificates of Indebtedness, $500 up, running for a few months with interest at 4¼ per cent and 4⅛ per cent; Liberty bonds and Victory notes, $50 up, purchasable in open market through local banks. Characteristics of these different securities—bonds especially desirable as collateral for temporary loans at banks.

Effect of government investment: (a) Increasing saving fund of the country; the dollar put into government securities releases a banking dollar; (b) expansion of business and trade; effect on foreign trade especially important to farmer as the extension of credits abroad is the sole way of making possible the sale of farm products abroad; increasing capital available for agriculture; (c) high cost of living situation, since increased production and saving are the two fundamental cures for rising prices and investment in government securities provides both; (d) rural land speculation craze—aided by farmer who puts his surplus into farm lands for leasing or sale; checked by government investment; effect of speculation on future farming.

"Holding your government securities a good citizenship."—Why? The government is still borrowing funds.

Farmer now a mark for fraudulent stock operators, Liberty bond scalpers. How check fraud?

VIRGIN ISLANDS SET EXAMPLE.

Uncle Sam's newest possession, the Virgin Islands, has taken most rapidly to American ideals, according to information received by the Savings Division of the Treasury Department. The small population of the islands consists largely of the foreign-born, yet nearly $2,500 worth of War Savings stamps has been sold there this year, the per capita purchases comparing most favorably with those of any of the states of the Union.

The purchases for the islands up to the end of August this year averaged $17.25 for each square mile of the territory purchased from Denmark in 1916. The sales of the stamps were made through the post offices of the islands.

Try to Avoid The Flu.

1. KEEP IN CONDITION. (a) Get plenty of fresh air. (b) Eat plain well cooked food, eat in moderation, eat slowly. (c) Drink two quarts of pure water daily, drink pure milk, cut out tea and coffee. (d) Get bowel action from fruits, vegetables and water, never from drugs. Live rationally.

2. Avoid people who cough and sneeze. Stand back at least four feet when talking face to face with any one.

3. Avoid crowds, indoors or out.

4. Cover your mouth and nose with a handkerchief or turn your face when you cough or sneeze. Tell others to do the same.

5. Don't use any eating utensils unless they have been washed and scalded.

6. Keep your fingers out of your mouth. Put only pure water and milk and plain, clean foods in your mouth.

7. If you get "flu," go to bed immediately in a well ventilated room and obey your doctor.

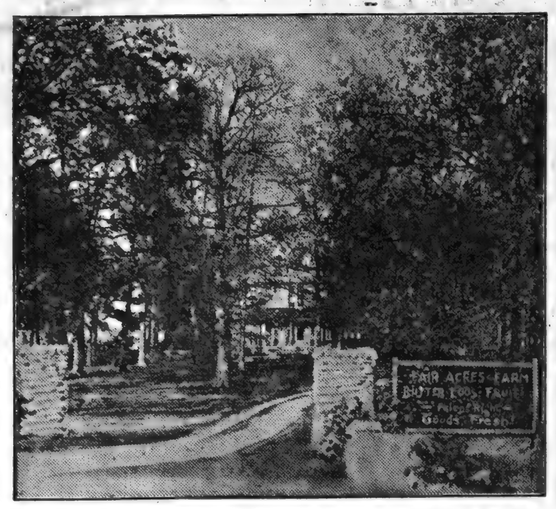
MANY METHODS BY WHICH CONSUMERS MAY BE MADE CUSTOMERS FOR FARM PRODUCTS



How a Neat Bulletin Board Can Be Made to Announce Products for Sale.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Mention advertising to the old-time farmer and he thinks of large display-type announcements more or less expensively illustrated. But modern farmers have found scores of ways by which they can attract buyers for their products. The suggestions offered herewith are designed particularly for the farmer who is in a position to supply a given grade of goods in sufficient quantities to meet a stable demand. Butter, eggs, live and dressed poultry, dressed meat, home-rendered lard, sausage, fruit and vegetables are among the commodities the sales of which can be bettered by some form of farm advertising.

There are many means of direct appeal to buyers which are made particularly profitable by the tremendous increase in auto travel. Today that farm is remote indeed which is not passed many times a week by town or city motorists, the majority of whom are possible customers for the farmer. Consequently he must look well to the appearance of his place. Perhaps unsightly features of which he is not conscious exist, but the passerby, keen to discern these signs of laxness, hesitates to purchase at such a farm.

Uses for Bulletin Boards.

A bulletin board near the front gate is a big asset, if carefully prepared. In addition to the name of the farm or the farm owner, it should state in simple, large type the kinds of produce for sale and the prices. Some farmers have found supplementary notices, placed at a proper distance on either side of the main bulletin board, very valuable in calling attention to the latter. Suggested wording for these follows:

FAIR VALLEY FARM
Read Marketing Bulletin Ahead.

There are various ways in which the farm name can be displayed to the owner's financial advantage. Any farm will be better remembered by passing strangers if its name appears in neat lettering over or beside the main entrance or across the face of a barn. The farmer who possesses an auto truck—and he is legion these days—is overlooking a splendid advertising opportunity if he does not have the name of his farm and his special products neatly lettered on the side of his vehicle. Then every trip to town is a reminder to hundreds, perhaps thousands, of people that the owner is still "on the map." One dairy farmer who built up a large retail trade not only carried on his vehicles the name of his farm, but made all his trucks and wagons even more distinctive by painting them a dark yellow.

Letterheads a Help.

Printed letterheads are a real asset for the farmer who is selling to either wholesale or retail trade. The following form is suggestive:

FAIR VALLEY FARM
BUTTER, EGGS, DRESSED POULTRY, BY PARCEL POST FROM THE FARM TO YOU.
BLAND, MD.....19..

Many farmers who handle considerable quantities of produce find it profitable to use distinctive, printed wrappers. Another simple means of advertising is neatly printed gummed labels for use on the outside of packages sent by parcel post or express.

Advertisements in local or metropolitan papers should be short and should give a description of the goods with the prices, and the name and address of the person advertising. In some cities the Sunday edition gives better results than the daily edition.

What Advertiser Should Know.

The person who advertises must offer a product that is wanted by the persons who read the paper at the time the product is advertised, in the places where the paper has a circulation. In other words, he must know what to advertise, when to advertise, and where to advertise. The following are suggested forms for parcel post classified advertising:

James J. Jameson, Proprietor

Fresh eggs, direct from the farm. Send ——— for three dozen delivered by parcel post, prepaid. Fair View Farm, Blank, Va.

Butter, direct from dairy. Fresh, clean, and sweet. Send ——— for two pounds, delivered postpaid by parcel post. Fair View Farm, Blank, Va.

Cherries from the tree to you by prepaid parcel post. Picked the day they are mailed. Send ——— cents for ——— quarts to Fair View Farm, Blank, Va.

Typical of the small number of farmers who have entered the field of national advertising is one in a middle-western state, who has built up a country-wide trade in his special brand of home-made sausage by using the advertising columns of publications of national circulation, supplemented by cleverly prepared pamphlets and the use of distinctive wrappers.

BENEFITS OBTAINED FROM BETTER SIRES

Farmer Increases Products and Receives More Money.

Crusade Launched by Department of Agriculture Will Eventually Result in Reducing Cost of Living to Consumer.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The definition of the term "pure-bred sires" is written in one word—"economy." There are many definitions, many of them learned and long, that might be written, but the breeding experts of the United States department of agriculture, when they met to launch the state and national crusade for "Better Sires—Better Stock," agreed that the primary meaning of it is economy.

The scrub hog requires a certain number of bushels of corn to make 200 pounds of pork. The pure-bred or high-grade hog takes the same number of bushels of corn and makes 300 pounds of pork. The pure-bred or high-grade cow makes three gallons of milk out of the same quantity of silage that the scrub cow uses to make a gallon and [illegible] of milk. These figures are not [illegible] to be scientifically exact, of [illegible] but merely to illustrate the [illegible]ple. The result is that the farm[illegible] more pounds of salable prod[illegible] he uses pure[illegible] kept scrub stock. The final result of pure-bred sires is that the farmer makes more money and the city family gets more and better food, probably at lower prices.

The crusade, the experts say, eventually will tend to result in reducing the cost of living to the consumer without taking the difference out of the pocket of the producer. For that reason, they point out, the city man has a definite money interest in the better-sires crusade. While he can hardly be expected to put the same amount of effort into it that the live stock breeder should, he is expected to give encouragement and aid to the program whenever the opportunity offers. And there will be no lack of opportunity, particularly in the smaller cities and towns where the farmers are in close contact with the city business men.

GENERAL FARM NOTES

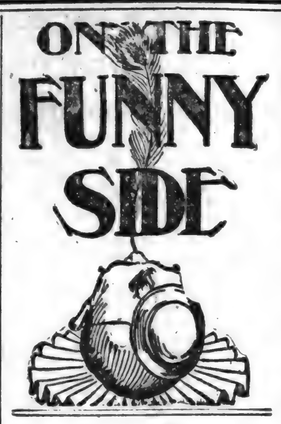
Don't [illegible]rasks and burn the straw. It [illegible]valuable and should be returned to [illegible]land.

ON THE FUNNY SIDE



An Uncertainty.

"I've voted for you every time you ran for anything," said the visiting constituent.

"I trust," replied Senator Sorghum, "you feel that your course was prompted by good judgment."

"I can't tell for sure. Sometimes I think it's good judgment and sometimes I think it's just a forgiving nature."

His Holler.

Customer (in cheap restaurant)—Give me a cup of chocolate with cream.

Waiter (hollering order)—Cake and cow fer one.

Customer — Waiter, make that whipped cream.

Waiter (hollering order)—Chastise Sukey.

ALSO, WHEN SHE'S ABSENT.

"Pa, when do they call a woman an old hen?"

"When she has become hopelessly set in her way, my son."

Shares the Credit.

"The pen is mightier than the sword;"
But it you'll stop and think,
The pen is mighty little use
Without the dip of ink.

Getting His Share.

"'Tain't manners to talk while you's eatin'," said Miss Miami Brown.

"No," answered Mr. Rastus Pinkley "an' wif food scarce like it is, 'tain' good judgment, either."

How Annoying!

Bob—What a nuisance that chap is!

Jack—Oh, fierce! After you've touched him for money five or ten times he begins asking you to repay it.

About the Same Thing.

Hewit—Were you ever under a cloud?

Jewett—Well, I've walked with my wife when she had her big hat on.

He Didn't Stay Very Long.

Caller—Bessie, what did your sister say when you told her I was here?

Bessie—She said, "Great Heavens! That bore here again!"

Probably.

He—Yes; I've just secured a position as buyer of millinery, etc.

She—Do you mean you're married?

A Sale in Prospect.

De Friend—What is that picture intended to represent?

De Artist—Board and lodging for six weeks.

Wifey Didn't.

"You brute! The idea of your calling your wife the last rose of summer and other insulting names."

"Hold on, judge! I never used that metaphor. You see, a rose dries up some time."

The Great Mimic.

First Actor (didactically)—After all, Death is the star tragedian.

Second Actor—I don't know, I always think of him as a low comedian—a mere mimic—because he's always taking some one off.

Egotism.

"Why do you carry a lantern in your quest of that rare specimen, an honest man?"

"Merely to be original," replied Diogenes. "Ordinarily a man engaged in such a search thinks all he needs is a looking-glass."

Impossible.

"She married a tall artist—"

"Come, now, begin again. Everybody knows that artists are always short."

Behind the Scenes.

First Chorus Girl—That vain leading lady thinks she is beautiful. She says her face grows on the audience as soon as she steps before the footlights.

Second Chorus Girl—Thank goodness, it did not grow on me.

Those Jolting Ambulances.

Hospital Doctor—They said you had appendicitis—but I find you're bruised all over.

Mr. Jonx—Yes; I guess I am. They brought me here in an ambulance.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Teacher of English Bible in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)
(Copyright, 1918, Western Newspaper Union)

LESSON FOR NOVEMBER 16

WITNESSES OF CHRIST'S GLORY.

LESSON TEXT—Luke 9:28-36.
GOLDEN TEXT—This is my beloved Son: hear ye him.—Mark 9:7.
ADDITIONAL MATERIAL—Matt. 17:1-8; Mark 9:2-8; II Peter 1:16-18.
PRIMARY AND JUNIOR TOPIC—Peter and John with Jesus on the mountain.
SENIOR AND ADULT TOPIC—The glory of Jesus Christ.

While it is true that in this lesson the disciples are witnesses of Christ's glory, the full truth is that the manifestation of Christ in glory was to give to the discouraged disciples a foregleam of the Messianic Kingdom. The hopes of the disciples were crushed when Christ announced his death on the cross. They were unable to see how victory could issue from death.

Jesus took with him Peter, James, and John, and went into the mountain to pray. His chief aim in retirement was to get the disciples apart into a state of receptivity so that he might show them the method of the Kingdom. Before going to the mountain he declared that there were some standing in his presence who would not taste of death till they should see the Son of Man coming in his Kingdom (Luke 9:27; Matt. 16:28). That their drooping spirits might be revived and their confidence restored, he is transfigured before them. Two men from the upper world are sent to converse with him about his approaching death in Jerusalem (v. 31)—the very thing about which the disciples refused to talk. Then, too, God's own voice was heard in words of approval of Christ's course, directing them to hear the Master. Surely they cannot doubt his ability now to carry into execution his kingdom plans. The purpose, then, of the transfiguration is to give the disciples a foregleam of the coming Kingdom, to enable them to see the Kingdom in embryo. That this is true is not only shown by the context and circumstances, but by the inspired interpretation of one who was with him and knew all that happened. Peter said, "For we did not follow cunningly devised fables when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but we were eye witnesses of his majesty, for he received of God the Father, honor and glory when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory, This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased: and this voice we ourselves heard come out of heaven, when we were with him in the holy mount. And we have the word of prophecy made more sure; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a lamp shining in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts (2 Peter 1:16-19 R. V.). To those who believe in the inspiration of the Bible these words are final. Let us therefore note the outstanding features of the Kingdom as displayed in the transfiguration.

I. Jesus Christ the Glorified King on Mount Zion (v. 29).

The glorified King on this Mount was intended to symbolize the Messianic Kingdom when Christ returns to the Mount of Olives in Jerusalem (Zech. 14:4-17). This is still in the future, and will be literally fulfilled.

II. The Glorified Saints With Christ (vv. 30, 31).

1. Moses, who was once denied an entrance into Palestine, appears now in glory, representing the redeemed of the Lord who will pass through death into the Kingdom. Many thousands of the redeemed have fallen asleep and at the coming of the Lord shall be awakened to pass into the Kingdom.

2. Elijah, now glorified, represents the redeemed who shall pass into the Kingdom through translation. Many shall be living upon the earth when the Lord shall come, and shall without dying be changed and thus pass into the Kingdom (1 Cor. 15:50-53; 1 Thess. 4:14-18).

3. They talk of the very thing which the disciples refused to believe, namely, the death of Christ.

III. Israel, in the Flesh, in Connection With the Kingdom, Represented by Peter, James and John (v. 28).

Israel shall be called from their hiding place among all nations of the earth and shall be gathered to Jesus Christ the King, as the central people in the Kingdom (Ez. 37:21-27).

1. Peter proposes to build three tabernacles (v. 33). The Feast of Tabernacles looked forward to the glorious reign of Christ. Peter caught a glimpse of the significance of the transfiguration. His proposition showed that he thought of the Feast of Tabernacles, and therefore of the Millenium.

2. The divine voice (v. 35). At this time God himself uttered his words, assuring them that this one in glory was his son Jesus Christ.

IV. The Multitude at the Foot of the Mountain (vv. 37-43).

This is representative of the nations which shall be brought into the Kingdom which shall be established over Israel (see Isaiah 11:10-12). The people here were grievously oppressed by the devil. There are times when the devil is especially active in his oppression of men. About the time of Christ's first coming he did his best to harass men. Just before Christ's coming again he will be especially active, for he knows that his time is short.

ZOO BIRDS

"Some of the birds in the zoo were talking," said Daddy, "and saying what they thought of zoo life. They were telling from where they had come and what they looked like. Though others could see what they looked like they cared very much about describing themselves so others would hear what they wore and what sort of feathers they liked.

"'I care a great deal for plenty of gay colors,' said the Black-Faced Gouldian Finch from Northern Australia. 'I have a black head, a lavender collar, a yellow feathered chest cover and gray feathers otherwise, though, I wear touches of green and blue, too.'

"'In fact,' said the Napoleon Weaver Bird from Western Africa, 'you're a stylish and dressy bird.

"'Now I wear yellow feathers on my head which stick up in a very stylish and smart fashion. My cheeks and my throat are black though the under part of my throat is yellow. It is black in these parts which are between my cheeks and my throat. At the sides I have yellow touches.

"'I wear brown feathers too in my wings but one would say that I was very fond of bright colors. I don't get my bright colors right away but as soon as I do I begin to look for a mate, for then I am handsome and am not ashamed to ask some beautiful Miss Weaver Bird to be my mate.

"'There is so much yellow in my costume, for I am so very fond of yellow. It is quite my favorite color. I look like a beautiful fluffy, fluttering ball of yellow I'm told as I go here and there, trying to look smart and gay and handsome as I am on my way to seek my mate.

"'Of course then my feathers are very beautiful for I have made them so by pulling them carefully and making them stand up in fine fashion.'

"'You're a gay and dashing bird as far as your handsome colors go,' said the Gouldian Finch, 'and I can see how a Miss Weaver Bird is delighted to have such a bright looking, beautiful mate.

"'I am rather delicate here in the zoo but still I do not mind it.'

"'I do my best work always,' said a little Thrush, 'trying to eat bad insects. The English sparrow is a bad little fellow. He eats good insects and things which help destroy bad ones. He also drives many birds away as he is greedy and doesn't get along with other birds well.

"'But, let us hear why you are laughing, Bird of Paradise?'

"The Birds of Paradise, with their beautiful plumage looking so lovely, were laughing for all they were worth.

"'Wick, waw, wick, waw, wick-waw, wick-waw, wick, wack,' they kept saying, and smiling at the same time.

"'We heard some one say,' one of them answered, 'how fine one of us would look on a hat, and we laughed for we knew they would only wish and wish and it wouldn't do them any good. We were safe.

"'But then we stopped laughing for one of us said, one of the older members of our family:

"'Ah yes, but people shouldn't even wish for such things, for they should know how cruel it is to kill birds for their plumage. And they should know how especially cruel it is to kill us for they do so when we're mating, when we're telling our little mates how we love them and they're telling us how they love us and how we're all going to be happy ever after.

"'Then for the moment we become sad. But since then, so many people have come to the zoo and they have talked of how wrong it was to kill the Birds of Paradise for fashions and the Heron Birds and many others.

"'So at that again we laughed and smiled and were gay and happy. And when we laughed the people seemed to be so amused and to laugh so hard too as they heard our funny voices so we laughed more and more.

"'But mostly we laughed because it has seemed as though people were beginning to see that it was cruel to kill birds for fashions, just as it is wrong to hunt for animals that aren't needed for daily food and nourishment.'

"'You're safe here,' the other birds said, 'but it is nice to think that people are glad when they see you that you aren't on their hats.'"

Comes After "A".

Teacher—"Bobby, what letter of the alphabet comes after 'A'?"

Bobby (aged 5)—"Don't know."

Teacher—"Don't you know what flies around the garden in summer?"

Bobby—"Mother, after the old hens."

THIS WEAK, NERVOUS MOTHER

Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restored Her Health.

Philadelphia, Pa.—"I was very weak, always tired, my back ached, and I felt sickly most of the time. I went to a doctor and he said I had nervous indigestion, which added to my weak condition kept me worrying most of the time—and he said if I could not stop that, I could not get well. I heard so much about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound my husband wanted me to try it. I took it for a week and felt a little better. I kept it up for three months, and I feel fine and can eat anything now without distress or nervousness."—Mrs. J. WORTHLINE, 2842 North Taylor St., Philadelphia Pa.

The majority of mothers nowadays overdo, there are so many demands upon their time and strength; the result is invariably a weakened, run-down, nervous condition with headaches, backache, irritability and depression—and soon more serious ailments develop. It is at such periods in life that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will restore a normal healthy condition, as it did to Mrs. Worthline.

COLD ON CHEST AND SORE THROAT ENDED OVERNIGHT

You Get Action with Mustarine—It Drives Out Pain in Half the Time it Takes other Remedies — It's the Quickest Pain Killer on Earth.

Stops coughing almost instantly; ends sore throat and chest colds over night. Nothing like it for neuralgia, lumbago, neuritis and to speedily drive away rheumatic pains and reduce swollen joints.

Mustarine is the original non-blistering prescription that takes the place but is 10 times as efficient as Grandmother's old-fashioned mustard plaster. Use it for sprains, strains, bruises, sore muscles, stiff neck, swellings, sore, painful or frosted feet and chilblains. Be sure it's Begy's Mustarine in the yellow box.

Why That Lame Back?

Morning lameness, sharp twinges when bending and an all day backache; each is cause enough to suspect kidney complaint. If you feel tired all the time and are annoyed by dizzy spells, headaches and irregular kidney action, you have additional proof and should act quickly to prevent more serious kidney trouble. Use Doan's Kidney Pills, the remedy that is recommended everywhere by grateful users. Ask your neighbor!

An Ohio Case

Fred W. Harris, proprietor barber shop Chestnut St., Jefferson, Ohio, says: "For over ten years I suffered from kidney trouble. My hands and feet swelled for days at a time and there were puffy sacs beneath my eyes. I had a constant backache and finally got so bad that I was laid up in bed. After I had taken two boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills my condition improved and it wasn't long before I was cured."

GROW SHORTHORN BEEF

The Pacheco Cattle Co., of California, recently marketed 126 three-year-old Shorthorn steers weighing 1,515 lbs., off grass. These steers had never tasted grain nor hay except the latter at weaning time. They had both size and quality, which is a Shorthorn characteristic. It pays to grow Shorthorns. The cows are good milkers. The breed colors are red, white and roan. For information write to the American Shorthorn Breeders' Association 13 Dexter Park Ave. Chicago, Ill.

INDIGESTION
Caused by
Acid-Stomach

Millions of people—in fact about 9 out of 10—suffer more or less from indigestion, acute or chronic. Nearly every case is caused by Acid-Stomach.

There are other stomach disorders which also are sure signs of Acid-Stomach—belching, heartburn, bloat after eating, food repeating, sour, gassy stomach. There are many ailments which, while they do not cause much distress in the stomach itself, are, nevertheless, traceable to an acid-stomach. Among these are nervousness, biliousness, cirrhosis of the liver, rheumatism, impoverished blood, weakness, insomnia, melancholia and a long train of physical and mental miseries that keep the victims in miserable health year after year.

The right thing to do is to attack these ailments at their source—get rid of the acid-stomach. A wonderful modern remedy called EATONIC now makes it easy to do this.

One of hundreds of thousands of grateful users of EATONIC writes: "I have been troubled with intestinal indigestion for about nine years and have spent quite a sum for medicine, but without relief. After using EATONIC for a few days the gas and pains in my bowels disappeared. EATONIC is just the remedy I needed."

We have thousands of letters telling of these marvelous benefits. Try EATONIC and you, too, will be just as enthusiastic in its praise.

INDIANA NEWS

Greenfield.—The cooler weather, Hancock county farmers say, will arrest the ravages of the Hessian fly, which has been working in all parts of the county. Wheat sowed prior to September 25 has been damaged.

Greenfield.—The Interstate Public Service company, which supplies this city with natural gas, will not permit consumers to use gas for heating purposes nor industrial plants to use it for any purpose.

Huntington.—By cutting off street lights and by burning only half of the city's ornamental lights, the municipal light plant will have coal enough to run six weeks the superintendent of the department announces.

Indianapolis.—An appeal to the public to take heed of the perilous coal shortage, to co-operate with public officers in arranging for strict conservation of fuel and a direct order curtailing service by public utilities having less than two weeks' coal supply on hand, was issued at the office of the public service commission after conference with the utility fuel committee.

Indianapolis.—Grimes Golden apples were winners at the Indiana Apple show in awards made a few days ago. First prize of $200 in the commercial 40-bushel class went to Robinson Bros., of Greenwood, on their Grimes Goldens. The same firm also won first prize of $10 in the ten-on-a-tray class, with Grimes Goldens. Coffing Bros. of Silverwood won $150 in cash prizes and 100 young apple trees.

Washington, D. C.—Ominous evidence of the seriousness of the coal shortage in Indiana due to the miners' strike and indications that a continuance of the strike may mean the shutting down of many industries, throwing thousands of men out of work, were seen here in a small flood of telegrams received by the Indiana senators and congressmen from various points in Indiana in which appeals were made for coal.

Oakland City.—Oakland City college will be one of the training schools for disabled soldiers, a contract having been closed with the government for the teaching of six courses of one year, as follows: General farming, horticulture, animal husbandry, farm mechanics, dairying and commerce. The Cronbach Industrial school, the college 60-acre demonstration orchard, an 80-acre experimental stock and dairy farm and other college lands will be used in the work.

Gary.—Organization of a military establishment without the big Gary steel mills became known when department heads and foremen were called by General Superintendent William P. Gleason to a meeting at the plant. Capt. S. A. Rand of the Fourth division, recently resigned from service, is forming the company of United States Steel corporation soldiers and will command the force. It is said that the new unit will take the place of the armed guards employed to protect the plant and the new system will be adopted in other plants. The company will have a complete military equipment and the members are to be ex-service men.

Vincennes.—The pure-bred Jersey cow owned by Thad S. Nash of Princeton, which has just been announced as winner over 2,316 cows in a state contest by the dairy extension department of Purdue university, is a Knox county product. The cow is known as Plymouth Pedro's Jovial and as a three-year-old was sold last year for $400 to Indianapolis parties at a sale of Dr. N. E. Beckes on his farm near Bruceville. The cow was sired by Plymouth Pedro and dammed by McJovial, both of them owned by Doctor Beckes. In July she produced 74.8 pounds of butter fat and in August 68.0 pounds. Her July milk production was 1,525 pounds, or better than six gallons a day.

Lafayette.—Five hundred and sixty farmers' institutes will be held throughout the state during the next four months under the auspices of the agricultural extension department of Purdue university and local farmers' institute organizations. This is the largest number of institutes ever held. The institute season will open November 19 with sessions in Dubois, Gibson, Brown, Crawford, Floyd and Switzerland counties. They will be held regularly, during the next three and one-half months, except during the holidays and during the annual farmers' short course at Purdue in January. Thirty-two institutes will be held during the remainder of November, 119 in December, 201 in January and 208 in February. They will reach every county in the state except Jasper, where other meetings have been held in the last few years.

Jeffersonville.—Served nominally by three railroads, Jeffersonville is not, it is said, getting the full benefit of more than one railroad, the Pennsylvania lines. A committee has been named by the Young Business Men's club to take up the matter. Mail arriving over the Big Four goes into Louisville and is sent back to Jeffersonville. The Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern railroad has discontinued its branch line into Jeffersonville from Watson and passengers must go to New Albany and come here by interurban.

Fort Wayne.—Fort Wayne felt the first pinch of the coal miners' strike when a decided reduction in street lighting was put into effect and something similar to the "lightless nights" of war times was brought about.

Richmond.—In order to reduce the consumption of coal at the city electric light and power plant the superintendent began a conservation program, the first move in which was to cut off all electric lights in show windows of business houses.

Indianapolis.—Frank N. Wallace, state entomologist and head of the state bee inspection staff, state conservation commission, has perfected an arrangement whereby the Holland-St. Louis Sugar company, Decatur, will supply Indiana beekeepers with sugar needed to keep bee colonies from starving.

Lebanon.—The Boone county board of education adopted resolutions protesting against the action of the state tax board in reducing school levies, as fixed by the local advisory boards of the several townships of the county, and demanding that such parts of the new tax law deprive the local officers of the right to fix the levies be repealed.

Logansport.—The city council of Logansport has passed an ordinance making the playing of cards in public places unlawful. The action was taken after Mayor Barnes had told members of the council that the conviction of gamblers under the old law was practically impossible as it was necessary for the prosecuting attorney to prove that money was won or lost in a game.

Columbia City.—Columbia City is on a lightless night basis. The superintendent of the city light and power plant says that there is a five weeks' supply of coal on hand. If the strike of miners continues and the supply is exhausted, the city will be in a serious condition as most factories here rely on electric power, and the schools and courthouse are heated by steam from the light plant.

Evansville.—Members of the national Presbyterian board of ministerial relief and sustenation who have been in session here announced that a new sanatorium will be built at the Thornton home for aged ministers at Newburg. A gift of $30,000 from Mrs. Jennie Glaze was accepted and as soon as $50,000 more is raised work on the first wing of the building will be started. The board will open a campaign at once to raise the necessary amount.

Lafayette.—Tippecanoe and surrounding counties expected a serious shortage of farm labor for corn husking this year, but farmers report that they will be able to get all the work done without any serious delay. The number of farm laborers is smaller than usual, but the state employment commission, working with the local branch of that organization, has succeeded in meeting the needs of the farmers in most cases.

Indianapolis.—Harry B. Smith, adjutant-general of Indiana, has turned the attention of his office to the formation of an Indiana National Guard. He said that as fast as companies can be formed in various Hoosier cities and pass federal inspection they will be accepted for the new Indiana National Guard. It will replace the state militia, an emergency organization formed just after the old National Guard was taken into federal service at the beginning of the war.

Lafayette.—Purdue university's school of agriculture has selected its cattle, sheep and hogs that are to be shown at the international live-stock exposition in Chicago next month. There is hope at the university that another grand championship may come to Purdue. The Purdue exhibits will include junior and senior classes of cattle, sheep and hogs. For two years Purdue has been the winner in the fat steer class. The hopes of victory this year are being pinned on Prince Royal or Monarch Ace.

Indianapolis.—Elections of town trustees and clerks were scheduled in 396 incorporated towns in Indiana the past week, but reports from over the state showed that in a number of places no tickets were named and consequently the present officers will hold over. There were contests in only a few places and the issues were local, failing to bring out but a light vote. The regular political parties had part in only a few towns, the tickets for the most part representing the Citizens and Independents.

Washington, D. C.—Charles J. Orbison, formerly circuit court judge at Indianapolis, has been named one of the committee of ten or twelve men, which will have charge of a survey to plan enforcement of the national prohibition legislation. Mr. Orbison is in Washington and has taken up his duties which are under supervision of the internal revenue bureau of the treasury department. Jouett Shouse, assistant secretary of the treasury, said Mr. Orbison probably would be appointed prohibition enforcement officer for Indiana. For the present his duties will be at Washington in connection with the formulation of the treasury policy toward enforcement.

East Chicago.—A semimilitary organization is being quietly perfected here under the name of the Indiana Harbor Vigilance corps, the purpose of which is to protect workers who want to work and to combat every form of radicalism and bolshevism. The plan is to organize ten companies of 56 men in each company. The companies are to be drilled and trained by men who served as commissioned officers in the world war. When trained and armed the men will assume charge of affairs in Indiana Harbor and enforce law and order to the letter.

GIRLS! DRAW A MOIST CLOTH THROUGH HAIR

Let "Danderine" save your hair and double its beauty

Oh, girls, such an abundance of thick, heavy, invigorated hair; a perfect mass of wavy, silky hair, gloriously fluffy, bright and so easy to manage.

Just moisten a cloth with a little "Danderine" and carefully draw it through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; this magically removes all dirt, excess oil and grease, but your hair is not left brittle, dry, stringy or faded, but charmingly soft, with glossy, golden gleams and tender lights. The youthful glints, tints and color are again in your hair.

"Danderine" is a tonic-beautifier. Besides doubling the beauty of the hair at once, it checks dandruff and stops falling hair. Get delightful Danderine for a few cents at any drug or toilet counter and use it as a dressing and invigorator as told on bottle.—Adv.

FOGGY?

If Bilious, Constipated or Headachy take "Cascarets."

Tomorrow the sun will shine for you. Everything will seem clear, rosy and bright. Your system is filled with liver and bowel poison which keeps your skin sallow, your stomach upset, your head foggy and aching. Your meals are turning into poison, gases and acids. You cannot feel right. Don't stay bilious or constipated. Feel splendid always by taking Cascarets occasionally. They act without griping or inconvenience. They never sicken you like Calomel, Salts, Oil or nasty, harsh pills. They cost so little too—Cascarets work while you sleep.—Adv.

KIDNEYS WEAKENING? BETTER LOOK OUT!

Kidney and bladder troubles don't disappear of themselves. They grow upon you, slowly but steadily, undermining your health with deadly certainty, until you fall a victim to incurable disease.

Stop your troubles while there is time. Don't wait until little pains become big aches. Don't trifle with disease. To avoid future suffering begin treatment with GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules now. Take three or four every day until you feel that you are entirely free from pain.

This well-known preparation has been one of the national remedies of Holland for centuries. In 1696 the government of the Netherlands granted a special charter authorizing its sale.

The good housewife of Holland would almost as soon be without food as without her "Real Dutch Drops," as she quaintly calls GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules. Their use restores strength and is responsible in a great measure for the sturdy, robust health of the Hollanders.

Do not delay. Go to your druggist and insist on his supplying you with a box of GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules. Take them as directed, and if you are not satisfied with results your druggist will gladly refund your money. Look for the name GOLD MEDAL on the box and accept no other. In sealed boxes, three sizes.

The New Motor Car

Overland

TRADE MARK REG.

The Greatest Improvement In Riding Comfort Since The Introduction of Pneumatic Tires

HERE is a brand new type of car. It solves the problem which has baffled automotive engineers—how to combine riding comfort with light weight and economy.

Our new Three-Point Cantilever Springs make this possible.

These are the first springs of their kind and they are made of chrome vanadium steel. They are exclusive with Overland.

Because of these springs, Overland 4 combines the riding qualities of large heavy, expensive, long wheelbase cars, together with the advantages and economy of small light cars.

With 100-inch wheelbase, Overland 4 has the luxurious riding ease of 130-inch Springbase.

The exclusive, Three-Point Cantilever Springs cushion the car so that it rides well on all roads: they reduce choppy rebounds and side swaying, protect the car from road shocks and prolong its life, minimize twisting or racking of frame and body, enable the car to hold the road better.

The car and passengers ride smoothly as though floating, free from road shocks that the springs ward off.

But this new riding comfort, possible only with these Three-Point Cantilever Springs, is but one of the advantages of Overland 4.

Its light weight makes possible great economy of gasoline and tires.

High quality materials insure durability. All vital parts of the front axle and steering gear and all highly stressed gears and shafts for driving the car are made of alloy steel.

The equipment list of Overland 4 is high grade, including Auto-Lite Starter and Lighting System—Electric Horn—Marshall Divan Upholstery Springs—Demountable Rims—Three Speed Transmission—Slanting Rain Vision Windshield—Tillotson Carburetor—U. S. L. Batteries and many other high quality conveniences.

In every respect Overland 4 is a quality car. The body is all steel, all enamel, the brightest, hardest, most lasting finish.

Overland 4 has been tested for two years and more than 250,000 miles over the Rocky Mountains, prairies, through deep mud and scorching deserts—through quick sharp climatic changes. As a result of these tests we were able to judge the car's performance under every condition and to perfect it before offering it to the public.

There is no previous car of any size or price to adequately compare with the character of service Overland 4 introduces.

The farther you ride in it the more you will appreciate it. Come in, see the car and ask for booklet. The demand will be greater than the supply for a long time.

Overland 4 Touring, $845; Roadster, $845; Coupe, $1325; Sedan, $1375. Prices f. o. b. Toledo.

Reduce H. C. of Living

At the International Live Stock Exposition in Chicago, the first week of December, an interesting course in Home Economics will be given under the direction of Catharine J. MacKay, dean of the Home Economics Department of the Iowa State College.

This department, always interesting, will provide instruction concerning the cooking and preparation of the cheaper and coarser cuts of meats which have to a certain extent, been neglected by the American housewife, whose training has not been with a view to utilization of portions of the carcass that during the period of beef, pork and mutton plentitude were not seriously regarded by many housekeepers. She will also help to solve the servant problem and show how to reduce the high cost of living.

The Home Economics Department of the 1919 International will be one of its most valuable features. The best talent available has been secured and those who attend will be abundantly rewarded.

Proposed Increase in Telephone Rates.

State of Indiana, ss: Before the Public Service Commission of Indiana.

In the matter of the application of The Saint Joe Telephone Co., of St. Joe Indiana, for authority to increase rates,

That application is hereby made for authority to increase rates of said applicant and to put into effect the following schedule:

Within the corporate limits of St. Joe, Indiana:

Private line Business telephone, per month	$1 60
Two party business telephone, per month	1 45
Private line, residence telephone per month	1 25
Two party residence per mo.	1 10
Private line not over ½ mile out side of corporation per month	1 60
Private line not over 1 mile out side of corporation per month	1 85
Private line not over 1½ mile outside of corporation per month	2 10
Rural party line not over 10 on a line, per mo	1 35
Extension bells standard No 127 type, per mo	15
Extension bells loud ringing No 392 type, per mo	25

For prompt payment at the office of the company or other designated place without statements or other notices a discount of 10 cents per month will be allowed provided that all bills for service previously rendered have been paid, and provided that such payment shall be made on or before the fifteenth day of the last month of each quarter, That is payment for January, February and March shall be made on or before March 15th., April, May and June on or before June 15, July, August and September on or before September 15th., and for October, November and December on or before December 15 Also the above rates are subject to a further discount of .05 cents per month if paid two full quarters (six months) in advance.

The rates now and heretofore in force and upon which service has been rendered by said petitioner, are as follows: One (1.00) dollar per month for all telephones both Business, Residence and rural on private and party lines except one private line business telephone in Wabash Ticket and Freight office one mile out of corporation at one dollar and fifty cents per month.

That said schedule of rates now in force are unreasonably low and inadequet and if continued in effect will continue to be unreasonably low and inadequet. That by reason of such inadequacy of said schedule of rates and by reason of the fact that the price of labor and material essential to the operation of said plant have substantially increased, and in order to enable petitioner to properly fulfill its obligations to furnish the public at St. Joe, Indiana with reasonably adequet and efficient service, the petitioner hereby applies for authority to place in effect and charge the foregoing rates.

Lutheran Basement Shower

Some weeks ago, Spencerville and vicinity received from the Lutheran Ladies' Aid, cards of invitation to a basement shower and chicken pie supper to be held November 15th., the proceeds to go toward furnishing tneir new church basement, and, with characteristic community spirit, on last Saturday evening, the people responded liberally with patronage and gifts of money and kitchen ware.

The basement looked its best in trimmings of red, brown and yellow crepe paper, and oak branches. A large white umbrella was suspended over the booth where the shower was expected. At the appointed time, the crowd began coming, and kept on coming with appetites large enough to satisfy even a Ladies Aider. The climax was reached when at a late hour, the Fort Wayne basket ball team came in, after the game in which they were beaten, and sat down to a lunch of all the good things that were left, which they thoroughly enjoyed, then passed the hat and turned over to the ladies, the contents, nearly $6.00, refusing any change. Truly the American boy is a great institution. The gifts included $69.00 in cash and $14.00 worth of kitchen utensilt. The givers included many many individual friends, and the Methodist Sunday School which sent two very valuable and appropriate gifts.

To date the occasion netted $148.00, but better even than the intrinsic value, is the good will of the community, and the fine spirit in which every thing was done. Every body seemed glad to help. The ladies heartily thank everyone who in any way contributed to the success and joy of the evening, and want the public to know that it has a standing invitation to participate in all the joys and privileges of the basement at any time.

The phonograph used during the evening was furnished by Elza R. Kinsey of St. Joe.

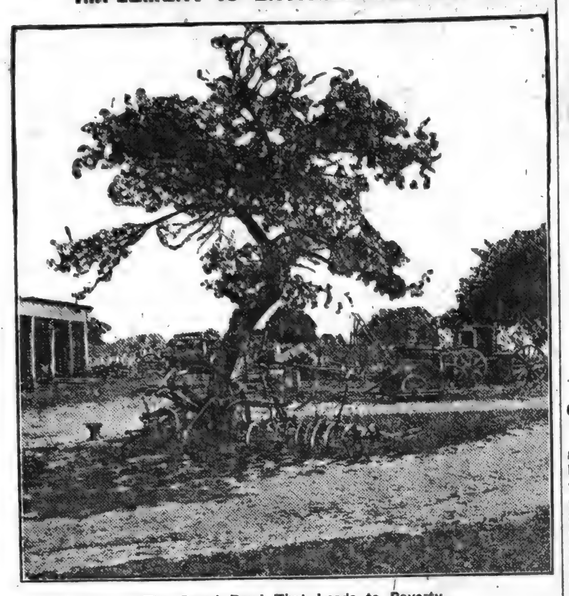
TO PREVENT DETERIORATION EVERY FARM IMPLEMENT IS ENTITLED TO PROTECTION



The Broad Road That Leads to Poverty.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Probably you do not believe that "the sins of the fathers are visited upon the sons, even to the third and fourth generations."

You wouldn't believe, perhaps, that leaving your plows and harrows in fence corners this winter without even greasing them may be a sign that spells poverty instead of prosperity for your grandson. It may not, but—well, listen to a story.

Two young men, brothers-in-law, took their wives, cows, horses, and plows into a new land in 1840. As pioneer farmers, they began with equal opportunities. Sixty-seven years later the writer had occasion to go over the two farms. The grandsons of the pioneers were operating them. One farm was a good one and the men who operated it, while not rich, were comfortable and contented. The other was a run-down, poor farm and its owners were constantly hard put to make ends meet.

The original owner of the run-down farm had been dead a great many years, but the man who pioneered on the prosperous farm was alive, 93 years old, physically active, mentally sharp as a briar. The writer, unable to see why there should be so much difference between two farms that were equally fertile to begin with, asked the old man how it came about.

Jimmie Was Careless.

"I don't know—well, I reckon I do too," he began. "Jimmie was a good man, but he was mighty careless. When he finished laying by his corn, he left his plow in the furrow and hung his gear on the beam or leaned them against a stump. When he started plowing the next spring, he had to dig his collar and hames out of the dirt, all muddy and rotten, and his plow was rusty and wouldn't scour."

Now, of course, this old gentleman was wrong in thinking that lack of shelter for his implements was the cause of his brother's failure, but he had pointed out an effect that was indicative of the cause, just as his own well-kept implement sheds were indicative of the cause of his own success. The brother's rust-pitted mold board merely went to show that he was a poor farmer all around.

The United States department of agriculture corroborates the testimony of the old gentleman in its general application. Good farmers, says the department, take care of their implements. They may not always find it convenient or profitable to build expensive sheds for their tools, but they will manage to protect them from moisture in one way or another.

Plow Is Neglected.

In this day of complicated machinery most farmers probably give little thought to the care of so simple an implement as a plow. But, says the department, more effort has been expended in the slow process of developing this seemingly simple tool than in that of any other implement on the farm. It is the basic tillage tool, the fundamental farm implement, it is richly entitled to be properly cared for when not in use.

When laid by, say the implement experts, the plow should, if possible, be stored in a dry place, away from contact with the ground. In any case the bright parts should always be coated with grease to prevent rust. Once the mold board and share have became pitted with rust, an efficient job of plowing cannot be done until the corroded parts again have acquired a polish by use.

The department of agriculture, of course, does not stop with the plow in its admonition in this regard. Harrows, also relatively simple but tremendously important implements, are, next to plows, most generally neglected. Many farmers who would not neglect an expensive harvesting machine, say the experts, are careless as to harrows and other implements of this type. But these, also, represent capital invested and a larger return is possible if they are properly cared for at the end of the season.

Support Harrow's Teeth.

If harrows are stored under a shed, the teeth should be supported by blocks and boards so that they will not become embedded in the ground. All accumulations of earth and trash should be removed. This is especially applicable to wooden frame harrows. The earthly accumulations retain moisture and accelerate decay. When the wooden parts have dried out sufficiently, they should be painted to prevent season checking and splitting. As the harrow works in wet earth and close to the ground, deterioration is rapid once checking has started.

If the disk harrow is stored in a shed or other floorless building, the disk gangs should be run upon boards so the disks will not become embedded in the ground. Whether housed or not, the implement should be carefully cleaned of all accumulations of soil and the disks should be greased with a heavy grease to prevent rust. The paint, particularly on the wooden parts, should be renewed frequently.

Care of Mowers.

Mowers, more generally than plows and harrows, are put under shelter, but many of them spend the winter at the edge of the meadow where the last cutting of hay was made, and in most cases they are not properly greased even when sheltered. Get the mower under shelter, if possible. In any case, clean the knife bar, wipe it with a greasy rag, and store in a dry place. Place a block of wood or other support under the mid-point of the tongue, so that it will not acquire a permanent sag. If the mower is stored with the cutter bar in a vertical position, place a block of wood under the shoe to take the weight off the frame. All accumulations of vegetable matter and dirt should be removed and all bearings and other bright parts of the machine oiled or greased. Much the same rules apply to reapers and binders.

The time to care for each implement is when its work is finished. Pressure of other work, however, frequently makes this inconvenient, but nothing should be allowed to interfere with getting all machinery greased, and, if possible, under cover before the beginning of winter. Then, as early in the winter as you can find time for it, go over every piece and see what repairs are needed. If new parts have to be ordered, order them at once. A great deal of valuable time is lost every spring waiting for repair parts to arrive from the city.

Cost of Machine Shed.

It should be borne in mind that the proper care of implements does not necessarily entail the expense of building costly implement sheds. The overhead cost of such structure often far exceeds any possible depreciation of implements through exposure to the weather. But such housing space as is available, and grease and paint should be used without stint. Any farm implement, with bearings and bright parts well protected with heavy grease, is better off out in the weather than standing in a shed without protection by grease or oil.

The United States department of agriculture has two bulletins—Farmers' Bulletin 946 and Farmers' Bulletin 947—devoted to the repair and adjustment of farm implements. With all implements safely sheltered for the winter, you have time to write for these bulletins and to use the information they contain in putting your implements and machines in the best possible condition for next crop season.

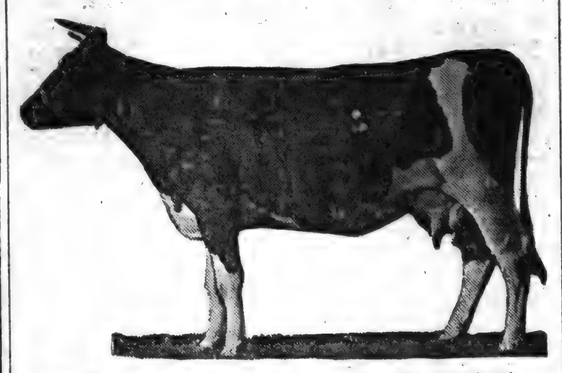
Rainy days are excellent times to put the tractor in shape for the next season.

FIX AND INSURE UNIFORM TRANSMISSION OF HIGH PRODUCTION IN DAIRY ANIMALS



Dam of Bull Used in University of Idaho Breeding Experiment.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

When two young bull aristocrats started out on a journey to their new home in Idaho recently, an experiment which will interest cattle breeders was started under way. These two bulls, both of which have enviable family trees, were sent to the University of Idaho—not to learn—but to teach, and the subject they will demonstrate is "The Best Method of Fixing and Insuring Uniform Transmission of High Production in Dairy Cattle."

Better Animals in Larger Numbers.

The shipping of these two bulls, one a Holstein and one a Jersey, was the first step in carrying out a co-operative experiment, undertaken by the dairy division of the bureau of animal industry, United States department of agriculture, and the department of dairying, University of Idaho. The object is not to improve the high producing dairy animals already in existence, but to determine a method of breeding that will produce the better animals in large numbers. When this method is determined and put to practical use, as it undoubtedly will be, it will result in a great advance to the dairy industry. It is the average production—the production of the rank and file—that counts, and this experiment is aimed at raising that average, rather than producing a few record breaking cows.

The experiment to be carried out at the University of Idaho is a part of a general plan for extensive breeding experiments, outlined by H. H. Graves of the federal department's dairy division. Other experiments similar to the Idaho project will be carried out directly with the herds of the dairy division and co-operatively with herds of state experiment stations and individual breeders. These experiments will fill a long felt need for a series of carefully planned tests, involving a large enough number of animals, and extending over a sufficient length of time to warrant accurate and definite conclusions as to the best method of breeding. While the need for this work has long been recognized, the cost of the work and organization required to handle it successfully has prevented private individuals from trying it.

A Unique Experiment.

In the Idaho experiment the following methods of breeding will be compared: In-breeding vs. out-breeding and line-breeding vs. out-breeding. As Holsteins and Jerseys predominate in the university herds, the Holstein will be used in the in-breeding and the Jerseys in the line-breeding work. No cross-breeding experiments will be attempted with these herds, but as this type of work is included in the general plan, it will be carried on with the herds of some other station or breeder.

According to the rather unique agreement with the University of Idaho, the dairy division will furnish the bulls used in the experiment, and the university will furnish the cows. The experiments will be carried out with the animals in the university herds, and not less than 12 females are to be used as the foundation herd in each experiment. The females and their progeny are to remain the property of the university, while the bulls will remain under the ownership of the bureau of animal industry. The university has agreed to stand the expense of feeding and caring for the bulls, and will retain all females produced in the herd until they have completed one lactation period so that accurate records will be had on the milk production, butterfat test, and date of calving for all daughters of each sire.

Why Results Will Be Valuable.

The results of the experiments should furnish excellent data for determining the relative value of in-breeding, line-breeding and cross-breeding since the same foundation animals will be the basis of both the in-bred and out-bred herds. This will make the in-bred animals comparable, generation by generation, with the out-bred animals. In like manner, the same foundation animals will be the basis of the line-bred and cross-bred herds making the line-bred animals comparable with the cross-bred animals.

The Jersey bull sent the University of Idaho is out of a daughter of Hillside Torono, a proved bull recently purchased to head the experimental herd owned by the government at New Iberia, La. Hillside Torono has three daughters with annual records of over 500 pounds of fat on two milkings daily and a number of good records in the making. Hillside Torono is sired by Pogis 99th of Hood Farm and out of Lass 57th of Hood Farm, the daughter of Hood Farm Torono. The dam of the bull was not tested this year but has been milking 85 to 87 pounds of 5.5 per cent milk a day—two milkings—with first calf. She will be tested next year. The sire of the bull is Hillside Emperor, a grandson of Hood Farm Torono and Pogis 99th of Hood Farm, so that he traces to those two sires on both his sire and his dam side.

In order to bring out the facts in regard to the breeding of these two bulls sent to Idaho it is obvious that the names of their various ancestors, together with their records, will have to be mentioned from time to time. In doing so it is not to be assumed that the dairy division indorses these animals as being necessarily the best animals of their respective breeds, and it is not expected that these remarks will be used for such a purpose.

Closely Inbred Holstein Bull.

The breeding of the Holstein bull is unique in that he is so closely inbred. His sire and his dam carry 87.5 per cent the same blood. The sire is a son of Friend Hengerveld De Kol Butter Boy, the sire of Banostine Belle De Kol, 1,058 pounds fat; Highlawn Hartog De Kol, 998 pounds fat; Daisy Grace De Kol, 962 pounds fat; Spotted Ann's Daughter, 871 pounds fat. The dam is also a daughter of this same sire. The sire of the bull is out of a daughter of Pontiac Aaggie Korndyke, four daughters over 900 pounds fat, as is also the dam of the bull, while the great granddams on both the sire and the dam's side are by Friend Hengerveld De Kol Butter Boy. The bull going to Idaho traces to this latter sire four times, twice on the sire's side and twice on the dam's side, and traces twice to Pontiac Aaggie Korndyke, once on the sire's side and once on the dam's side.

On account of the length of time required to complete such an experiment, results will not be known for a long time, but when the work is finally completed the conclusions arrived at should be of real value.

PRODUCTION OF LIVE STOCK

Among Essentials Are Tight Fields, Permanent Pastures and Leguminous Crops.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Where live stock is a factor on the farm, make every field hog-tight and sheep-tight; have thoroughly good permanent pastures; grow leguminous crops; build a silo, and keep only pure-bred males. These five things are absolutely essential in the economical production of live stock. Of course this program calls for some labor and expense, but the permanent condition of prosperity in the sections devoted to live-stock production is proof of the good profit derived therefrom.

SUPERIOR QUALITY OF MEAT

Hog That Loses in Weight Should Not Be Killed—Fat Gives Juiciness and Flavor.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A hog in a medium condition, gaining rapidly in weight, yields the best quality of meat. Do not kill a hog that is losing flesh. A reasonable amount of fat gives juiciness and flavor to the meat, but large amounts of fat are not essential.

BEST HOGS FOR BUTCHERING

Health Should Have First Consideration in Selection of Animals for Meat Supply.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

In selecting hogs for butchering, health should have first consideration. Even though the hog has been properly fed and carries a prime finish, the best quality of meat cannot be obtained if the animal is unhealthy.

LIVE STOCK NOTES

Cattle will not leave corn when fed in proper quantity for any other grain.

Fat ewes are too frequently not regular breeders, and carry their flesh because they did not raise lambs the previous year.

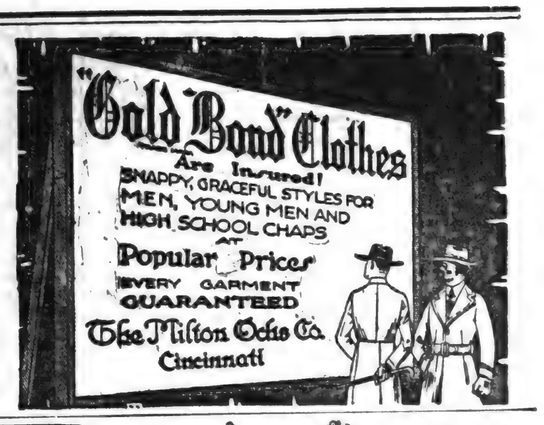
The good-shed ewe with a blocky conformation helps to make up a profitable lamb-wool-mutton combination.



IDENTIFIED HER ALL RIGHT

Tots Proved They Knew Principal, Though Their Explanation Might Have Been More Dignified.

Ned and Joseph, two tots in the first primary grade, had been fighting on the way home from school at noons. Their own teacher scolded them, but it did no good, for they fought again on the way home that very noon. The teacher went to the principal. "I want you to say something to them," she told her. "I'm sure they will be more impressed then."

That afternoon the principal did as she was asked. She talked long and earnestly on the evils of fighting, but neither of the culprits seemed the least bit moved. Finally she ended, "Now, I say you must not fight, and I mean it." Grimly she eyed them. "And you both know who I am—don't you?"

Both nodded their heads and Joe said cheerfully, "Why, you're the lady who rings the bell for the other teachers—aren't you?"

The Hard Heart.

George M. Cohan, during a lull in the theater strike, talked about the callous hearts of chorus girls.

"Oh, they've got callous hearts," he said. "I know a broker who proposed to one of them at a roof garden supper.

"'Miss Vavasour—Vivian—' the broker said, 'my feelings toward you are so tender, so very, very tender—'

"But Vivian Vavasour interrupted him with a hard little laugh.

"'Look here, Bill,' she said, 'it's legal tender I've got to see if we're going to do business.'"

The County Fair.

"How'd you come out in the live stock exhibit?" "Took first prize for steam tractors."

Love much and it makes lifting heavy loads easy.

Machine for Grain Inspectors.

Grain inspectors must know the exact amount of moisture in specimens submitted and a machine has been made to determine this in a thirty-minute test.

Cuticura for Sore Hands.

Soak hands on retiring in the hot suds of Cuticura Soap, dry and rub in Cuticura Ointment. Remove surplus Ointment with tissue paper. This is only one of the things Cuticura will do if Soap, Ointment and Talcum are used for all toilet purposes.—Adv.

A Curious Case.

"Here's a curious case."

"What's the matter?"

"Young woman of twenty-seven marrying an old man, past seventy!"

"Nothing peculiar about that—the old man is very rich I presume."

"That's the curious thing about it—he isn't; he's as poor as a church mouse."

Finds a Giant Spruce.

N. L. Carey, forest assistant in the Olympic national forest, has discovered what he believes to be the largest spruce tree in the world, says the American Forestry Magazine of Washington. It measures 16 feet in diameter 4½ feet above the ground. It is on the south side of the Solduck river. The top was broken off 150 feet above the ground.

Worse and Worse.

Miss Greene had been invited to be a bridesmaid at quite a smart wedding, and spent much time in planning her new frock.

At last it was ready, and when she tried it on, she asked Mrs. Jones, from next door, to come and see it.

"It's sweet, my dear!" said the good lady admiringly. "And certainly you look a lady, whatever you are."

Miss Greene's face told her she had made a mistake, so she corrected herself hurriedly:

"No. I mean you are a lady, whatever you look!"—London Answers.

STRANGE BEHAVIOR OF THE EXTRAVAGANT SLIPPERS.

Synopsis.—While in the little French town of Vevay, where the "staid, proper spinster" who tells the story is spending a vacation, she is asked to allow a young girl, Claire de Ravenol, to be her companion back to the United States. Although forming an attachment to the girl, the heroine takes a dislike to Monsieur de Ravenol, Claire's father, and declines. On the boat she finds Claire in the care of a casual acquaintance, Mrs. Delario, whom she had met while each was purchasing a pair of slippers, exactly alike, which figure largely in subsequent events.

Well, of course, I hadn't meant anything so serious as that when I spoke, but seeing that she was very much in earnest I let it pass and told her the story of the ring. It is a pleasantly romantic tale, the curious escapes from perils and sudden deaths coincident to the ring's possession giving you the feeling that it's lucky.

Mrs. Delario listened, and when I had finished she burst out, "I'm mad over gems—simply mad! It's been the dream of my life to own them in handfuls. You can't imagine the influence they have over me. I could sing—I could dance. They thrill me through and through. People don't generally think it, but gems are alive."

We had some discussion on this, rather flippant on my part, and it was this incident that started us talking gems and gem values, a subject that had been my pet delight since childhood when I learned the story of the ring that was one day to be my own. A few days later she came to my stateroom with a very mysterious air, said she had some stones she would like to have me value for her, and produced a package of topazes. She said she had bought them in a little town in Belgium.

I ran them through my hands, held a few to the light and in less than sixty seconds told her they were worth from ninety cents to a dollar apiece.

She was in high feather over it, saying she'd paid only a franc each for them. She next asked me to appraise the diamonds in a ring she wore. I gave her the value of the stones and the probable price that had been paid for it. She appeared so much impressed by my knowledge that she flatteringly said as she rose to leave me, "I'll know where to come if I ever need expert opinion on stones—and I may some day."

I didn't think anything of this at the time—people always say it to me out of politeness—and I no more expected her to call on me as a gem expert than I looked for her to call me as a physician or a lawyer or anything that I professionally wasn't. She knew I was a writer, for I was pegging away at "Belgian Byways" as hard as ever I could to get it ready in time for Blank's magazine—so much that I had to tell Claire frankly she mustn't bother me while I was working. I remember that I was quite sharp to her one morning, saying I should not be able to go out on deck with her till afternoon, and after she had left me, looking rather sad, I had to rush to my stateroom for my forgotten penknife, and there was Claire.

I confess it surprised me to see her there without invitation, but she excused it by saying that she thought I wouldn't mind—she'd grown so tired of her own stateroom and Mrs. Delario was always talking about people she didn't know—and wouldn't I, just out of pity, let her lie in my berth a while?

My suitcase was open in the berth. I took it out and stowed it; and then just out of pity I laid Claire down in its place and stayed with her. That one trifling act probably changed the course of my life; but I'm telling the story as it unwound its length and coiled its entangling meshes over the straight and narrow path my feet were treading.

It was because of our common interest in Claire that I saw a great deal more of Mrs. Delario than I otherwise should have done. It was on the last day out that she first mentioned her own children to me, saying that one reason why she'd been willing to take the responsibility of Claire was that she was so like her Lila, a girl of thirteen in a boarding school; and from Lila she went on to Eugene, who couldn't meet her at the steamer, unfortunately, because she'd come back two weeks early and he was in the West.

He seemed very near her heart, and after talking of him for half an hour she either warmed to it or let slip by accident, I couldn't tell which, the words, "It's the grief of my life—and of his, poor boy—that he detests my profession so. But what can I do?"

"Your profession! What is your profession?" I exclaimed, thrown quite out of my customary reserve in asking personal questions.

I thought she looked at me in a queer way, and I saw she hesitated to answer. I was on the point of apologizing for my inquisitiveness when she startled me by replying, "I'm a clairvoyant."

I was thrown off my reserve still more and couldn't help echoing, "A clairvoyant!" in actual astonishment, she was so different from what I'd have expected to find under the name. She added quickly, "I saw you didn't approve of—didn't believe in the occult the day we talked about your ring—and I've been at pains not to—not to bore you with talking shop, there are so many other interesting things that we have in common."

I didn't want her to feel uncomfortable and laughed to reassure her, "Oh, I'm not 'sot ag'in it'—to tell you the truth, I don't know a blessed thing about it, except what one picks up in the papers, and of course—"

She fairly took the words out of my mouth that I was at the moment trying to keep in—"Of course one gets prejudiced and looks on that sort of thing as—all fraud." There were both anger and a twinkle in her eye, as though she knew she'd caught me in the act, and then she added: "It's partly what I went over for—to look up some new mediums with a view to having them come to New York and give seances."

And from this she went on and described some of the phenomena she'd actually seen with her own eyes. For instance, a little peasant boy in the south of France—where, she left me to guess, and I fancied she didn't like to trust me with the secret—Jacques Lerolls, "whose phenomena were more wonderful than Eurapia Palladino's." He was a physical manifestation medium. He "was greater at ten years of age than Slade."

Still even Jacques Lerolls wasn't so wonderful as a young girl in Paris—she brought stones covered with dripping seaweeds out of the bottom of the ocean, and she had once brought a live bird into a locked room during a seance and had put it—after it had fluttered all about and everybody saw it—into a closed cage—"dematerialized it twice in one evening," said Mrs. Delario. This girl had only just begun to develop materialization as one of her phases.

I confess it struck me as Mrs. Delario talked and told me how she'd been trying to make arrangements for one of these persons to come over with her that she was getting up new turns in her own shows much as a vaudeville manager hunts up new performers for his. She asked me to visit her in New York, not professionally but as a friend, and still, if I were interested and would undertake some investigations, she'd be glad to help me, and I couldn't refrain from saying, "That is, you'll put me next to some first-class spooks?"

I think this rather hurt her, for she answered a little tartly, "You may not be interested now—but you will be. The occult is coming into your life and you can't prevent it. You'll get manifestations that will—at least that may—drive you almost insane if you're not prepared for them and don't know how to handle the forces that are already at work about you." And with that parting shot—that, of course, anybody might fire into you in self-defense or just to be a little nasty—she went away to Claire. And I'm going to confess right here that in spite of my skepticism I felt creepy.

I also felt clearer in my own mind on many little things I'd noticed about Claire: her coming to my stateroom that time; her constant hanging about me, even when she must have seen it was inconvenient for me to have her; and the way she seemed so much of the latter part of the voyage to be trying to keep away from Mrs. Delario, staying by herself in her stateroom. Had there been manifestations occurring in the stateroom? Or had Mrs. Delario been telling Claire things till she got the child so nervous the doctor was really serious over her?

Mrs. Delario was not at dinner that night and Claire left the table after the soup, and as I was busy packing I saw neither of them until morning, when all was bustle and excitement, for we'd passed the Statue of Liberty and were steaming up the bay and would be on dry land almost before we knew it. And then we were hanging over the rail and looking down at the friends of the passengers on the dock, and I heard Claire, in an agonized voice: "Mamma isn't meeting me!"

Claire began to cry, not boisterously but in a dreadfully pathetic, lost-child way, into a very beautiful French embroidered handkerchief, and all the customs inspectors gathered about her and she asked them each in turn if he'd seen mamma and described mamma, and he shook his head and told her he'd help her look for mamma in a minute as soon as he got the baggage inspected; and Mrs. Delario and I got our suitcases opened and made Claire open her bags and her trunk and we implored the inspectors to look at our meager belongings in a hurry and the inspectors were all too busy asking Claire what her mother looked like and what hotel she stayed at; and Claire would use her exquisite handkerchief on her more exquisite eyes and say she supposed it was Hotel d'Angleterre—they always stopped at d'Angleterres when they traveled. Finally I managed to induce an inspector to take his eyes off Claire for a minute and devote them to the baggage of a middle-aged person—myself—and he cast a glance over my suitcase and Mrs. Delario's, which was open on a bench beside mine, and said, "That's all right. Where does the young lady come from, and isn't it awful her mother isn't here, and maybe she's met with an accident on the way and been killed."

Claire heard him—and almost fainted into Mrs. Delario's arms.

Now just a moment before he said these words I noticed that one of the two pairs of turquoise-studded slippers had fallen between the two suitcases. I picked it up and I was on the point of asking Mrs. Delario if it belonged to her when Claire collapsed, and three seconds later I saw my cousin, who should have met me, coming up on the trot.

He made the first sensible suggestion that had been offered—that as Mrs. Delario had Claire in charge she'd better take the child home with her and cable to the father for instructions.

The slipper was all this while in my hand, and without giving it another thought—indeed, hardly being conscious what I did—I stuffed it in among some clothes in my own suitcase and shut the lid and away we went. Wasn't it, under the circumstances, a perfectly natural thing to do? Well, the moral is "don't"—don't every carry off an old slipper unless you're sure it's yours. That old slipper nearly cost me my sanity and my life!

Now, when I unpacked I found the slipper, but even then it didn't occur to me that it wasn't mine—I merely wondered how I'd lost the mate, and it was a couple of days before I got to the bottom of the other suitcase and found my own pair neatly done up in tissue paper. Of course I knew instantly that the old slipper was Mrs. Delario's, and remembered then how I'd carried it off; but I didn't have a box suitable for sending it through the mail to her, so I set it on a chest where I'd be sure to see it and not let it get mixed with mine, meaning to take it down to the house as soon as I could find time for it. And thus several more days went by, and I forgot the slipper and that Mrs. Jimmson was coming to clean. I somehow assumed that Mrs. Jimmson has sense enough to see it was an odd slipper and leave it on the chest where she found it, but you never can tell what anybody will do—perhaps she'd have done just the same if I'd told her not to: for she mixed those slippers up and set them in a row beside my bed along with oxford ties and bath slippers.

It was on the day that Mrs. Jimmson cleaned that Claire came tripping up to see me and tell me that her father had arrived.

It was the first time I'd seen her since we'd parted at the cable office, and of course I had to spare her a few minutes and hear what she had to say. She was staying with her father at a hotel—mamma hadn't yet come, because grandpapa was dying every day and she didn't dare to leave him. And then she suddenly wished to know if all Americans lived the way Mrs. Delario did, and did American ladies work?

I had to ask her what she meant, and she explained that everything at Mrs. Delario's was "so unlike the way they lived abroad;" that Mrs. Delario never left her bedroom unlocked for a single minute; that all the upstairs rooms were locked; that she made her—Claire—keep her door locked, "because," she said, "you never can tell;" that people, most of whom were strangers, were coming to the house all day from nine till five. Mrs. Delario called them "sitters" and gave them "readings" in an awfully queer room where the shutters weren't ever opened; and she—Claire—believed that Mrs. Delario took money for these readings, though she never would say what she read; and if she took money how could she be a lady? Though she was very nice and kind and papa wanted her to keep her—Claire—till her mother arrived, and Mrs. Delario wouldn't on account of her work, and what sort of work could it possibly be?

I saw by that that Mrs. Delario hadn't taken Claire much into her confidence—Claire said even her father couldn't guess what Mrs. Delario did, exactly, though he thought he knew a little, only he didn't know that ladies did it in America.

While I was considering what I'd better say the clock struck and I bounced out of my chair in a hurry—it was the hour of an appointment, and here I was five miles away, gossiping.

I told Claire I had to run, and she followed me to my bedroom while I got my coat, and it was she who exclaimed, "Why, there's Mrs. Delario's slipper! She's hunted everywhere for it. You picked it up at the customs house and put it in your suitcase."

"I'm the thief," I laughed, slipping on my coat.

Claire took a couple of steps toward the slippers and said, "I'll take it back to her."

"No, my dear—just leave it. I don't know which is hers—I see Mrs. Jimmson has mixed them all up—and I haven't time to find out now."

"Oh, I can soon tell," and Claire was about to pounce on them, but I headed her off.

"That's a matter for me to attend to, Claire, and entirely between Mrs. Delario and myself."

By this time I had on my veil and gloves, and hearing the elevator stopping at the floor, I shooed Claire and bolted for it.

Now I'd looked at the slippers as Claire spoke, and they were standing HEEL TO THE WALL, between a paid of oxford ties and a pair of bath slippers that were toe to the wall, as were all the rest but these three slippers; and I noticed this particularly and remembered it later coming home in the cars when the incident recurred to me, and I wondered why—since Claire was no longer with Mrs. Delario—she had been so anxious to take the slipper back, and if she needed an excuse—possibly—to her father for going to the house to see her friend, and how if it hadn't been for Mrs. Jimmson I could have let her take the slipper and been glad to have her do it; and how Mrs. Jimmson must have pleased herself in placing the slippers just that way, backs to the wall, so they'd show off to best advantage as works of art and decorate the room at large with their beauty; and how it must have puzzled her to find three slippers all alike in my room—not two, not four, but three; and why three? And what would the good creature say if I told her I'd stolen the odd one?

These thoughts may seem too trivial to mention, but the point is that I thought them and they were so obviously suggested by the way Jimmson placed the slippers, heel to the wall. But here's the uncanny thing that happened: When I got home one hour after seeing them that way and turned on the light my eyes fell upon the slippers—THEY WERE ALL TOEING THE WALL.

It gave me such a shock that I sat flop down on the bed. So far as I knew not a human soul had entered during my absence of one hour and some minutes, nor was there any evidence that anything else in the place had been touched—the other shoes stood toe to the wall just as I'd seen them when I went out with Claire.

It Was a Lucky Day for Mrs. Wiethoelter When She Read About Doan's

"I had such awful cutting pains in the small of my back and hips, I often had to cry out," says Mrs. Ernest Wiethoelter, 550 Madison St., St. Charles, Mo. "The pain was knife-like and I couldn't turn in bed, in fact I was almost helpless. My feet and ankles swelled badly, my hands were puffed up and there were swellings under my eyes. I often got so dizzy I had to sit down to keep from falling and my health was completely broken down. The kidney secretions pained terribly in passage and in spite of all the medicine I took, I kept getting worse until I was a wreck.

HEADACHE

Often Caused by

Acid-Stomach

Yes, indeed, more often than you think. Because ACID-STOMACH, starting with indigestion, heartburn, belching, food-repeating, bloat and gas, if not checked, will eventually affect every vital organ of the body. Severe, blinding, splitting headaches are, therefore, of frequent occurrence as a result of this upset condition.

Take EATONIC. It quickly banishes acid-stomach with its sour bloat, pain and gas.

It aids digestion—helps the stomach get full strength from every mouthful of food you eat. Millions of people are miserable, weak, sick and ailing because of ACID-STOMACH. Poisons, created by partly digested food charged with acid, are absorbed into the blood and distributed throughout the entire system. This often causes rheumatism, biliousness, cirrhosis of the liver, heart trouble, ulcers and even cancer of the stomach. It robs its victims of their health, undermines the strength of the most vigorous.

If you want to get back your physical and mental strength—be full of vim and vigor—enjoy life and be happy, you must get rid of your acid-stomach.

In EATONIC you will find the very help you need and it's guaranteed. So get a big 60c box from your druggist today. If it fails to please you, return it and he will refund your money.

Great Church Program.

Patriots among the Disciples of Christ, otherwise known as the Christian church or Christian Brotherhood, have inaugurated a drive for $25,000,000 to be applied to an extensive plan of practical Americanisation. Through the Christian Americanization Association, an investigation of Americanization problems occupying three months has been completed and the original plan to raise $1,000,000 for the extension of the International Bible College at Minneapolis, Minn., grew into a project to raise the larger sum.

This became necessary when it was decided to equip a chain of educational institutions extending from coast to coast, including a central Americanization university and to begin the process of Americanization with newly arrived immigrants at the principal ports of entry. This in addition to pursuing work among the 40,000,000 persons now in the United States who speak foreign languages.

There will be Americanization houses at the seaports receiving immigrants where the newcomers will be made comfortable immediately upon arrival. At these houses, trained workers speaking the native tongues of the immigrants will ascertain their intentions, ambitions and accomplishments. Through a bureau of industrial aid, men and women will be placed in occupations in which they have had experience or for which they are especially fitted.

Through a housing bureau, they will be guided to sanitary quarters far from the congested foreign settlements of the big cities where they would naturally turn to mingle with fellow countrymen who came before them, there to receive their first and worst impression of America.

Comfortably housed and profitably employed, the newcomers will be given an opportunity to learn the English language, home and political economy, hygeine and other useful subjects and will be so guided that old world traditions will be destroyed and American ideals substituted. Thus they will be able to improve their living and working conditions by a short cut process instead of the slow assimilation process which exposes them to sinister influences.

The Association, realizing the menace of Bolshevism and attendant disruption of American institution, will work with the idea in view that unless some good influence is exerted over the foreigner immediately upon his arrival in the country, he will be easy prey for radical agitators and others who would subject him to exploitation.

The Americanization houses in the interior cities will take up the problem of the foreigners now in the slums of the large centers, offering day and night classes of a more advanced nature than those for the newcomers but developed along the same lines with Christian citizenship as the goal.

It is the aim of the Christian Americanization Association to establish an Americanization club in every Christian Brotherhood church to aid in the campaign.

Rev. A. N. McCallum of Seattle, Wash., is president of the Association and Judge M. C. Tifft of Minneapolis is treasurer. Headquarters have been established at 829-830 Monadnock Building, Chicago and city, town, county and state organizations are now in process of formation.

Letter From Peterson's.

South Connellsville, Pa.
Nov. 17, '19.

Mr. Fred B. Leighty,
Dear Sir:

We arrived here Wednesday November 12, at 3 a. m., pretty well tuckered out. Mrs. Peterson stood the trip much better than I, but I am getting rested up and begin to feel fine. I think the mountain air and the soft mountain spring water will benefit me greatly, as I can already begin to feel its influences. I can sit here in our room at our son's home and look away up on the mountain covered with treee, and they tell me the mountains here are inhabited with many deer and many bears. It does seem strange that almost within gun shot of the city, so many wild animals abound. Some day, after I have become more familiarised with the surroundings here, I will send you a little description of the mines, coke ovens, rocks, mountains, etc. We are not far from the western line of Maryland, and only the Mongahala River seperates this county and West Virginia, (the southeast part of W. Va.

We left St. Joe the morning of the 11th. and got here at 3 a. m. the 12th. Our son Emmet met us at McKeesport and had a taxie waiting for us at the depot here and although it was so late when we drove up to the house, there was a yard full to meet us. We are very very pleasantly situated here at the foot of the Allegheney mountains, where the mountain storms will not effect us.

Business seems to be booming here, especially on the railroads, (this is a division of the B. & O.) Our two boys, both conductors, are out and in having only the eight hours rest allowed to them till they have to go again.

Well, Fred, some day I will take more time and write a longer letter.

Yours truly,
Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Peterson.

Dainty Little Christmas Gifts in Cretonne

By DOROTHY PERKINS

Dainty gifts covered in cretonne are certain to find a welcome in any household, and such a variety of things can be made that you will have no difficulty in filling a want of each one whom you wish to remember on Christmas day.

The unique pair of book ends in Fig. 1 are made of sirup cans. The secret of making satisfactory book ends is to properly weight them so they will not upset, and the book ends illustrated are weighted by filling the cans with sand.

Cretonne with small patterns is the most desirable for small articles, and patterns with dark backgrounds are preferable for articles such as the book ends, which are likely to soil through much handling. Sew a piece of cretonne around the sides of each can, then by means of a gathering string gather the cloth as indicated in Fig. 1. Sew a fancy button, or a cretonne covered button, to the center of the top.

Fig. 2 shows a handy twine holder made of a sirup can. A hole must be pierced through the exact center of the can bottom as an outlet for the string (A, Fig. 3), and holes one-half inch apart must be pierced through the top rim to provide a means of fastening the top edge of the cretonne. The holes can be perforated by means of a nail and hammer. Gather the cretonne on the bottom, and turn the top edge over the rim and sew through the perforations in the rim.

Make a hanger for the twine holder out of cretonne or ribbon.

Hanging Workbox.

The hanging workbox in Fig. 4 requires a square cardboard box. Remove two adjacent sides of both the box and cover (Fig. 5), then stitch the cover to the box (Fig. 6). The cretonne may either be stitched over the open edges of the box, or be glued to the cardboard. Sew a doubled strip of cretonne, or a ribbon, to the open corners for a hanger.

'Phone Directory.

The dainty telephone book in Fig. 7 provides a handy directory for numbers used frequently, and numbers which may be wanted quickly in cases of emergency. The covers are of cardboard 6 inches wide and 8 inches long, and are hinged together by the cretonne covering. Lap the cretonne over the edges as indicated in Fig. 8, and glue it to the cardboard, and make a pocket on one edge, to hold a pencil. Cut sheets of writing paper of the right size to extend a trifle over the lapped edges of the cretonne, and glue them in place; then divide the paper into spaces, and index the spaces (Fig. 9). A fancy work ring provides a hanger.

HOME-MADE ORNAMENTS FOR THE CHRISTMAS TREE.

By A. NEELY HALL.

Suppose that you prepare some homemade Christmas-tree ornaments like those in the illustrations, to go with the ornaments which you have, for this year's tree. They will help to cover the tree, and, not only that, they will make your tree more interesting because they will be different from anything you can buy.

The pretty spear top ornament in Fig. 1 is made of a sheet of letter-paper rolled into a cornucopia, with a thread spool glued in the open end (Figs. 2 and 3), and a small silk-spool slipped over the small end (Figs. 3 and 4); then all is covered with tinfoil, and a tassel made of pieces of red, white and blue paper, slashed into fringe (Fig. 5), is fastened in the apex. Tinfoil can be obtained from a florist.

Unless you can have electric lights, it is better not to light the tree at all than to run the risk of its catching fire. But unlit candles make pretty ornaments, so I have shown a homemade holder in Fig. 6. This is made by wrapping a clothespin with tinfoil so the upper edge of the tinfoil projects to form a cup for the candle (Fig. 8). Wrap the end of the candle with tinfoil to make it fit the cup (Fig. 7). The clothespin sets down over the tip of a branch, as shown in Fig. 6, and the weight made of a marble or piece of clay, wrapped in tinfoil (Fig. 9), is suspended by thread from one leg of the clothespin (Fig. 6), to balance the holder.

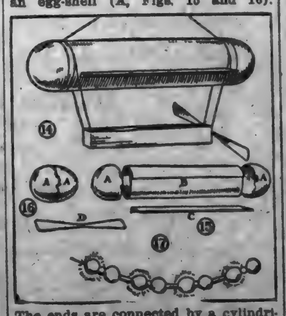
Little Santa Claus dolls like that shown in Fig. 10, to straddle the tree branches, are pretty and easily made. The bodies are clothespins, with trouser legs of red paper (A, Fig. 11) slipped over the ends (Fig. 12), a red paper coat (B and C, Fig. 11), glued close to the head of the pin (Fig. 13), cotton whiskers (D, Fig. 11), a red paper peaked hat (E), and eyes marked with ink upon the clothespin head.

The airship in Fig. 14 has a balloon with ends made of the halves of an egg-shell (A, Figs. 15 and 16).



The ends are connected by a cylindrical piece (B) rolled out of cardboard, to which they are glued; and a strip of cardboard (C) is glued along each side. The car is a small box, and the propeller (D) is pivoted to its end with a pin. Threads suspend the car from the balloon, and others suspend the balloon from the Christmas tree. Paint the balloon red and the car yellow.

Probably you have prepared colored popcorn strings, but I wonder if you have made strings of cranberries and glass beads? Fig. 17 suggests a way to alternate the beads and cranberries so they will present the form of glass ball strings. To make the cranberries sparkle like glass balls, coat some with glue and sprinkle with the powdered mica sold for imitation snow, and gild others with gold bronze—the kind sold for decorating radiators, or wrap in tinfoil.

PUBLIC ROADS

FINISH OLD NATIONAL ROAD

Completion of Highway Now Under Contemplation After Lapse of Nearly Century.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A project under the federal aid road act, filed with the bureau of public roads, United States department of agriculture, which will undoubtedly hold the record for length and cost for some time to come, is of unusual interest aside from its great length and cost. It contemplates, after the lapse of nearly a century, the completion of the Old National road, extending from the Potomac to the Mississippi, which already has been largely improved as far west as the Indiana line. The Illinois improvement will extend from East St. Louis across the state to the Indiana line, traversing St. Clair, Madison, Bond, Fayette, Effingham, Cumberland and Clark counties.

The proposed type of surface is monolithic brick and concrete pavement, the average cost of which is about $30,000 per mile. The proposed improvement includes also the construction of 40 bridge structures, of lengths ranging from 22 feet to 300 feet. At present the uncompleted portion of the highway is generally an unimproved earth road, which becomes nearly impassable at certain seasons of the year. There are, however, near some of the villages, short stretches of macadam pavement, generally in very poor condition. The local traffic consists of approximately 60 trucks, 700 motor vehicles and 50 horse-drawn vehicles per day, to which is added during the summer months a through traffic of about 20 trucks and 200 passenger motor vehicles.

PLANT TREES IN MICHIGAN

Stock to Be Distributed at Nominal Cost by State Agricultural Institution.

A law was recently passed by the Michigan legislature for the encouragement of the planting of fruit and nut-bearing trees along the highways of that state. Stock is to be distributed at nominal cost by the state agricultural college to local officials and private individuals who will set it out, under the supervision of the state highway commission.

Whoever has traveled over the tree-lined highroads of Europe will greet with satisfaction this measure as the beginning of a policy of combining esthetic and economic values in our methods of road-building.

TOWNSEND BILL IS FAVORED

Measure Introduced by Senator From Michigan Calls for Appropriation of $425,000,000.

Of forty or more bills on various highways plans introduced in congress, the most important is that introduced in the senate by Senator Charles E. Townsend of Michigan, chairman of the senate post office and post roads committee. It calls for an appropriation of $425,000,000, for the construction of a federal highways system, providing that within five years 25,000 miles of federal highways shall be constructed, to which the highways systems of the various states and counties can connect. To carry on this ambitious project it provides for a nonpartisan commission of experts to be appointed by the president.

Economic Value Is Great.

The economic value of improved highways is far greater than their military importance. This fact was conclusively demonstrated while we were engaged in the war.

Tractors Do Fine Work.

Gasoline tractors hitched to road machinery do fine work cheaply and quickly.

Now a Valuable Citizen.

A good highway man is now a valuable citizen.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Teacher of English Bible in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1919, Western Newspaper Union)

LESSON FOR NOVEMBER 23

JESUS CORRECTS JOHN'S NARROWNESS.

LESSON TEXT—Luke 9:46-56.

GOLDEN TEXT—Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity.—Eph. 6:24.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL—Mat. 18:1-35; Mark 9:33-42; 10:13-16.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus and the Children.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus the Friend of Children.

INTERMEDIATE TOPIC—Hasty and Narrow Judgments.

SENIOR AND ADULT TOPIC—True and False Liberality.

I. Jesus Teaches True Greatness (vv. 46-48).

1. The occasion (v. 46). A contention among the disciples as to who should be the greatest. Jesus had just announced his coming death on the cross, admonishing them to let his sayings sink down into their ears (v. 44). They were disputing among themselves as to who would be the biggest man in the kingdom. The imagination cannot depict a condition where rebuke and teaching were more needed.

2. The method (v. 47). He "took a child and set him by him." Teaching by object is one of the best of methods. In this Jesus showed himself to be the master teacher. Christ was qualified to meet the supreme need of all teaching, namely to know the pupil and to translate knowledge into terms adapted to the comprehension of the pupil. He perceived even the thoughts of the disciples and met their need. When they were conscious of his knowledge of them they were ashamed (Mark 9:34).

3. The teaching (v. 48). (1) "Whosoever receiveth this child in my name receiveth me." So completely is Christ identified with those who are childlike in spirit that he regards treatment of them as treatment of himself. (2) "Whosoever receiveth me receiveth him that sent me." Christ and the Father are one, therefore whatsoever attitude one has toward Christ he has toward God. Rejection of Christ is rejection of God. (3) "He that is least among you all, the same shall be great." The one who in self-forgetful service takes the lowest place is truly the great one. This is the supreme law of Christian discipleship. In Jesus we see the one who was incomparably great identifying himself with humanity.

II. Religious Intolerance Rebuked (vv. 49, 50).

1. The case cited (v. 50). The disciples saw one casting out devils in Christ's name, but because he refused to follow them they forbade him. This spirit is liable to seize those who are really zealous for Christ. It often expresses itself against those who do not belong to one's particular church or sect. In determining whom we should admit to fellowship two questions only need be asked (1) Are devils really being cast out? (2) Are they being cast out in the name of Christ? The plain implication of Christ's words in Matthew 7:22, 23 is that one may even cast out devils and be a stranger to the Lord. There is a supernatural work which is not divine, so unless the mighty works are done "in the name" of Christ a Christian should not fellowship the miracle worker.

2. The principle declared (v. 51). "He that is not against us is for us." This truth is positively stated in Luke 11:23, "He that is not with me is against me." When it comes to man's attitude toward Christ there is no neutrality.

III. Resentment Rebuked (vv. 51-56).

1. Farewell to Galilee (v. 51). As the time had come for him to be received up he set his face to go to Jerusalem. The time of his sacrifice was come and Jerusalem was the place where it was to be accomplished.

2. The Samaritans refused to receive him. (vv. 52, 53). This refusal was due to the impression that he was going to Jerusalem. Their national prejudices were so strong that they regarded his action as a national insult, therefore refused hospitality to him.

3. James and John vehemently resent this action of the Samaritans (v. 54). They regarded it as an insult to their Lord. Their love was so vital that an affront to the object of their affection was most bitterly resented.

4. The Lord's rebuke (vv. 55, 56). (1) "Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of." He did not minimize the insult or question their motive. He who knew their hearts was aware that they were moved by love for him. He told them, however, that such insults were not to be met by violence. Religious persecutions are always wrong. The spread of truth is not to be by means of material weapons. (2) "For the Son of Man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them."

A Fiction.

That God being good is the author of evil to anyone, that is to be strenuously denied, and not allowed to be sung or said in any well-ordered commonwealth by old or young. Such a fiction is suicidal, ruinous, impious.—Socrates, in Plato's "Republic."

The Law of God.

Wealth is a weak anchor, and glory cannot support a man; this is the law of God, that virtue only is firm, and cannot be shaken by a tempest.—Pythagoras.

Where Most Sickness Begins and Ends

BY LEE HERBERT SMITH, M. D.

It can be said broadly that most human ills begin in the stomach and end in the stomach. Good digestion means good health, and poor digestion means bad health. The minute your stomach fails to properly dispose of the food you eat, troubles begin to crop out in various forms. Indigestion and dyspepsia are the commonest forms, but thin, impure blood, headaches, backaches, pimples, blotches, dizziness, belching, coated tongue, weakness, poor appetite, sleeplessness, coughs, colds and bronchitis are almost as common. There is but one way to have good health, and that is to put and keep your stomach in good order. This is easy to do if you take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It is a wonderful tonic and blood purifier, and is so safe to take, for it is made of roots and herbs, and is without alcohol. Dr. Pierce of Buffalo, N. Y., stands behind this standard medicine, and it is good to know that so distinguished a physician is proud to have his name identified with it.

Frankfort, Ind.—"About a year ago my system required a tonic and blood-purifier, so after reading a little pamphlet I decided to try Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. This medicine I consider to be a very efficient tonic and blood purifier, and am therefore glad to recommend it."—Henry Simmons, 305 W. Morrison St.

Indianapolis, Ind.—"I am most pleased to say for Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery that I like it as a spring medicine. I was employed in a cloak house and used it for a toning-up medicine. As a general tonic I know of nothing better."—Mrs. G. P. Beeson, 733 Elm St.

Warns Influenza Will Come Back in More Dangerous Form

Dayton, O.—Declaring that people gained nothing from their experience with the ailment in 1918 and 1898, Dr. W. A. Evans, prominent health authority and writer of Chicago, today predicted that the world would again be swept by an epidemic of influenza far more severe and disastrous than last year, when thousands of lives were lost. The only way it can ever be alleviated or exterminated is by following the advice of the medical world.

Influenza can be prevented; last year's results prove that. As a preventive for flu, Turpo has been a pronounced success. Turpo is an effective germicide, combining the old-fashioned remedies of turpentine (which has always been known as the best home germicide), camphor and menthol in a pure mineral base. These ingredients have long been recognized as effective germicides, as well as having really wonderful qualities in relieving colds and congestions. Snuff a little Turpo up the nostrils several times a day and the flu germs will have little chance of getting a lodging and breeding place. Many physicians and hospitals use and recommend Turpo. Buy a thirty cent jar of Turpo, while your druggist has a supply on hand, and use as directed. Last year druggists could not supply the demand. Remember that Turpo is a preventive, not a cure for influenza. Take care of yourself and if, in spite of your precautions, you think you have the flu, go to bed at once and call a doctor.—Adv.

Catarrhal Deafness Cannot Be Cured
by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Catarrhal Deafness, and that is by a constitutional remedy. HALL'S CATARRH MEDICINE acts through the Blood on the Mucous Surfaces of the System. Catarrhal Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result. Unless the inflammation can be reduced and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing may be destroyed forever. Many cases of Deafness are caused by Catarrh, which is an inflamed condition of the Mucous Surfaces.

INDIANA State News

Shelbyville.—Farmers of Washington township, Shelby county, at a meeting held at Lewis Creek, adopted resolutions opposing hunting on Sunday. They agreed that all hunters found in that township on Sundays shall be prosecuted whenever found.

Indianapolis.—L. Ert Slack, United States district attorney, has sent to the attorney general at Washington a request that he be relieved as district attorney when his term expires, January 10, 1920, or as soon thereafter as the business of the office will permit.

Terre Haute.—All of the 236 students of Rose Polytechnic institute here were suspended because they missed classes on Armistice day without authority. A notice was posted to the effect that they must report individually to President John White for reinstatement.

Indianapolis.—Only one person serving a life sentence for murder is involved in the 15 new cases filed with the state board of pardons for consideration at the next session during the week starting December 1. The docket is the lightest the board has had in the last two years.

Huntington.—Farmers of Huntington county, who expect to be associated with the Indiana Federation of Farmers' Associations, met and formed a Huntington county unit of the state organization. They showed themselves to be in favor of a standard ten-hour day, and having the prices of everything based on a standard production of ten hours.

Indianapolis.—Approximately 10,000 empty coal cars have been located at the mines in the Indiana field so that maximum operation will not be impeded by car shortage, E. I. Lewis, chairman of the public service commission, was informed by railroad officials. With the cars in position fuel can be forwarded to public utilities rapidly, Mr. Lewis was told. There are enough empty cars at the mines to insure 100 per cent production, according to the railroad officials.

Gary.—Approximately 13,000 men are now at work in the various steel plants in this city as against about 15,000 employed in the mills when the steel strike was called. Practically every department of the big Gary mills are now in normal operation, it is said by mill officials, and additional men are returning to the plants every day. Picketing has been discontinued and strike leaders have practically given up all hope of winning the strike so far as this city is concerned.

Indianapolis.—Governor Goodrich said that after much sifting of proposals the commission he appointed some time ago to select a site for a state feeble-minded colony farm has arrived at serious consideration of three sites. One site includes 2,500 acres at $60 an acre in Jennings county; another, 1,200 acres, at $110 an acre, in Lawrence county, and the other 1,000 acres, at $150 an acre, in Warrick county. Each site has qualities adaptable to such a state institution as is proposed, it is said.

Anderson.—Alfred Ellison, a Democrat, formerly judge of Madison circuit court, and Oswald Ryan, a Republican, formerly prosecuting attorney of Madison county, have been appointed by L. F. Pence, judge of Madison circuit court, to assist the state in the trials of Forset Agnew and Homer A. Kimberlin, charged with violation of the election law. They were accused in an affidavit filed by John E. Beeler, a local Republican lawyer, during the recent contest of the election of W. S. Ellis, as judge of Madison county superior court.

Aurora.—The Aurora Loose Leaf Tobacco Warehouse company will start selling December 16. The early cutting is curing up nicely and some has been stripped. The large growers will make an effort to market their tobacco as early as possible. They say the market will not last as long as the one last season. The crop is short. Kyte J. Story, living on Tanners creek, says the ground from which he cut his crop of tobacco in August yielded a crop of suckers, which he has housed, and that he received two crops of tobacco from the same land this season.

Indianapolis.—A. H. Hinkle, for many years in charge of the maintenance department of the Ohio state highway commission, has been appointed chief engineer in charge of maintenance for the Indiana state highway commission. Mr. Hinkle will assume his new position about December 1. He will receive a salary of $5,000 a year. Mr. Hinkle will devote the winter months to the organization of the new department, and in the spring will take over the maintenance of the 3,200 miles of roadway comprising the state highway system.

Fort Wayne.—Alleging that by debarring him and all other osteopaths and chiropractors from practicing at St. Joseph hospital his business has been greatly damaged, Dr. Kent L. Seaman, local osteopathic physician, filed suit for $50,000 damages against the hospital staff.

Hagerstown.—Farmers of this county who for many years have made a study of weather indications, predict a mild winter season, basing their opinion on the fact that the husks covering the ears of corn are loose and thin. This condition of the husks, they claim, is an infallible sign.

Alexandria.—Despite the wet condition of the fields many farmers in Monroe township have completed breaking ground for the spring planting. Hundreds of acres of corn await the huskers.

Jeffersonville.—Improvements are to be made immediately at the Indiana Reformatory here which will bring the institution to a point where 1,000 men can be handled. There are at present 700 inmates.

Indianapolis.—Governor Goodrich issued the annual Thanksgiving day proclamation, in which he calls on Indiana citizens to be thankful, particularly because of the fact that the people of America have proved themselves greater than any group or class of men among them.

Indianapolis.—Dr. L. E. Northrup, state veterinarian, has called to the attention of the public the rule of the state live stock sanitary board requiring the cleaning and disinfecting of trucks before leaving public stock yards. Doctor Northrup believes that enforcement of the rule will help to check disease among live stock.

Petersburg.—Turnips are selling at $2 a bushel, the highest price ever paid for turnips in this locality. The crop is short. Farmers are selling corn damaged by recent rain to hog raisers, as the swelled corn makes good hog feed, but it will not keep and must be gathered and fed at once. Rats have deserted the river bottoms and hill farms are alive with them.

Indianapolis.—Mrs. F. B. Clark of Indianapolis was re-elected president of the Woman's Home Missionary Society, Indiana conference, at the annual meeting here. Other officers were elected as follows: Mrs. W. S. Ennes, Princeton, first vice president; Mrs. John L. Benedict, Indianapolis, second vice president; Mrs. Alfred Stratford, Indianapolis, recording secretary, and Mrs. E. B. Poundstone, Rushville, treasurer.

Bloomington.—Proceedings of the annual financial meeting of the board of trustees of Indiana university were recently announced by J. W. Cravens, registrar, the report including information which had not previously been made public. According to figures submitted to the board, the present enrollment at the university is 3,637, an increase of 427 over last year and the largest enrollment in the history of the school.

Richmond.—After a trial lasting more than a week, 15 men, charged with participating in a riot here last August, were found guilty by a jury in the Wayne circuit court here. Seven others who were indicted by the grand jury which investigated the disturbance, previously had pleaded guilty. No sentences of imprisonment were imposed, the jury assessing fines only, ranging from $15 and costs to $100 and costs.

Indianapolis.—Glenn Van Auken, member of the public service commission, has prepared an opinion in which he says the 1919 amendment to the public utilities act is invalid. The amendment is the one requiring the restoration of free service agreed on in franchises which had been invalidated in such part by the 1913 act creating the commission. The opinion was prepared in the case of the Indiana General Service company at Marion.

Newcastle.—School authorities here believe the state board of education has been misinformed, or did not know all facts in the case when it ordered a revocation of the certificate of equivalency of the Spiceland academy, a private school at Spiceland, this county, under the direction of the Friends church. The board ordered the commission revoked at a meeting on the ground that the school had received money illegally for the transfer of pupils from the township.

Indianapolis.—The state board of tax commissioners virtually has cleared its docket of bond issue petitions. Only a few cases remain to be adjusted. The last to be acted on included the petition of Cass county, Eel township, for a $175,000 bond issue for the Zook road, which the board rejected, and the following which the board approved: Boone county, Marion township, Clark road, $10,000; Newby road, $6,800; Bell road, $3,500; Perry township, Shirley road, $22,000; Shelby county, Van Buren township, Baring road, $7,620; Bowman road, $14,080.

Greencastle.—Indiana's highway commission law was, in effect, held constitutional here by James P. Hughes, judge of the Putnam circuit court. His action was taken in sustaining demurrers against a suit filed by James C. Campbell and others, in which they attacked the legality of the measure and asked that the state commission be restrained from improving certain roads in Clay county. The case, which made the members of the commission defendants, attacked the validity of the measure and sought to restrain the highway body from improving the National road, through this county and Clay county, with concrete. The suit was brought here from Clay county on a change of venue.

Indianapolis.—The state board of education recommends "that the subject of health and hygiene be taught in Indiana public schools whenever and wherever, in the judgment of school officers, the advancement of pupils require it and when conditions generally justify it."

Indianapolis.—One hundred thousand acres of southern Indiana corn have been badly damaged, and 20,000 acres will be a total loss, because of recent floods, according to the weekly report issued by the co-operative crop reporting service.

RASCALS
Biliousness, Headache, Colds, Constipation, driven out with "Cascarets"

Why take nasty cathartics, sickening salts, or stomach-turning oils to drive these rascals out? Let gentle, harmless Cascarets remove the liver and bowel poison which is keeping your head dizzy, your tongue coated, your skin sallow, your breath offensive, and your stomach sour. Get a box of Cascarets at the drug store and rid your liver, stomach and bowels of the excess bile, poisons, and waste which are keeping you miserable. Cascarets never gripe, never sicken, never inconvenience. They cost so little and work while you sleep.—Adv.

Backache only a Symptom
"It Seems as Though my Back Would Break."
This is a common expression among women, yet they toil on day after day heedless of the significance of this distressing symptom.
Backache is often a warning of some inward trouble that requires attention, and which unless relieved will sooner or later declare itself in more serious ailments.
If it is caused by female derangement Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is what you need. It quickly asserts its curative powers in all those peculiar ailments of women.
For more than thirty years this good old fashioned root and herb medicine has been restoring American women to health.

SundaySchool Convention.

On Sunday afternoon one of the best township Sunday School conventions was held at the Christian Church in which nothing but local talent had part, that had been held for a long tim , and one from which it is hoped more good will come. The president, John N. George, called the convention to order. Rev. Johnson had charge of the music, the opening song "The Banner of the Cross" was followed by a number of young ladies singing "A Perfect Day." J. R. Shilling read the scripture lesson from Isiah 53rd chapter. Prayey by Mrs. A. K. Mumma. Song "Some Day I Shall Understand," Felix Manley The first address was given by Rev. T. A. Manley, "Why A Sunday School," a few points from his address follow: "The Sunday School is not the childrens' church or the adults church but an auxiliary to the regular church services. That it is better to say a 100% Bible School at church services than tell the number at Bible School. That the Bible School should be made more than an assembly as it is where characters are made or blasted. Bible schools have splendid opportunities to make good men and women. He is opposed to a school reaching minimum standards but should strive to give "good measure" standards. The Bible School is the church at work, the educational agency of the church and is to prepare men and women for larger living." Discussion was led by Rev. A. K. Mumma who said "The Sunday School was to get boys and girls acquainted with God, that it was the nursery of the church run by the church membership." Mary other good things were said by both gentlemen. Song "Loyalty to Christ." Address Rev. C. O. Johnson, "The Township Sunday School and Community Service." The first thing was to "get a real intelligent need of the community in which we live. Spoke of some of the evils of our community, said the task of the Bible School was to build character. The church gives three hours a week to its members and the world has the rest of the time. He believes the Sunday School is doing all it can in time allotted but we are failing to meet the needs of the times. The second thing was to establish a community house under proper supervision to take care of the social life of the people of the community especially the boys and girls, to be open all day and in the evening and that it should be equipped in such a way as to make it attractive and that the young people would feel it was theirs, and third, to have a definite and thorough understanding of the thing we are trying to do." The discussion was led by J. B. Haifley who was heartily in favor of a community house. That a committee be appointed the three ministers to be chairmen to take under advisement this civic improvement, also two members from each of the four churches and a member from each organization in town to work with them. Rev. Mumma made a motion to that effect which was seconded by F. B. Leighty. In the remarks following Rev. Johnson requested only one member from each church and again Mr. Haifley suggested 1 member and the pastors of each church constitute this committee. Mr. Scholes and Rev. Manley also made further remarks along the line of community welfare and Rev. Manley said the church buildings might be used, as an entertainment that was not proper to be put on in a church was not proper for good people to attend. The motion carried. Reports from officers followed. Superintendent of Childrens Division, Mrs. Nellie Perry, three churches have Childrens Division superintendents, one, the Lutheran had none. All brought reports of good work. Young Peoples Division, M. T. Bishop, reported 11 organized classes in township. Adult J. R. Shilling, reported 13 organised classes with 196 members, he also reported four deaths from the Adult Division since last convention, Hillary Shuff and Abner Copp from the M. P. Church, Mrs. Mary Scholes from the Christian Church and Mrs. Margaret Swineford from the Luthesan Church. Educational, J. B. Haifley, reports that all schools observe temperance instruction, that 2 teacher training classes had been started since the last convention and that he had not visited the different schools. Administration, F. B. Leighty, reports the school standards or percent of efficiency is increasing rapidly so that he believes a 400% township will be had before our next county convention. The president asked the township officers to visit each school The report of standing committee by chairman C. O Johnson, who said the committee had decided on three open conventions and one executive meeting during the year. The time for open conventions to be the latter part of March, the first of July and November. The president asked for more than one executive meeting if needed.

Tested 250,000 Miles
Three-Point Cantilever Springs
Greatest Improvement Since Pneumatic Tires

OVERLAND 4 has been put through the most thorough and severe test possible.

250,000 miles of mountain trails, desert sand, heat, cold, mud and dust, demonstrated the quality of every part of the car long before we began manufacturing.

This remarkable test showed conclusively that Three-Point Cantilever Springs, exclusive with Overland, are the greatest improvement in riding comfort since the introduction of pneumatic tires.

They protect the car from road shocks and prolong the life of every part.

They enable the wheels to hold better to the road. They give greater comfort under all road conditions.

They do away almost entirely with side sway and rebound which twist and rack the car.

Diagonal attachment of the Three-Point Springs at both ends of a 130-inch Springbase gives the steadiness and smooth riding of the heavy car of long wheelbase.

Equipment is complete from Auto-Lite Starting and Lighting System to Marshall Divan Spring Upholstery.

Christian Endeavor's to Rally In Butler, Nov. 30.

One of the greatest events for young people in Indiana this fall, will be the DeKalb County Fall Rally of Christian Endeavorer's, to be held in the First U. B. Church in Butler, on Sunday afternoon and evening, November 30th.

Miss Ruth Day, Junior Superintendent of the Indiana State Christian Endervor Union, will be here and speak in the afternoon session. Miss Day is a Live Wire of Christian Endeavor in Indiana and carries a real message to the young people of Indiana and every one is invited to hear her Sunday. Plans will also be made for the 1920 District Convention to be held in Angola next June. The Indiana C. E. Union holds the distinction of being the only religious organization in Indiana holding a distinctly state or district wide convention each year and the convention in Angola next June promises to be one of the best ever held in the state. Miss Day has been connected with the state organization for a number of years and during these few years Christian Endeavor has made a tremendous growth in Indiana. Miss Day has been untiring in her efforts for the Union and has acquainted herself with the problems of the organization and has been anxious to help solve them in a business like way. During this time she has gained for herself a reputation as an inspiring speaker, not only in Indiana but all over the United States among Christian Endeavor workers Miss Day has been in DeKalb County a number of times and is well known among Christian Endeavor workers of the county and every one will be glad of the opportunity to hear her again.

Next Year's License.

Automobile owners are being warned and urged to apply soon for their 1920 licenses, as they will not be permitted to drive their cars after January 1st. without a new license. The secretary of state is now ready, it is said, to issue licenses, and new car owners will have little excuse for not having their new licenses by the first of the year.

Underwent Operation.

John Ulm, of south of town was operated on at the Lutheran hospital last Tuesday for goiter and the last word from him was that he was getting along fine. John left home on Monday and stated to his family that he was going to a stock sale and that he would be away over night and Mrs. Ulm was asked to go to Fort Wayne on Tuesday with O. E. Cannon and wife, and go to the hospital with Mrs. Cannon where she was to receive treatment. As she entered the hospital and came near to one of the rooms a remark was made that they would soon see John and of course Mrs. Ulm could not understand what they meant, and when they entered they found John feeling fine after his operation on Monday. Mrs. Ulm was shocked considerable, but they had talked of the operation at times at home and Mrs. Ulm was rather reluctant in giving her consent in the matter as she considered it serious. John had been bothered for years and it was getting worse and thought it time to do something.

Goes With The I. H. C.

Grover Curie has a new position leaving Sunday evening for Fort Wayne and taking up work with the International Harvester Co. He spent the last seven years working for Wm. 92 Years Old and Still Goes

St. Joe has the distinction of having the oldest man in DeKalb county, Charles Coburn, who was 92 years old last Friday, November 21st. He has lived near this place for the past eighty-one years, having come to this place with his parents from Trumble county, Ohio, when he wasn't quite eleven years old. He is in fairly good health for a man of his years and can tell of the many changes in this country in the past eighty years. He has been twice married and has eleven children living. He is spending the winter with his youngest daughter Mrs. Sam Keesler, who entertained the following in honor of his natal day: Mr. and Mrs. Wes Hart, Mrs. Winifred Hart and son Robert, Mrs. Amanda Coburn, Clyde Hart and George Milliman.

Missionary Day.

Sunday was Missionary Day at the Lutheran church and it was observed in Sunday School by a most interesting talk given by Mrs. Richter, who has served two and one half years as a United Brethren Missionary in West Africa.

In the evening, the Women's Missionary Society had charge of the service, it being their annual public and thank offering meeting. Rev. Mumma conducted the devotional exercises, special music was rendered by the Mesdames Patterson, Staman, Sechler and Hathaway, with Mrs. Cora Curie presiding at the organ.

Mrs. Mumma gave a most helpful address, the theme being Paul's debtorship to God and to the world likewise our debtorship not only to God but to every man. Following this was a pageant "From Darkness to Light" showing in a very impressive manner the needs of the non-Christian lands. This was presented by twenty women and girls. The offering for the day was $18.50.

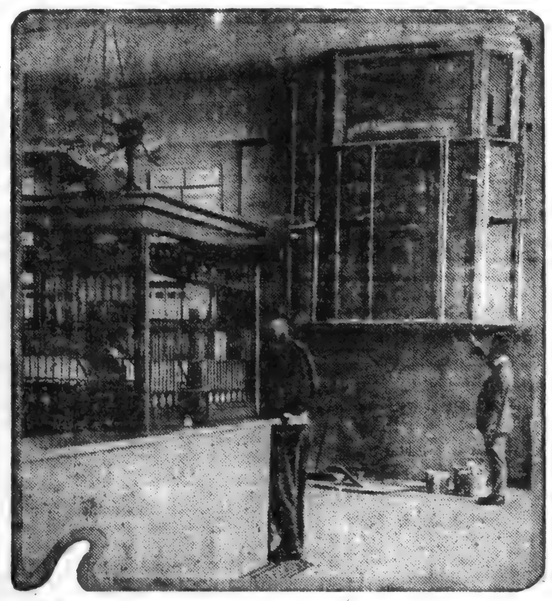
Bank Prepared to Battle Bandits

Installs "Pill Box" Made of Steel, in Which Armed Guards Are Stationed Day and Night



Due to the great number of bank robberies in Chicago, the Pullman Trust and Savings bank has installed a "pill box," constructed of heavy steel, in which armed guards are stationed day and night to prevent robbers from looting the bank. The guards are equipped with high-powered rifles and shotguns and are prepared to protect the bank both from the interior and exterior. The "pill box" is built half inside and half outside the bank building, so that the occupants, through the portholes provided for the rifles, can have an unobstructed aim at would-be robbers, within or without the building.

SENATE DEFEATS THE PEACE TREATY; ADJOURNS SINE DIE

Bitter Battle Is Waged Over the Lodge Reservations.

PACT PROBABLY IS DEAD

Under Its Parliamentary Status It Could Be Re-Submitted to Next Session Which Will Convene on December 1, and Await Its Turn.

Washington, Nov. 20.—The treaty of peace with Germany was rejected by the senate. On the final vote taken on the Lodge resolution ratification was refused by the vote of 43 to 51.

The senate then adjourned sine die and, the house having taken similar action earlier in the day, the extra session called by President Wilson to consider the treaty came to an end.

Under the parliamentary maneuvering of the Republican majority the treaty was forced into such a situation that it cannot be again considered unless the president should choose to re-submit it to the senate at the session which opens December 1.

If re-submitted, it will again go to the foreign relations committee, where in all probability it will be held for a long time while railroad legislation and other matters are being considered.

Peace Resolution Introduced.

In the meantime, to meet the situation brought about by rejection of the treaty, Senator Lodge introduced just before adjournment a concurrent resolution declaring the war with Germany at an end.

This resolution will be taken up at the beginning of the new session and probably passed.

The defeat of the treaty was brought about by the votes of 38 Democratic and 13 Republican senators. The Republicans who voted against ratification were senators who have been from the very outset of the treaty fight against the document. All of the Democrats except Senator Reed of Missouri were friends of the treaty, but yielded to the request of President Wilson for rejection of the Lodge resolution because of the reservations which it contained.

The Republicans who voted against ratification were:

Senators Borah, Brandegee, Fernald, France, Gronna, Johnson of California, Knox, La Follette, McCormick, Moses, Norris, Poindexter and Sherman.

Democrats who declined to obey the instructions of the president and voted for ratification were Senators Gore, instructions of the president and voted Myers, Owen and Pomerene.

Marshall Overruled Three Times.

Three times in the parliamentary skirmish was the vice president overruled by vote of the senate for decisions he made with regard to the procedure. The crucial test came when Vice President Marshall ruled that the treaty was still before the senate and that the Lodge resolution having been rejected it was in order for Senator Hitchcock to present an alternative resolution.

Upon this ruling the vice president was overruled by the vote of 50 to 43. This closed the door to any attempts to compromise and placed the administration senators in the position where they were compelled to vote again on the Lodge resolution and vote to accept the treaty with those reservations or get no treaty at all.

During the long debate that followed, Senators Hitchcock, Swanson and others in the administration following made frantic but fruitless efforts to effect a compromise on the Lodge reservations. They conferred with Senators Lodge, Watson, Lenroot and others, but made no progress, the Lodge forces standing firmly against any attempt to swerve them from the program to which they were committed.

Efforts to Place Blame.

In the speeches that were made while the final vote on the Lodge resolution was pending, senators on both sides made efforts to place the blame for failure to ratify the treaty. Some of the mild reservationists blamed the administration men for not having arrived at the conclusion earlier in the fight that ratification without reservations was impossible and asserted that if they had done so a compromise might have been affected.

In a final effort at conciliation Senator Pomerene at 9:15 p. m. moved to refer the treaty to a "committee on conciliation" consisting of six senators, including Senators Lodge and Hitchcock. This motion was defeated by means of a motion by Senator La Follette to lay it on the table.

Senator Hoke Smith of Georgia then sought to avert the impending rejection of the treaty by suggesting that the senate adjourn over night so that both sides might get together. This motion was defeated by the vote of 43 to 46.

Original Pact Defeated.

After the second vote on the Lodge resolution showed that the treaty stood no possible chance of ratification, Senator Lodge yielded to a request made by Senator Underwood for a vote on ratification without reservations. This was defeated, 38 to 53.

By making a motion to reconsider this vote and then lay that motion on the table, which was carried, Senator Lodge placed the last barrier against any attempt to bring the treaty again before the senate without action by the president.

The great feature of the day's debate was a speech by Senator Borah of Idaho, which was made at a time when it appeared as though ratification might be accomplished. In his speech the senator warned the senate of the results that would follow 'departure from the policies of Washington and other founders of the republic. His speech, stirring in its eloquence and forceful in its logic, made a profound impression upon the senate.

Result of First Vote.

Ratification of the peace treaty, with the reservations framed by the Republican majority and objected to by President Wilson, was voted down in the senate earlier in the evening, with the administration senators lining up solidly against it.

The result was to place the treaty in a parliamentary status, which its enemies said amounted at least temporarily to rejection. Its friends, however, had hopes of reviving it at another session of congress.

The ratification resolution, which would have required a two-thirds majority for adoption, mustered only 39 votes to 55 against it. Its supporters were 35 Republicans, 4 Democrats, and its opponents 13 Republicans and 42 Democrats.

A Democratic move to have the treaty referred to a conciliation committee composed of Democrats and Republicans was defeated.

Way Clear for Compromise.

The vote cleared the way for the consideration of possible compromise proposals acceptable to the majority of the Democrats and the mild reservation group of Republicans.

Republicans against adoption were: Borah, Brandegee, Fernald, France, Gronna, Johnson of California, Knox, La Follette, McCormick, Moses, Norris, Poindexter and Sherman.

In order to put the treaty into a parliamentary situation where another vote could be had after efforts at compromise the senate then voted to reconsider its action. The motion was made by Senator Reed, Democrat, Missouri, and was adopted by the vote of the Democrats and mild reservation Republicans.

The vote on the motion to reconsider was 62 to 30.

The effect of the reconsideration was merely to bring the committee resolution back to the same status it occupied before the ratification roll call.

An effort by Democratic Leader Hitchcock to have the senate adjourn at this stage failed, the mild reservationists lining up with the other Republicans against the adjournment motion, which was defeated, 51 to 42.

Senator Hitchcock sought to offer a set of compromise reservations, but a point of order by Republican Leader Lodge blocked him.

Vice President Marshall ruled that the reservations were in order and that the treaty, by the reconsideration, had been brought back into committe of the whole. Senator Lodge appealed from the ruling.

By a party vote of 51 to 42 the decision of the chair was overruled.

The vote having established that the treaty was in the senate itself and not in a committee of the whole Senator Hitchcock offered a resolution of unreserved ratification, against which Senator Poindexter (Rep.) of Washington made a point of order. The vice president overruled the objection and an appeal again was taken.

The senate again overruled the vice president.

By a vote of 50 to 43 the senate a third time overruled the chair's ruling that amendments to the Lodge reservation might be presented. Senator McCumber (Rep.) North Dakota, voted with the Democrats to sustain the vice president, and Senators Gore, Reed and Shields voted with the Republicans against it.

Senator McCumber moved to strike out the requirement that the reservations must be accepted by other powers. Senator Lodge made a point of order, which Vice President Marshall overruled, and another appeal to the senate was taken.

With the same lineup as before the senate again overruled the vice president's ruling, thus cutting off the McCumber motion. The vote was 50 to 43.

Still Alive, Says Hitchcock.

Senator Hitchcock said, following the senate's adjournment, that the action of that body on the treaty has not killed it, and that he expects it will be re-submitted to congress by the president at the next session.

"The president can send it back," declared Senator Hitchcock. "I do not, however, know what course he will follow. I have not discussed that with him, and have not been in communication with the president since the action taken by the senate."

Senator Lodge considers the treaty dead, as was shown by his reply when asked his opinion of the present status of the treaty. He said:

"It is dead in this senate. They killed it, just as I told them they would if they voted against it."

Senator Lodge did not deny, however, that the president has the power to re-submit the covenant.

Quell Vladivostok Revolt.

Washington, Nov. 20.—The revolution at Vladivostok has been quelled, dispatches to the state department said.

Indiana News Tersely Told

Indianapolis.—Stanley Wycoff, formerly federal food administrator for Marion county, and formerly in charge of sugar distribution in the state, has been appointed federal fair price commissioner for Indiana, according to a dispatch from Washington, D. C.

Plymouth.—The board of county commissioners awarded contracts for four county roads for a total of $347,000. It also approved and ordered advertised 14 gravel roads at an estimated cost of $423,212, making a total cost of highway construction of $778,400. This is the largest transaction of its kind in the history of Marshall county.

Vincennes.—The muskrat is coming into its own, according to Vincennes fur dealers, who are now paying a dollar up more for the choice hides. Many of the hides are bringing $2 each. A short time ago muskrat hides could be bought for 5 cents each. Vincennes fur buyers, who formerly "sniffed" at the idea of buying rat "skins," are now ready buyers.

Logansport.—No live tsock is being shipped over the Michigan division of the Pennsylvania railroad here, as orders have been received to release all cars for shipment of cattle out of the Wst. At on local stock yard several cars had been loaded with hogs when the order arrived. The hogs were unloaded and the farmers hauled them to Indianapolis by truck.

Terre Haute.—Two hundred and fifty employees at the local plant of the American Car and Foundry company have been laid off as the result of an order issued by C. A. Garmong, superintendent, to the effect that hereafter no union men will be employed there. The order affects the machinists, blacksmiths, car builders and laborers, all of whom are organized, and affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

Indianapolis.—Governor Goodrich has inquired of Ele Stansbury, attorney general, whether it is mandatory for him to keep the membership of the state industrial board up to the five members provided for by the last legislature. The attorney general has advised the governor that it is mandatory for him to do so. Gilbert H. Hendren, member of the board, has resigned, effective January 1, to engage in the banking business at Bloomfield, and the governor is considering another appointment.

Indianapolis.—Agents of the bureau of investigation, department of justice, are busy in Indiana and in other bituminous coal states as well, it is understood, gathering information about the coal operators with a view to a prosecution by the federal government, if it be found that the operators have been violating the Lever act, which makes it illegal to restrict production of fuel, or the Sherman law against combinations in restraint of trade.

Indianapolis.—Officers elected by the Indiana grand encampment, I. O. O. F., at the annual meeting of the encampment, are as follows: Grand patriarch, O. A. Armfield of Elwood; grand high priest, R. H. Hildebrand, South Bend; grand senior warden, G. H. Chamberlin, Salem; grand junior warden, J. A. Leverton, Huntington; grand trustee, George Rogers, Lafayette; grand treasurer, J. M. Lang, Sullivan; grand scribe, W. H. Leedy, Indianapolis, and grand representative, Charles H. Allison, Russiaville.

Terre Haute.—The county council of Vigo county approved the plans of the county commissioners for the purchase of the farm of Dr. Joseph Friss, north of the city, as a site for a county tuberculosis hospital, and appropriated $22,275 as the purchase price. The council also recommended the sale of the county infirmary, northeast of the city. It is available for city lots. The council recommended the sale of the county fair grounds, and the use of the money derived from the sale towards the erection of the tuberculosis hospital.

Indianapolis.—With the ratification of the proposed national federation of farmers, the American Farm Bureau federation, the Indiana Federation of Farmers associations is the first member of the new organization. The state federation, in convention here, re-elected John G. Brown of Monon as president, Everett McClure, Dearborn county was chosen vice president, and Maurice Douglas, Shelby county, was named second vice president. The five district directors chosen are: First district, J. A. Warren, Knouts; Third, E. E. Reynolds, Lafayette; Fifth, Oscar Larm, Oxford; Seventh, J. W. Raub, Monroe county, and Ninth, J. J. Brown, Rockport. Other directors hold over. The convention adopted the ten-hour day as a standard. The federation went on record as favoring arbitration as against strikes and lockouts in labor disputes and in opposition to radicalism.

Vincennes.—Because of the coal shortage the paper mill owned and operated by the Indiana Board and Filler company here has stopped operations. Unless there is resumption of mining soon the concern will also close down its filler plant.

Greencastle.—The first industrial plant in Greencastle to close as a result of the coal shortage growing out of the miners' strike is the plant of the American Zinc Products company. Three hundred men are employed there.

Indianapolis.—All common barberry (not Japanese barberry) must be eradicated from Indiana by December 31, according to an order issued by the state conservation commission. Frank N. Wallace, entomologist for the commission, has been charged with seeing that the order is enforced. The shrub harbors "black rust," a disease inflicting heavy losses on wheat and small grains in Indiana.

Rochester.—Three members of the family of Albert Faulstitch, residing 15 miles west of here were killed and a daughter is in a serious condition in Woodlawn hospital as the result of their automobile being struck by an Erie train at Monterey, west of here. The dead are: Nora, forty-four years old, wife; Bertha, twelve, a daughter; Fred, fourteen, a son. Daisy, six, sustained a fractured skull and both legs are broken.

Indianapolis.—The Indiana Rural Schools Conference association was formed here at a meeting of a number of educators and social workers of the state. Dr. W. W. Black of Indiana university, was elected president, and Frank P. Chaffee, manager of the Indiana state chamber of commerce, secretary. The meeting was called by the state chamber of commerce at the request of the Parent-Teacher Associations of Indiana.

Indianapolis.—Curtailment of interurban service as another step in the efforts to conserve the coal supply of the state became effective on several lines the past week. The action, in compliance with an order of the state public service commission, follows by a few days the institution throughout the state of lightless nights. It was stated that unless the miners and operators reach an agreement within ten days, the coal shortage will cause the suspension of many industries.

Indianapolis.—Recommendations that Shelby county commissioners "should as a matter of justice summarily remove" the county engineer from office and an assumption that the county auditor's "attitude is against the best interests of the taxpayers and favorable to the contractors" are contained in a special report submitted to Jesse E. Eschbach, chief examiner for the state board of accounts, by A. L. Donaldson, civil engineer and field examiner for the board. George Oltman is county surveyor and engineer, and Frank W. Fagel is county auditor.

Indianapolis.—Mrs. A. W. Roach of Richmond was elected president of the Indiana division, Service Star Legion, at the convention here. Other officers were elected as follows: Mrs. J. H. Epler, Gary, first vice president; Mrs. Ralph Kennington, Indianapolis, second vice president; Mrs. C. B. O'Donnell, Vincennes, third vice president; Mrs. A. B. Taylor, Pendleton, recording secretary; Mrs. Bruce Maxwell, Indianapolis, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Anna Crawford, Laporte, treasurer; Mrs. Willis Hickman Spencer, historian; Mrs. A. W. Funkhouser, Evansville, head of the Gold Star division; Mrs. F. A. Brier, Indianapolis, head of the junior branch.

Indianapolis.—The public service commission is jubilant over what it terms "the sweeping victory" the commission and Indiana shippers have obtained in the attitude of the interstate commerce commission, which has announced its stand on the years-old freight rate and classification fight with Illinois. The stand of the interstate commission is expected to be indorsed by the director general of the federal railroad administration and, according to E. I. Lewis, chairman of the Indiana commission, the action will mean a "saving of millions of dollars annually to Indiana shippers, besides removing from hem the stifling influence of Chicago shippers through the Illinois rates and classifications so unjustly discriminatory against Hoosier shippers."

Indianapolis.—State American Legion officials found another cause for rejoicing when a tabulation of reports showed that nearly 2,000 former soldiers have joined the organization in the last few days. L. Russell Newgent, state secretary, attributes the increase to the publicity attendant to winning the Legion's permanent headquarters for Indianapolis at the Minneapolis national convention and to the membership drives held by several posts in celebration of Armistice day. The Indiana branch of the Legion is estimated by Mr. Newgent to have approximately 80,000 members. The Hammond post leads the state in the number of men enrolled recently, 145 joining the organisation there. There are 171 posts in the state, 11 of them being granted charters the past week.

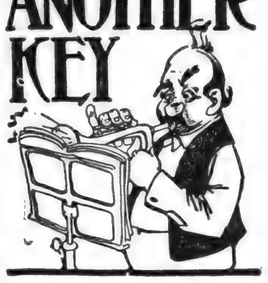
Naming Clothes.

Naming clothes is another delightful way of stamping individuality on a garment. The name need not necessarily be a trade mark, unless one expects to go into its manufacture on a wholesale scale. A negligee so named as to suggest rest; a dance frock aptly tagged with some alluring title; an opera cloak whose appellation at once marks it as a thing set aside for the elegant envelopment of the exquisite evening gown; or a petticoat whose piquant title at once proclaims its very modern departure from the clumsy original of that most feminine of all garments.

Looks Like Tight-Lacing.

A pinched waistline appears again in some of the fashion silhouettes, something like the tiny waistline that femininity used to adore. Of course, nowadays, no waistline is really pinched in, but the flare at the hip, combined with a snug fit above the belt, gives the effect of a small trim waistline.

IN ANOTHER KEY



Simple Logic.

An Irishman was brought before a magistrate on a charge of vagrancy, and questioned. "What trade are you in?"

"Your honor, a sailor."

"You in the seafaring line? I question whether you have ever been to sea in your life."

"Shure, now, and does your honor think I came over from Ireland in a waggin'?"—Blighty (London).

NEXT QUESTION.

"I have just completed me farewell tour."

"And did you fare well?"

Vocalization.

The katydid puts on display
Great eloquence from day to day.
It lifts its voice the evening through
And never says a thing that's new.

She Didn't Find All.

"I found a letter in your coat pocket that you had not mailed."

"Is that all you found in my pocket?"

"That is all there was in it."

"Oh, no, it's not."

"What else, I'd like to know?"

"A rip under the sleeve, but, of course, you were not looking for anything like that."

A Polite Tailor.

Uncle—Who was the gentleman who spoke to us so politely?

Nephew—That was my tailor, uncle, who has been wanting to make your acquaintance for a long time.

How It Is Done.

Walt—Jim sure is making his money go a long way these days.

Bill—I wish I knew how. What's he doing?

Walt—Oh, he sent a check to China the other day.

Two of a Kind.

Jill—What will papa say if he knows you touched liquor?

Jack—He knows it already.

Jill—What did he say?

Jack—He said, "Well, Jack, I don't mind if I do."

One Was.

"Did you think the tale Miss Gladys told was made up on its face?"

"I don't know about the tale, but she was."

His Advantage.

"Binks, I understand, is very much run down."

"Well, he ought to be able to build himself up. He's an architect."

Yes, Who?

"Here's a man who claims that a knowledge of Greek and Latin is necessary in order to write English correctly."

"But nowadays who considers it necessary to write English correctly?"—Life.

Natural Inclination.

"Why is it that a pretty girl would rather have silly compliments paid her than get bits of real solid information?"

"Because she doesn't care for anybody to give her a wrinkle or two."

Two Ways of It.

She—Why did you break off so this morning when I was talking to you over the telephone?

He—Because while you were calling me up my boss was calling me down.

Some Fall.

She—What do you think of the new nursemaid, dear?

He—She looks capable, my dear, but she is so terribly tall. Think what a distance poor baby will have to fall when she drops him.

Couldn't Be Cashed.

Hewitt—I had a terrible dream last night.

Jewett—I am prepared for the worst; tell it.

Hewitt—I dreamed that it was 1926 and that, when I tried to get a beer check honored, it was returned marked "no funds."

Her Task.

"I hear the cook is really the mainstay of their family."

"Well, I know they always call upon her in the time of knead."

Catarrhal Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Catarrhal Deafness, and that is by a constitutional remedy. HALL'S CATARRH MEDICINE acts through the Blood on the Mucous Surfaces of the System. Catarrhal Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result. Unless the inflammation can be reduced and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing may be destroyed forever. Many cases of Deafness are caused by Catarrh, which is an inflamed condition of the Mucous Surfaces.

Well Known Women

Cleveland, Ohio.—"I can highly recommend Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription to women of middle age. I was in a miserable condition a year or so before I reached the climacteric. My bladder gave me so much distress, and I also suffered with inflammation and displacement. I don't believe any woman could be more uncomfortable than I was when I started to take the 'Favorite Prescription.' My improvement was so slow at first that I became impatient and wrote to the Invalids' Hotel for advice, which was given me freely, and very kindly. By following this advice I was eventually restored to a healthy condition. I am now safely through this trying time and have 'Favorite Prescription' to thank for my present good health, so do not think that I am making any mistake in advising other women who are distressed at this time to give Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription a trial!"—Mrs. J. Conneaut, Ohio.—"In my young womanhood I used to suffer severely at certain times until I took Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. "WHY, WOMAN, THEY'RE DIAMONDS, BLOOD-RED DIAMONDS!"

Synopsis.—While in the little French town of Vevay, where the "staid, proper spinster" who tells the story is spending a vacation, she is asked to allow a young girl, Claire de Ravenol, to be her companion back to the United States. Although forming an attachment to the girl, the heroine takes a dislike to Monsieur de Ravenol, Claire's father, and declines. On the boat she finds Claire in the care of a casual acquaintance, Mrs. Delario, whom she had met while each was purchasing a pair of slippers, exactly alike, which figure largely in subsequent events. When they reach New York, where Claire was to have been met by her mother, the latter does not appear, and Claire perforce goes to Mrs. Delario's home. In the confusion at the custom house, the spinster carries off one of Mrs. Delario's slippers. Through that happening she learns later that some one unknown to her has made an entry into her flat.

I suppose I'll be set down as a perfect fool, but I actually turned sick all over, and it required positive courage on my part to pick up the slippers and examine them. Which taught me nothing, of course, and—I may as well confess all my folly—I set them back heel to the wall and actually sat there and watched to see if they'd turn about of their own accord. But nothing happened, and there they stayed, heel to the wall, till morning.

That same evening, however, another thing happened that annoyed though it didn't alarm me. I was awakened about half past two by the sound of a key in the front door—someone was trying to get in. I bounced out of bed and looked to see that the chain bolt was on—that was all that worried me; for I had a neighbor on a floor below who came home frequently at that hour of the night in so elated a condition that he never stopped ascending stairs until he reached the top, and as my flat directly corresponded with his on the lower floor he tried to get in with his key, and sometimes threatened to smash the door in if "Minnie" didn't open it.

So hearing the familiar key now fumbling, I looked at the chain-bolt, and then merely "hollered" through the door my usual, "You're trying to get in the wrong flat—yours is downstairs."

The key slid out of the lock and there wasn't another sound. I stood there shivering in my nightie, waiting for the usual colloquy that would convince Mr. Man I wasn't his Minnie, but as he didn't favor me with so much as an oath of recognition, I went back to bed after a few moments and fell asleep. It never entered my head that the person at the other end of the latchkey wasn't the high-spirited Mr. Man that I knew and was prepared for, but another Mr. Man I didn't know anything about.

I went to sleep dreaming about slippers; I waked up to wonder about slippers. They were just as I'd left them—which gave me real disappointment. I was out nearly all day, and when I came home my first look was to see if the slippers had been making any more "manifestations."

ALL THREE SLIPPERS WERE GONE.

CHAPTER III.

Mrs. Delario's Diamonds.

To say I was astonished when I beheld that neat row of footgear with three teeth knocked out simply doesn't express it. I was flabbergasted. It wasn't only the mysteriousness of that particular theft—if theft it were—and why all three slippers had been taken and not one slipper, or one pair; it was that nothing so far as I could observe had been touched in the flat but just the particular objects that the day before had turned and toed the wall. Now they had walked off and left me.

Well, the end of all my puzzling was that I had my choice between two explanations—(1) that some person, name, age and sex unknown, motive impossible to guess, had entered my flat with a duplicate key and stolen the slippers; or (2) that Mrs. Delario had worked a "physical manifestation" to get her slipper home and had taken all three at once to be on the safe side.

One explanation seemed about as possible as the other, for I didn't see how anyone could have a duplicate key—even the janitor does not have a pass key to the flats in this house—and I didn't see how magic could carry off three slippers. But whatever way I put it I had still the unpleasant task of explaining the loss to Mrs. Delario. I remembered she'd said when we were buying them that they were more than she could afford, but she just must have them and would go without something else, and I was particularly mystified because of it. If I could in any way have replaced the slipper I'd have done so and never said a word about it.

Meantime I remembered that I hadn't communicated with Mrs. Delario since my return—though I had the slipper all that time. Then came a letter asking me would I do her a great, a very great favor—would I come to her house that Sunday evening at eight o'clock? The letter arrived on Sunday morning, special delivery.

I went, but I never once mentioned the slippers—slippers were the last things in my mind as I rang the bell.

Mrs. Delario herself admitted me, apologizing that her maid was away for her Sunday evening out, and what between welcoming handshakes and Mrs. Delario's taking off my coat and insisting on my taking off my hat and "being comfy," and my declining, and her leading me into the seance room Claire had told me about, and my astonishment at seeing it, slippers didn't occur to me and the chance to speak of them went by.

The seance room was as queer to my eye as it seemed to have been to Claire's. I think the impression uppermost in my mind was the soundlessness of the place. It seemed as remote from the bustling life of the great city in the midst of which it was as if it had been in the heart of a desert.

But Mrs. Delario left me but little time for observation; merely remarking that this was the seance room, she asked if I'd seen Claire and what I thought of her.

Well—I thought a great deal of her and many things about her, and while I was considering my answer Mrs. Delario propounded a question that fairly stunned me: "Do you think the girl could be a thief?"

"Oh, never—never in the world. What—Claire!" I cried hotly, and the picture of the high-bred girl came before me.

Mrs. Delario Herself Admitted Me.

I could as soon have thought my own sister a thief. Nevertheless I was soon at a loss to explain the episodes Mrs. Delario told me.

On the steamer, for instance, she had twice caught Claire turning over things in her—Mrs. Delario's—suitcase. Claire excused it once by saying she'd accidentally put some of her own toilet articles in it by mistake while she "was too sick to notice." But what finally brought about the crisis was this: A sitter had given Mrs. Delario a ten-dollar bill in payment for a reading, and she had gone hastily to her room for change, and returning had left her bedroom door ajar and a quantity of bills lying on the bureau which she hadn't stopped to put back into her purse. The moment she had shown the sitter out she went back to replace her purse and found Claire in her room. Claire was in the act of closing the wardrobe door and said she was looking for her muff! Ah! why her muff in Mrs. Delario's wardrobe?

"But did she steal any money?" I demanded, almost in fear of the reply.

Mrs. Delario took some time to answer, and this is what she said: "You know I'm so fond of the child I'd rather think I made a mistake than that she robbed me. I had two five-dollar bills—a lot of twos and ones and several tens—and what I think I did was to take a five and a two—seven dollars—and rush downstairs. But what I might have done was taken the two fives—a five instead of a two—and given them to the lady. She didn't look at them. Anyway, the other five was gone."

It was this sort of thing about her that made me like Mrs. Delario so much—her willingness to excuse and to wait for final proofs of people's delinquencies. She hadn't even mentioned her suspicion to Claire; at the same time the incident decided her that she could on no account keep the child longer in the house, the worry of looking after her was too great, and she had told Claire this and that if her father didn't arrive by Monday Claire would have to go to a boarding school for safekeeping till he did. Monsieur le pere opportunely arrived next morning and took Claire away. That was Thursday—the day before she called on me—and Claire had been with Mrs. Delario just since Monday.

Very naturally, then, in all the story I never once thought of the slipper and that Mrs. Delario might be suspecting Claire of taking it also. But having, so to speak, settled Claire in saying that she had left on Thursday afternoon, Mrs. Delario quickly switched the conversation on the real subject of my visit. She introduced it by saying that Lila—who was still in a boarding school near Philadelphia—was breaking down and might have to be sent abroad for treatment—she seemed to be developing spinal trouble, though the doctors here really didn't seem to know what ailed the child; and then the sentence I clearly remember was, "I'm very greatly in need of money."

I fear I must have drawn back suddenly—I actually thought she was trying to borrow of me—for she smiled and answered my unspoken words: "I don't mean I want to borrow anything. I have some property I want to dispose of. I want to sell some rubies."

"Why, Mrs. Delario, I'm not a dealer," I replied quickly.

"I know you're not—that's why I thought you could help me better than anyone else. The stones were left me by a great-uncle in France, and I may as well confess it now—they came in duty free—"

"Smuggled!" I interjected.

"Well, a friend brought them over and they weren't found when the baggage was examined. But don't you see that was why I could sell them at a bargain?"

"I don't know anybody who deals in smuggled gems."

"Of course—but you needn't tell that—you don't actually know how they got in—you are selling them for a friend. It's because you don't know that that you can sell them better than I can. At least you wouldn't mind looking at the stones and telling me what they're worth so I'll have something to go on? I haven't an idea how valuable they are."

"Take them to Tiffany's," I suggested.

"I'm afraid to take them anywhere, to tell you the truth. Eugene took them to a place on Maiden lane yesterday and the people acted so queerly. Eugene—he's very psychic—got the impression that they were going to accuse him of smuggling them or something of the kind—stealing the rubies, perhaps from them—and he put them in his pocket and ran out. He thinks he was followed, but he couldn't make sure. Don't you see how easy it would be for anyone to accuse a lone woman of theft—"

"But how would they prove anything?" I interrupted. "If the stones are yours—"

She stopped me with a bitter laugh. "Can't you see that the mere public accusation that I'd stolen jewels would ruin me professionally? It would put me instantly under suspicion of fraud in all my dealings. Oh, you don't know; you haven't a conception of what this life means," she went on a little wildly. "You don't know the struggle just to make one's daily bread. A lawsuit would ruin me financially—I have no money to hire a lawyer to defend me."

I felt myself give in to her then, as a friend. Yes, I'd help her in every reasonable way.

"You mustn't labor under any false impressions about me," she went on. "I have a little property—not enough to support two people—and what I earn. I live here rent free—they pay the rent—the circle that meets here twice a week. I have the house much as a minister has his parsonage. If there were ever any scandal—if they turned me out from here—I'd be practically penniless. I couldn't make a fresh start with that hanging over me. And then my son!"

I said, "Well, get the stones and I'll look at them if you care to have me do that."

She left me with a grateful smile, but returned so quickly that I rather guessed she had the stones on her person. It was a dingy little pasteboard box she'd come back with, fastened with a common little elastic. She slipped the elastic and placed the box in my hand.

I raised the lid. I gave one look at the contents, emptied out the stones into my hand and—nearly fell off my chair!

THE STONES I HELD WERE BLOOD-RED DIAMONDS! And there were seven of them—a stone you don't see one of in a year, perhaps. Why, I didn't know there were such stones in the heavens or the earth or the waters under the earth! Seven blood-red diamonds, absolutely flawless, first-water gems, and perfectly matched to the last facet, the last gleam and twinkle in their radiant depths.

I held them, almost frightened, and really didn't hear what she was saying till she remarked something about their being matched.

Matched! Well, they were matched this way: If an absolutely perfect mechanical mind with an absolutely perfect mechanical tool, working on absolutely perfect substance can be conceived, the mind and the tool, working without variation, might have produced those seven stones. Yes—I should say they were matched!

"I remember you told me once," she was prattling, "that the larger the stones the more individual they became and the harder they were to match. If they were worth five thousand dollars apiece couldn't I get—say—forty thousand dollars for the seven?"

"Forty thousand dollars!" I gasped, looking at her now for the first time since I'd looked at the stones.

An expression of disappointment crossed her face, and of chagrin too, at having committed herself before an expert—as she kindly regarded me.

"Couldn't I get as much as twenty thousand for them, don't you think?" she faltered. "Aren't rubies that size worth even that?"

"RUBIES!" I must have simply shouted the word at her.

"And aren't they rubies? Oh, don't tell me they're only paste!" She looked ready to cry with disappointment and mortification.

"PASTE!" I know I yelled that word so the walls echoed. "Why, woman, they're DIAMONDS!—blood-red diamonds—the most valuable stone in the world."

She clasped her hands about my arm and gave out a long "O-o-oh! Then they're worth forty thousand dollars at the very least!"

She Gave Out a Long O-o-oh!

"Mrs. Delario," I said soberly, "I can give you only a rough estimate, for those stones are far beyond my range, but in my honest opinion they are worth at least a million dollars."

Silence fell on us—my words had sort of stunned us both; for until I had spoken them aloud the full meaning of the diamonds hadn't come home to me, and that I sat there, casually holding a million dollars in my hand. It all at once seemed a solemn thing to be doing—an immense responsibility. I dropped them back in their box, put the lid on and handed them to her.

Her own first words showed the timid woman. "And I've all this right here in the house with me!"

I felt sorry for her. I was glad I didn't have them in the house with me. I saw her apprehension when her eyes roved over the room as if for a possible hiding place. When her eyes returned to the box she muttered under her breath, "A million dollars! And I asked only a little for Lila's sake. What confidence they must have had in me! A million dollars!" She had evidently taken my word with implicit trust that I was right, though I was almost doubting it myself. My thoughts were chasing one another, and the silence between us was such you could have heard a pin drop. And in that silence the front bell pealed through the house.

Mrs. Delario's hands flew to her bosom as though she had been shot.

"My God—it's come!" she gasped, and the color left her face.

"Put it in your stocking and run!"

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Making a Garden.

And because the breath of flowers is far sweeter in the air, where it comes and goes, like the warbling of music, than in the hand, therefore nothing is more fit for that delight than to know what be the flowers and plants that do best perfume the air. . . . That which above all others yields the sweetest smell in the air is the violet; especially the white double violet which comes twice a year, about the middle of April and about Bartholomew tide. . . . Then wall flowers, which are very delightful to be set under a parlor or lower chamber window; then pinks and gillyflowers, especially the matted pink and clove gillyflower; then the flowers of the lime tree; then the honeysuckles, so they be somewhat far off. Of beanflowers I speak not, because they are field flowers; but those which perfume the air most delightfully, not passed by as the rest, but being trodden upon and crushed, are three; that is, burnet, wild thyme and water mints. Therefore you are to set whole alleys of them, to have the pleasure when you walk or tread.—Francis Bacon.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Teacher of English Bible in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

LESSON FOR NOVEMBER 30

JESUS TEACHES PETER TRUE GREATNESS.

LESSON TEXT—John 13:1-16.

GOLDEN TEXT—The Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many.—Mat. 20:28.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL—Mark 10: 35-45; Rom. 12:3-8; Phil. 2:5-11; I Peter, 5:5-11.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Washing the Disciples' Feet.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Taking the Place of a Servant.

INTERMEDIATE TOPIC—The Dignity of Common Tasks.

I. Christ's Amazing Love for His Own (vv. 1-3).

Jesus was fully conscious of what was upon him. He knew that the cross with all its anguish was just before him. He knew that his disciples would shamefully forsake him in a few hours. He knew that one of that number would be the instrument in the hands of the devil in his betrayal. He knew that all things were in his hands; was fully conscious of his deity. Notwithstanding all this, he displayed patient and untiring love. He did not withdraw his love from them because of their weakness and the shameful failure which he knew would soon be made manifest.

II. Christ Washing His Disciples' Feet (vv. 4-11).

This act is symbolic of his amazing love for his disciples. Jesus did not regard his hands as too holy to do this menial service. The true Christian does not allow his rank in society to keep him from acts of lowly service.

1. Steps in this service: (1) He rose from supper, (2) laid aside his garments, (3) took a towel and girded himself, (4) poured water into a basin, (5) washed his disciples' feet, (6) wiped them with a towel wherewith he was girded. These steps symbolize Christ's entire work of redemption. His rising from supper represents his rising from his place of enjoyment in the heavenly glory; his laying aside his garments, his putting aside his vesture of majesty (Phil. 2:7, 8); his girding himself, his taking the form of a servant (Phil. 2:7); the water in the basin, his cleansing blood; his washing of their feet, his actual cleansing of men through his Word (John 15:3; Eph. 5:26); his taking his garments again, his return to his place and position of glory.

2. Peter's impetuous ignorance. He goes from one extreme to another. It in his failure to understand the significance of this service that caused him to behave so strangely.

3. The significance of this service to those who participate in it. (1) It is a spiritual cleansing (v. 8). Fellowship with Jesus is only possible as we are continually cleansed from our sins. "He that is washed needeth not save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit" (v. 10). The cleansing here is not the washing of regeneration, but that of sanctification. Even regenerate folks need the continual cleansing of Christ's blood in order to have fellowship with him. He that is regenerated—washed in the blood of Christ, symbolized by baptism—does not need a repetition of the act; he only needs the cleansing of sanctification, symbolized by the washing of the feet. As we go through this world after regeneration we are contaminated by its sins. He is willing always to cleanse us of our sins if we allow him. (2) A badge of brotherly affection. This act showed his abandonment to the service of his own. This is a lesson that is much needed today. We need more and more the fulness of brotherly love. This love needs to be manifested so that it may be seen and realized. True love can only be proved by the service it renders. (3) A proof of humility. This is a lesson much needed by us all. The disciples had just been disputing as to who should be the greatest in the kingdom; their selfish ambition was expressing itself. Today, on every hand, we see expressions of pride, vanity, and even arrogance on the part of those who are professed followers of the lowly Jesus. If the Son of God was not ashamed to stoop to lowly service his disciples should not regard it beneath their dignity to follow in his steps. (4) Equalization. As they would thus stoop to serve each other in the name of Christ there would be sure destruction of caste among them. The Spirit of Christ in this service is the great leveler of humanity.

III. An Example for Us (vv. 12-16).

The disciples of the Lord are under obligation to do unto each other as he did unto them. This obligation rests upon his Lordship (v. 14). All who call him Lord in sincerity will obey him. To refuse to obey him is to put one's self above his Lord.

Bearing the Burden.

As to the burden, be content to bear it, until thou come to the place of deliverance; for there it will fall from thy back of itself.—Bunyan.

Our Troubles.

All our troubles come from our sense of separateness from the infinite source.—Orison Swett Marden.

Tempting the Devil.

The devil tempts us not—'tis we tempt him, beckoning his skill with opportunity.—George Eliot.

FLU CAUSED PRESIDENT WILSON'S SICKNESS

Physicians claim that President Wilson is suffering from neurasthenia or nervous exhaustion. This, they claim, is the after effect of an attack of influenza which he had last April, while he was in Paris attending the Peace conference. There are hundreds of thousands of people today who are still suffering some bad effect from last year's attack of influenza.

Doctors are agreed that the Flu is coming back this Fall, and now that cooler weather is here, they are afraid it will break out any time. Even if one recovers from the Flu, the after effects are terrible. The only sane thing to do is to prevent the Flu.

Influenza can be prevented; last year's results prove that. As a preventive for Flu, Turpo has been a pronounced success. Turpo is an effective germicide, combining the old-fashioned remedies of turpentine (which has always been known as the best home germicide), camphor and menthol in a pure mineral base. These ingredients have long been recognized as effective germicides, as well as having really wonderful qualities in relieving colds and congestions. Snuff a little Turpo up the nostrils several times a day, and the Flu germs will have little chance of getting a lodging and breeding place. Many physicians and hospitals use and recommend Turpo.

The fact that there have been cases of "flu" already reported makes it important that you prepare now. Buy a thirty cent jar of Turpo, while your druggist has a supply on hand, and use as directed. Last year druggists could not supply the demand. Remember that Turpo is a preventive, not a cure for influenza. Take care of yourself.—Adv.

"A man dat keeps talkin' 'bout hisself," said Uncle Eben, "sometimes surprises you by de way he manages to make a purty good speech on a mighty slim subject."

BREAKS YOUR COLD IN JUST A FEW HOURS

"Pape's Cold Compound" instantly relieves stuffiness and distress

Don't stay stuffed-up! Quit blowing and snuffling! A dose of "Pape's Cold Compound" taken every two hours until three doses are taken usually breaks up a severe cold and ends all grippe misery.

The very first dose opens your clogged-up nostrils and the air passages of the head; stops nose running; relieves the headache, dullness, feverishness, sneezing, soreness and stiffness.

"Pape's Cold Compound" is the quickest, surest relief known and costs only a few cents at drug stores. It acts without assistance, tastes nice, contains no quinine—Insist upon Pape's!—Adv.

"Better little talent and much purpose, than much talent and little purpose."

"CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP" IS CHILD'S LAXATIVE

Clean tongue! Remove poisons from stomach, liver and bowels.

Accept "California" Syrup of Figs only—look for the name California on the package, then you are sure your child is having the best and most harmless laxative or physic for the little stomach, liver and bowels. Children love its delicious fruity taste. Full directions for child's dose on each bottle. Give it without fear.

Mother! You must say "California."—Adv.

Take strict heed to thy ways; set a watch over thy actions; and govern the thoughts of thy heart.—Dorothea Dix.

GREEN'S AUGUST FLOWER.

Stop a minute and think what it means to say that "Green's August Flower has been a household remedy all over the civilized world for more than half a century." No higher praise is possible and no better remedy can be found for constipation, intestinal troubles, torpid liver and the depressed feeling that accompanies such disorders. It is most valuable for indigestion or nervous dyspepsia and liver trouble, coming up of food, palpitation of heart, and many other symptoms. A few doses of August Flower will relieve you. It is a gentle laxative. Ask your druggist. Sold in all civilized countries.—Adv.

Many People Poisoned

Scores of people meet death each year by a slow process of poisoning that is going on within our bodies. This poisoning is caused by the liver and kidneys failing to perform their proper function. Poisonous matter accumulates within the body and health declines. The unsightly liver splotches, billiousness, headache and dizziness, bad taste in the mouth, coated tongue, a pain in the back or under the shoulder blade, a tired or achy feeling are some of the most common symptoms of this poisoning. If this poisoning it not expelled and the cause removed the resisting power is finally gone and life pays the penalty. Are you of the heedless class or are you safeguarding your health? If you want health you must keep the liver, kidneys and bowels active. Glando Tonic is what you need to restore this activity and expell the poisons. Keep on the safe side and use a reliable remedy. Glando Tonic is put up in a treatment form and guaranteed to do the work. Ask your druggist for a large $1 treatment. Take it as directed and you will be surprised to know how much poison was stored up within your body. When the liver is inactive a mucus or slime collects within the stomach and bowels which hinders digestion and the assimilation of food. This is called catarrh of the stomach or bowels. Glando Tonic cuts this slime and mucus and removes it. A nauceated feeling is sometimes experienced when this mucus is breaking loose but as soon as it is removed from the bowels, you will feel fine, the complexion clear, the appet te return and you will want to tell others of your wonderful cure.

Glando Tonic is sold by druggists or may be secured by sending direct to the Gland-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Indiana.

A surprise supper was given to Rolland Bearss and family at their home on Widney avenue Tuesday evening, by the neighbors. Bearss's had gone to their farm west of St. Joe with a load of furniture and when they returned they found the folks there with supper ready. A jolly good time was had.

Four of the young ladies of the local high school were dismissed for one week by Prof. Chapman, for disobeying orders given on Friday. The basket ball team was billed for Monroeville on Friday evening and the team was given leave of absence at the noon hour, with the understanding that no one else was to leave the school and go. Four of the young ladies took the authority to lay the rule aside and go along and when they came to school Saturday, were expelled for one week. This of course was a surprise to them and they are no doubt somewhat sorry for their disobedience. Strict observance of any rule in school is a necessary thing and when anyone breaks them they should be punished. Saturday three boys played hookey and they were given the same punishment. Parents should see the necessity of the observance of the rules and when the time of the penalty has expired see to it that the children are sent back to school.

GRENADES TO HELP INDUSTRIAL CONCERN EMPLOYES TO SAVE

Government Savings Societies to Be Formed in 100,000 Plants of District to Aid Uncle Sam's Finances.

A fairly generous proportion of the 15,000,000 hand grenades owned by the War Department of the United States when the armistice was signed are to pass into the hands of America's industrial army through the Government Saving Societies of America's industrial organizations. They will be used as savings banks.

Already 20,000 of the country's industrial organizations, those in which Government Savings Societies already flourish, have been "lined up" for distribution. At least 100,000 will be included when the work is in full swing.

The hand grenades are the genuine articles, just the same hand grenades as those with which the Yanks did such deadly execution in Europe. The only difference, in outward appearance, is that a money slot has been cut through the shrapnel casing forming the body of the grenade. Inside, the explosive chamber has been cleared and a removable screw substituted for the base of the casting. In place of the high explosives so carefully developed by American army experts the grenades, as banks, hold one hundred dimes or one hundred pennies—the shrapnel of the United States treasury. Acquirement of a hand grenade bank will become possible to any United States worker by following the simple plan outlined by Harry Edwards Clay, manager of the Industrial Division of the War Loan Organization, Seventh Federal Reserve District, who has the distribution in charge.

The industrial worker, eager to possess one of these remarkable war souvenirs, has only to purchase, through the secretary of the War Savings Society of his particular plant, factory or organization, three War Savings Stamps at a single time or one War Savings Stamp a month for three consecutive months. The grenade bank then will become his, being received through the Government Savings Society for the industrial organization of which he is a part. Thereafter it may be used for personal and private savings, as well as for money in course of accumulation for further War Savings Stamps purchase or as a beginning toward acquirement of one of the newer Treasury Savings Certificates now issued in denominations of $100 and $1,000.

NEW SAVINGS CERTIFICATES

$100 and $1,000 Government Securities Are Available in September for $84 and $840 Respectively.

Treasury Savings Certificates in denominations of $100 and $1,000 are being distributed throughout the five states of the Seventh Federal Reserve district. They may be bought during the month of September for $84 and $840 respectively. These new government securities are in reality discount bonds. They will mature January 1, 1924, and are issued only in registered form to insure them against theft or loss. The same rate of interest is paid as for War Savings stamps, namely 4 per cent compounded quarterly. War Savings Stamps of the 1919 issue may be exchanged for the Treasury certificates.

The Treasury Savings Certificates are offered to the public at any post office of the first or second class and at incorporated banks and trust companies which are agents for the sale of 1919 War Savings Stamps. The name of each purchaser will be inscribed on every certificate, the registration records being kept at the Treasury department in Washington, D. C. Each month the new certificates will increase in price. They began in July at $83 for the $100 certificate and at $830 for the one which will be worth $1,000 when it matures. Thus the income increase is twenty cents a month for the smaller certificate and two dollars a month for the other. They are tax free except inheritance, surtaxes, war profits and excess profit taxes.

A SAFE STOCK FOR ALL.

SING A SONG OF SAVINGS STAMPS

Sing a song of Savings stamps,
The cost of living's high.
But have you counted all the things
These Savings stamps will buy?

They help to take that summer trip,
Or buy some fussy clothes.
How many things they'll help to get,
Goodness only knows!

Willard STORAGE BATTERY

Uniformity

Uniformity is the secret of success of any good product.

It's the reason Willard Batteries with Threaded Rubber Insulation are making such a wonderful record of long life without repairs.

Ordinary materials used for insulation between battery plates are taken just as they come from nature and can't be made uniform by any process.

But Threaded Rubber Insulation is built up by a scientific manufacture. Every piece of it is like every other and almost invariably Threaded Rubber lasts as long as battery plates.

No wonder many of these batteries have given three and four years of uninterrupted good service.

Editor St. Joe News,
Dear Sir:

The News still comes as an old friend of thirty-three years ago. It comes as a reminder of the eight years that I was in business in St. Joe. As I read its columns I find the names of so few of my old associates. Thirty-one years has called so many to their last resting place. As I go over the list, I call to mind J. D. Leighty, Oliver Widney, A. B. Filley, John Widney, Chas. Widney, all intimate friends. Then I call to mind Samuel Widney, Dr. Sheffer, Isaac Meese, Geo. Bleeks, G. W. Woodcox, Chris Curie. Then I stop and reflect, is that all? I find a host of others wearing familiar names but they are worn by a younger generation, the most of them have been born since I left my old native county, where I was born almost eighty-two years ago and spent the early part of my life. But this reminiscence won't interest you nor perhaps any of your readers. Enclosed find $1 25 to insure the paper coming another year.

Respectcully yours,
J. M. Lonsberry,

TAKE TWENTY STEPS TO START HOME OF OWN

War Savings Stamps Will Do the Trick and Help You to Independence in Life.

The man or woman owning a home rather than renting, is on the way to truest happiness and prosperity. The home owner is a solid and substantial citizen, not a national, economic "floater." He is like a tree that has taken firm root.

The man or the woman not now owning a home should lose no time in beginning to work for the home-owning goal. Saving for a home should begin immediately, since comparatively few are financially able to build on the instant. "The first hundred is the hardest," but the "first hundred" needn't come hard at all, if proper saving methods are put into use.

War Savings stamps, with Thrift stamps as builders, and the new Treasury Savings certificates are admirable friends of the American citizen with laudable home-owning ambitions. It's comparatively easy to save $5, albeit the War Savings stamp which in 1924 will mature at $5 in September, 1919 costs but $4.20. The first $5 saved means the first step, the step that counts, toward the home-owning achievement. Take twenty such steps—buy twenty War Savings stamps—within the current year and your filled 1919 War Savings stamps card may be exchanged for a Treasury Savings certificate maturing, in 1924, for $100. If your "first hundred" already approaches realization, take the twenty steps at a leap by purchasing a $100 Treasury Savings certificate which costs, in September, 1919, only $84, with monthly price and value increase of 20 cents. In September, 1919, a $1,000 Treasury Savings certificate maturing in 1924 costs but $840, with $2 monthly increase. With a building lot and from $1,000 to $1,500 capital, it has been estimated, actual home building, under one of several partial-payment plans, may safely begin.

The business or professional woman with home-owning aspirations pins her faith to War Savings stamps and Treasury Savings certificates. They bear 4 per cent interest, compounded quarterly, they mature in five years, they may be redeemed at any time, at any post office, at face value.

PUT FAMILY ON "SAFETY LANE."

Two hundred War Savings stamps bought this year will be $1,000 in 1924 for that new office equipment, new car, post-graduate course in a specialty, payment toward a home, for the youngsters' education, or against a rainy day.

One hundred stamps now will be $500 then, for advancement or protection; and 50 will be $250.

Fix your own mark of your needs or desires and get there via the W. S. S. route. W. S. S. pay more than 4¼ per cent and are absolutely safe and convenient investments for the busy man or woman.

FOUR GOOD RULES TO FOLLOW.

Here are four good rules to follow in providing for your future welfare:

1. Lay aside some portion of the regular income every week or every month.

2. Invest some regular portion of these savings in government securities, War Savings stamps and Treasury Savings certificates.

3. Get full value for every expenditure.

4. Take care of all purchases and utilize them fully.

FOR POULTRY GROWERS

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

When open range is not available and hens must be confined, poultry specialists of the United States department of agriculture recommend the division of the hen yard into two lots, so that green stuff may be grown on one side while the other patch is being grazed. As soon as the green feed is two to three inches high the hens may be turned on it, while the other lot may be spaded up and sown again. This plan provides plenty of green feed throughout the year for the average back-yard flock.

The green crops should be suited to local conditions, those suggested below being adapted to moderate climatic conditions. For the extreme North or South the planting dates should be modified. Thickly sown crops furnish succulent feed and summer shade. From April 1 to July 1 on growing yard 1—oats, chard or lettuce, clover or vetch, sunflowers, cowpeas, rape may be grown. For feeding purposes on yard 2—winter rye, winter vetch, sweet clover may be grown, as well as crimson clover in the latitude of New Jersey and south.

From July 1 to October 1 the oats, chard and lettuce, clover or vetch, cowpeas and rape on yard 1 may be fed, while buckwheat, dwarf Essex rape and flat turnips are grown on yard 2. From October 1 to April 1 the growing crops on yard 1 should consist of oats, winter rye, winter vetch, sweet clover and crimson clover, while at the same time in feeding yard 2 buckwheat, dwarf Essex rape, flat turnips and soy beans are grown.

HERE AND THERE.

The man who likes to do a good job regardless of the pay he is getting is the man who will always be sure of a good job to do.

The man who loses his temper is apt to lose the argument too.

Charity begins at home and if the high cost of living keeps up it will have to get started there mighty soon.

Go to the sick if you want to learn to appreciate your health.

What Causes Colors in the Beautiful Rainbow

While it is true that the beautiful colors displayed by the rainbow are due to the passage of light through rain drops, the popular conception that the drops are directly in line between the sun and the bow is incorrect. The light enters the raindrop and is refracted and reflected back to form the bow. In this passage through the drop the different colors are produced which, blended, make our ordinary white light. Two persons standing side by side see two different bows, though they present the same appearance.

HOW MRS. BOYD AVOIDED AN OPERATION

Canton, Ohio.—"I suffered from a female trouble which caused me much suffering, and two doctors decided that I would have to go through an operation before I could get well.

"My mother, who had been helped by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, advised me to try it before submitting to an operation. It relieved me from my troubles so I can do my house work without any difficulty. I advise any woman who is afflicted with female troubles to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial and it will do as much for them."—Mrs. MARIE BOYD, 1421 5th St., N. E., Canton, Ohio.

Sometimes there are serious conditions where a hospital operation is the only alternative, but on the other hand so many women have been cured by this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, after doctors have said that an operation was necessary—every woman who wants to avoid an operation should give it a fair trial before submitting to such a trying ordeal.

If complications exist, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., for advice. The result of many years experience is at your service.

ROAD BUILDING IS BOOMING

Steady Increase in Federal Aid Business in All Sections—Expenditures $300,000,000.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Since early in 1919 there has been a steady increase each month in the federal aid business in the bureau of public roads of the United States department of agriculture. States in all sections of the country are filing their projects and receiving allotments. The road-building era is in full swing, and it would seem that the end is not yet. All indications point to greater records in the months immediately to come.

Based on complete reports from 44 of the states cash expenditures on the rural roads and bridges of the United States for the calendar year 1918 amounted to $286,098,193. To this should be added the value of statute and convict labor, which cannot be fixed with any great degree of accuracy but probably amounted to not less than $14,000,000, thus making the grand total expenditures for the year $300,000,000. This total is made up of the actual expenditures for such items as labor, materials, supervision and administration directly connected with the construction, improvement and upkeep of public roads and bridges outside the limits of incorporated towns and cities, and does not include any item for sinking-fund payments or redemption and interest on road and bridge bonds.

The year 1918 offered an unprecedented condition in practically all lines of highway work. There was not only a tremendous increase and expansion in the amount of heavy truck traffic on public roads and an unprecedented shortage in regard to road materials, labor and ready funds, but also a decided increase in maintenance work, which was, however, partially offset by a decrease in the amount of new construction.

PLANS FOR GOOD ROAD DRAG

One Shown in Illustration Is Adapted for Localities Where Lumber Is Plentiful.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The design for a road drag shown in the illustration is adapted for localities in which sawed lumber may be readily obtained. In this design the runners are made of 2 or 2½-inch boards, 10 inches wide and from 6 to 8 feet long, re-enforced with other 2-inch boards of the same length, but only 6 inches in width. If more convenient, however, 4-inch runners without re-enforcing boards may be readily substituted for those shown. The method of framing the runners together is a modification of that used in connection with the split-log type of drag. In this case only two of the cross braces have their ends fitted into auger holes like rungs.

In fastening the draw-chain to a sawed-lumber drag, it is usually advisable to run both ends of the chain through holes in the front runner or else make the connections by means of eye or hook bolts, as shown. The reason for this is that the sawed cross braces are seldom sufficiently strong to withstand the pull of the chain when it is looped over them, as is frequently done when round timber crosspieces are used. If straight-grained pieces are used for the crosspieces, however, there is no apparent reason why one end of the chain might not be connected by looping it around the 2½-inch square crosspiece near the cutting end.

Highway Travel Increasing.

Highways travel by means of the passenger automobile increased greatly during the past summer, fully fifty per cent.

Must Have Good Roads.

It costs money to build a good road, but we have got to have them, as the experience of the past and the coming winter will demonstrate.

Hard on Weed Crop.

Fall disking is hard on the weed crop.

GREEDY TOMMY

THIS is little Tommy, who
Sat down to dinner at half-past 1;
And though the company stared and stared,
He ate and ate and never cared!

The company's eaten all they're able;
They've gone and left him at the table!
Oh, Tommy, Tommy! Now you've et it;
Somehow I feel that you'll regret it!

Still he ate till not a crumb
Was left, and then he sucked his thumb!
They lifted Tommy from his chair,
They lifted him with the greatest care!

That night as Tommy lay in bed,
Strange, awful things flew round his head!
The things he'd eaten in a row
Flew there and cried: "We told you so!"

He screamed, and when his mother came
She hid her face for very SHAME!
For there in bed, with snout so big,
She found not Tom, but a little pig!
(Really)

My dears! My dears! Let's you and me
Be very careful so that we
Will not end our Thanksgiving day
In such a melancholy way!

Let Us Pray to Be Worthy.

The gold of harvest and of mine are good; untrammeled peace and carefree prosperity are blessings which America has enjoyed in large measure through many years, and for these things we are grateful. But there are greater blessings than these. And the thoughtful will recognise that one foam of riches may come to a nation out of the experiences that search deep the hearts of men. The crushing and the melting both play their part in bringing out the gold that is pure and fine.

Let us as in other years give thanks, and in the giving let us renew our courage that we may measure up to the opportunities God is offering to us in these most momentous days of the world's history.

THANKSGIVING

By JAMES W. BECKMAN.

We observe Thanksgiving day in keeping with the time-honored custom of the Pilgrims.

Thanksgiving day was born in the hearts of a grateful little group of people who had survived a harrowing season.

Real thanksgivings are those which come spontaneously in moments of gratitude for deliverance from distress, appreciation of the beauties of life or enjoyment of genuine friendship.

We are thankful that most of our troubles never happened and that those which did passed over like the storms.

The wealth of the world has been filling our coffers to overflowing. Minions of Mammon give thanks like the blatant fatted calf, all unmindful of the fate of the fattened and battened.

We are thankful to have gone through another year with its alternating joys and sorrows and await with hope and fortitude the things the next may bring forth.—Illustrated Sunday Magazine of the Boston Herald.

Ain't It Splendid?

AIN'T it splendid to be livin' 'long about this time o' year,
Just around before Thanksgivin', with the mornings crisp and clear;
With the children's cheeks a-glowin', with the future lookin' bright,
And the shops and mills a'goin' like the blazes, day and night?

Ain't it bracin,' ain't it cheerin', when the colts kick up their heels,
To approach the corn crib, hearin' turkeys gobblin' for their meals?
Don't it make a fellow kinda satisfied with life and glad,
When it's got so hard to find a thing that's goin' to the bad?

Ain't it fine to feel the nippin' of the brisk breeze at your nose
When the old dead leaves go sippin' down the lanes, in scraggly rows,
When you've hay to feed the cattle, when you love your fellow men,
And you've money you can rattle in your trousers, now and then?

Ain't it fine to wake from dreamin' of the home your boyhood knew
And to find the glad sun beamin' just the way it used to do,
Long ago, about Thanksgivin', when you'd energy to spare,
When your pa and ma were livin', and the days were always fair?

—S. E. Kiser.

Remember Those Who Served.

The great spirits of earth have been men and women who, with thanksgiving in their hearts and on their lips, served faithfully the ages in which they lived. They won the victories and reconstructed the situations through which our blessings have been handed down to us. For their consecrated services let us be truly thankful. Nor in our thanksgiving must we overlook the heroic service rendered by our own boys in the great, recent conflict, and the supreme sacrifice many of them made. They, together with their brave comrades of the nations allied with us in the battle for righteousness, saved democracy for the world.

Made National Celebration.

President Lincoln it was who appointed the last Thursday in November, 1864, as Thanksgiving day, and each president of the United States since that time has followed Lincoln's example. In 1858 proclamations of a day for Thanksgiving were issued by the governors of twenty-five states and two territories, and it only remained for the president of the United States to make such proclamation to institute the national Thanksgiving day.

WILL NOT USE GERMAN DYES

Real Reason Why the Red Trousers of the French Infantryman Have Been Discarded.

The red trousers of the French army are to be no more. There is a political and economical tragedy about it with which very few people are familiar. The originator of the red trousers was Napoleon, who was prompted in his "reform" by a desire to help the native cultivation of madder root against the Dutch and Italian rivals.

But then came the Graebe-Liebermann discovery of the alizarine dyes, and in less than ten years, between 1870 and 1878, the production of madder root in France shrank from 25,000 to 500 tons, and then it disappeared. This was a great German victory. Nevertheless, the army trousers continued to be dyed red, only this time the dyes had to be imported from Germany. It evidently required a great war to put an end to this humiliation.

A Salutary Lesson.

"You've been up in an airplane?"

"Yes," replied the prominent citizen, "and it did me a lot of good."

"How was that?"

"At an elevation of 7,000 feet in the air for the first time in a long and active career I realized how little I really amounted to."

A certain county of Connecticut boasts of its record of having had but two murders in nearly 100 years.

Just Rats.

For want of a pied piper of Hamelin, the British board of agriculture is using the next best thing to get rid of the rats and mice—a bill.

The house of parliament tittered when the bill was introduced, says "A Londoner." The titterers did not know that the rat has been described as the most expensive animal maintained by man. He costs in damage anything up to $200,000,000 a year—as much as the whole government subsidy to the farming industry. He spreads bubonic plague and other diseases among men and animals alike. He is of no earthly use except as a scavenger, and there the remedy is worse than the disease. The fiat has gone forth; he must be exterminated wherever he shows his head—in stacks, in granaries, in warehouses, in the holds of vessels. The mouse, too, if less harmful, is just as useless as his big relative—and the only living creature which will regret his disappearance is the cat.

Entirely Incredulous.

"I can make you young again," said the doctor.

"I don't believe it," replied Farmer Corntossel. "I used to think I was jes' as young as anybody when I was dancin' the tango up to the town hall, but it didn't amount to nothin', an' I don't believe the doctors is goin' to do any better helpin' me fool myself than the dancin' teacher did."

OLD AGE STARTS WITH YOUR KIDNEYS

Science says that old age begins with weakened kidneys and digestive organs.

This being true, it is easy to believe that by keeping the kidneys and digestive organs cleansed and in proper working order old age can be deferred and life prolonged far beyond that enjoyed by the average person.

For over 200 years GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil has been relieving the weaknesses and disability due to advancing years. It is a standard old-time home remedy and needs no introduction. GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil is inclosed in odorless, tasteless capsules containing about 5 drops each. Take them as you would a pill, with a swallow of water. The oil stimulates the kidney action and enables the organs to throw off the poisons which cause premature old age. New life and strength increase as you continue the treatment. When completely restored continue taking a capsule or two each day. GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules will keep you in health and vigor and prevent a return of the disease.

Do not wait until old age or disease have settled down for good. At the first sign that your kidneys are not working properly, go to your druggist and get a box of GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules. Money refunded if they do not help you. Three sizes. But remember to ask for the original imported GOLD MEDAL brand. In sealed packages.

GREAT SECRET OUT AT LAST

Observing Intellect Has Discovered How the Brain That Names Sleeping Cars Works.

I used to be awed, writes Inobetta, at the though of the intellectuality of the man who names the Pullman cars. To what storehouse of classical or historical lore did this mentality have access, that he could exhume therefrom such names—names that seemed to mean something, but yet just eluded analysis? I used to think I'd like to meet that bird.

But I've pegged him at last! He's no giant intellect at all. He's just a pathological specimen—one of these wrong-foot cases the medical journals have been discussing lately, whose cerebral or spinal connections seem to be crossed. Their handwriting goes from right to left—it's called "mirror writing." Their co-ordination mechanism is constantly in reverse gear. And how do I know that the nomenclator of Pullman cars is one of these? Simply thus:

The sleeper in which I rode from Cincinnati to Atlanta the other day was named "Klimwoc!"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

POOR ENGLISH PLACE-NAMES

Pessimistic and in Many Cases Derogatory Appelations Given for No Apparent Reason.

For a people upon the whole cheery and possessed of much homely philosophy, the English have shown a surprising amount of pessimism in their choice of place-names, remarks a Canadian soldier now in England. Withal, their Mount Pleasants and the like are a good deal rarer than their Coldharbours, Starveacres, Starvecrows, and so forth. But for stark pessimism the writer knows no place-name to beat that of a northern farmstead situated at the exposed end of a bleak, unkindly valley which always seems much colder and more foggy than any of the near-by heights. The name is Bad End—simply. One of its occupants was hanged, but so far as the name goes this must have been effect rather than cause, for the hanging was recent, while the name antedates the oldest inhabitant's recollections. Cackle Street, Darwell Hole, Old Hole, Bugshill, Poppinghole, Frogihole, Pigstrood, Platnix, Kitchenhour, Grandturzel, Little Nineveh, Tubslake, Brownbread Street, are a few merely old place-names recalled at random, and all to be met with in a day's march along the beautiful Sussex-Kent border country.—Montreal Herald.

"There's a Reason"

LET NOTHING MAR REJOICING

Surely This Year All Should Keep Thanksgiving With Heart Full of Praise and Gratitude.

Now once again both you and I are going to keep Thanksgiving. And shall we be discouraged by the lofty cost of living? And shall we sparely dine and sup, still H o o v e r e s q u e l y slaving—and shall we pass the Turkey up because we're used to saving?

I think I hear you answer "Nay"! And I, for one, won't do it; I shall cut loose, Thanksgiving day, and eagerly go to it! I shall not fuss with low-priced meat, with tripe or stringy mutton—I'm going to hop right in and eat until I bust a button. With jellies made of grape and quince, no substitute to thin 'em; and pies of good, old-fashioned mince—with meat and brandy in 'em. And if I want a suckling pig to supplement the gobbler, I'll have it—I don't care a fig! And also sherry cobbler!

For never in the memory of anybody living have people seen, it seems to me, so wondrous a Thanksgiving. The Hun is licked, the world is free, the cruel war is ended—how can our celebration be one feature short of splendid?

Ah no, we do not need to waste the goodly gifts of heaven—but why deprive the food of taste, the wheaten bread of leaven? We needn't feed the garbage can nor choke the refuse hopper; but let us treat the inner man, and do the job up proper!

Let's emulate the Pilgrim Dads, by whom it was i n v e n t e d; although they did not roll in scads, their conscience was contented. Their crops were short, the country new, 'twas hard to make a living; November's tempests fiercely blew—and yet they kept Thanksgiving. Upon that day they didn't think an epicure a sinner—they gathered all their meat and drink and had one glorious dinner. The Pilgrims, they were godly men, the times were most religious; they thought it sinless, even then, to found a feast prodigious. Let us rejoice, as then they did, in sweet and hard-earned freedom—let's hail each woman, man and kid and take 'em in and feed 'em!!—Ted Robinson in Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Glorious Gobbler

All hail the glorious gobbler!
When autumn skies are gray
He mounts his china platter throne
And rules Thanksgiving day;
It is a noble oval
With gilded garlands fair,
Or it may be an heirloom prized
Of old blue willow ware.

Salute the glorious gobbler;
(Though sometimes it's a hen
That dawns in appetising brown
Upon our famished ken).

He wears his festal dressing
Contrariwise, within,
Receiving all his subjects true
In nothing but his skin.

Here's to the glorious gobbler!
Though far afield they roam,
Yet in his honor every year
The children gather home.
His drumsticks beat assembly
From mountain top to sea,
He wears a gold celery crown,
The king of birds is he.

Long live the glorious gobbler.
With his attendant pies,
Mince, pumpkin, apple, cranberry,
And each of generous size.
Of all famous monarchs
From Ecuador to Spain,
He is the only one who boasts
An undisputed reign.
—Minna Irving, in New York Sun.

Time to Think Only of Blessings.

Let us take the right kind of interest in Thanksgiving day—a day that is and always shall be very dear to the hearts of all women. Let us put avarice and envy out of our minds, and think only of, and be grateful for, our blessings.—New York Evening Telegram.

Psalm of Our Fathers

That psalm our fathers sang we sing,
That psalm of peace and wars,
While o'er our heads unfolds its wing
The flag of forty stars.
And while the nation finds a tongue
For nobler gifts to pray,
'Twill ever sing the song they sung
That first Thanksgiving Day:
"Praise ye the Lord with fervent lips, Praise ye the Lord today:"
So rose the song from all the ships,
Safe moored in Boston Bay.
—From "The Thanksgiving in Boston Harbor," by Hezekiah Butterworth.

CUSTOM ONE OF THE OLDEST

Origin of Thanksgiving as a Great Social and Religious Festival Lost in Antiquity.

The great social and religious festival known as "Thanksgiving" dates back to the Pilgrims and Puritans of New England. The sentiment of gratitude for favors granted is as old as humanity, and ages before the Massachusetts settlers were born mankind was in the habit of expressing its thankfulness by some form of public celebration. But the institution of Thanksgiving as an annual festival of thanks and praise for blessings received at the hands of the Great Author of our being had its origin among the founders of New England.

For reasons which were "good and sufficient" unto themselves, the Puritans abolished Christmas, and feeling the need of some other day to replace it, they instituted Thanksgiving day. After the first harvest of the New England colonies Governor Bradford ordered a public rejoicing with prayer and praise. This was in October or November, 1621. On July 30, 1623, was held the second Thanksgiving, the first ever appointed by a governor in an authoritative way. On February 22, 1631, there occurred in Boston the first Thanksgiving celebration of which any written account remains among the colonial archives. The first regular Thanksgiving proclamation was printed in Massachusetts in 1677.

The first Thanksgiving proclamation ever issued by a president of the United States was by George Washington in 1795. From Massachusetts the custom spread to other colonies. In 1830 the governor of New York appointed a day for public thanksgiving and other northern states quickly followed.—Rev. Thomas B. Gregory.

Bringing Home the Bird.

Royal Thanksgiving Bird.

The turkey began to take first place at Thanksgiving feasts back in colonial days. It was the wild variety that won favor then—a fowl with a fine flavor, but no longer known either to commerce or the hunters. The magnificent bronze creatures that have taken the place of the wild forerunners leave no reason to regret the latter's disappearance. So handsome are these high-bred birds that slaughtering them to make a holiday feast seems something like a crime. It is a crime whose heinousness is forgotten when dinner is served, however.

Deep Reasons for Gratitude.

The vastness of America's cause for rejoicing today cannot be reached even by the international outpouring, for never before have we had such colossal reason for thanksgiving in the liberation of some nations, the succor of others, and the release of our own highest impulses for free play. Since the days of the Nazarene no such words have been spoken, no such doctrine preached, as we hear from day to day at the close of humanity's tragedy. Our thanks are deep and loud, sounding around the world.

Are you keeping your liver and bowels clean with Cascarets, or shocking your insides every few days with Calomel, Salts, Oil and violent pills?

Cascarets work while you sleep; they cleanse the stomach, remove the sour, undigested, fermenting food and foul gases; take the excess bile from the liver and carry out of the system all the constipated waste matter and poison in the bowels. Cascarets never gripe, sicken or cause inconvenience and Cascarets cost so little too.—Adv.

As It Seems

The Road—In New Overland 4 on Three-Point Cantilever Springs

YOU expect a bad road to ride as it looks. It did, until the introduction of the Overland 4 Springbase.

Overland 4 does not change the road, but it does change the manner in which you can ride on it. It gives you comfort instead of dis-comfort. It gives you a smooth, sailing sensation instead of bouncing and swaying.

The Diagonal attachment of Three-Point Cantilever Springs at the ends of a 130-inch Springbase gives long wheelbase road steadiness. Yet Overland 4 retains all the advantages—lightness, economy, and ease of handling, of 100-inch wheelbase.

This means an altogether new standard of riding comfort, a noteworthy reduction in the wear and tear which lessens the efficiency of a car. The new springs give longer life to every part and thus minimize upkeep and replacement costs.

Tires wear longer because cushioned against hammering blows. Light weight means marked economy in gas, oil and running expense.

Overland 4's equipment is complete from Auto-Lite Starting and Lighting to Demountable Rims.

Come in and see this remarkable car. Ask for booklet. Overland 4 Touring, $845; Roadster, $845; Coupe, $1325; Sedan, $1375. Prices f. o. b. Toledo.

You will please read your notice carefully and then respond promptly.

Obituary

Thomas Almond, son of Riley and Asenith Rickett, was born in Concord township, DeKalb county, April 13, 1851 and departed this life November 29, 1919, aged 68 years, 7 months and 16 days.

Most of his life was spent in this township, with the exception of one and one-half years spent in Lansing, Michigan.

He was married to Miss Catherine Saylor, October 12, 1875, and she has been his faithful companion and helpmate since that time. One daughter, Mrs. Etha Jackson, was born to this union, and she, with her mother and daughter, alone are left of the immediate family. Beside these, there is one brother, of eleven children, yet living, Sherman Rickett of near this place.

"Tom" as he was known to the entire community, was a cheerful and jovial father and neighbor, always looking on the bright side of life. He was converted and joined the Concord church thirty-one years ago, afterward becoming one of the charter members and builders of what was known as Fairview church. Just a few days before his death he renewed his faith in Christ and gave testimony of his hope in him.

He moved to St Joe ten years ago and has made this his home since that date. Nine years of his residence have been spent as town marshal and street officer, and in this capacity he has been known by almost everyone in the community and by them will be missed. He was also a faithful member of the local lodge, K. of P., who had charge of the ritualistic services at the grave.

Funeral services were held from the Methodist church Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock, Rev. Johnson officiating. Burial in Riverside.

CARD OF THANKS.

The family desire to express their thanks to the neighbors and friends for their kindness and help during the sickness of our husband and father. Mrs. Catherine Rickett,
Mrs. Etha Jackson and daughter.

Some Rain and Wind.

A severe rain and wind storm visited this section on last Saturday is evidenced in most every locality and the reports are still being made of the damage that was done. Telephone and electric lines suffered considerable. The farmers were busy Sunday all day getting their fences and fodder shocks gathered up. Frank Johnson suffers the loss of having his silo blown down. Curt Watt had his silo roof removed. The school house had six lights broken out. Roofs were blown from a number of buildings in the neighborhood and many minor results are reported. Chimneys came in for their share of work. The telegraph lines on the B. & O. were badly blown down and the section men were called out to clear up the wagon road west of the tower in the night. The storm is the worst we have had and it will take a long time to square things about.

U. S. EFFORTS TO END STRIKE FAIL

Offer of 14 Per Cent Increase Flatly Rejected by the Miners.

PARLEY ANJOURNS SINE DIE

Operators Agree to Accept the Governments Proposal as a Basis for a Settlement—Lewis Claims Injustice Done the Miners.

Washington, Nov. 28.—The government's offer of a 14 per cent increase of wages was flatly rejected by the coal miners.

As a result the conference between the miners and operators adjourned sine die with the settlement of the wage controversy still "in the air." No provision was made for the resumption of the conference, the miners declaring "that they were going home and sit tight."

The miners' rejection came after the operators had accepted the government's proposal as a basis for a settlement although they declared that the increase without raising the price of coal to the public would mean the loss of profits to a large number of mines and would seriously interfere with production.

After the rejection the operators tendered a compromise offering to submit the entire dispute to a board of arbitration. This also was refused by the miners and the conference took an adjournment.

Statement by Lewis.

The following statement was dictated by Acting President John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers:

"The miners and operators' joint conference adjourned sine die. The mine workers' representatives declined to recommend to the miners any acceptance of the 14 per cent increase offered.

"The operators pretended to be willing to grant this 14 per cent increase, but in the same breath stated that they would be unable to operate a large number of their mines unless they had an increase in the selling price of coal. It would be foolish for us to attempt to make any agreement with the operators unless their mines were to be operated.

"The position of the mine workers is unchanged. We hold that the United States government cannot break its word. The pledge given by Secretary of Labor Wilson to grant a 31.6 per cent increase in wages must be redeemed.

"In my judgment Doctor Garfield and the cabinet have committed the most colossal blunder in the industrial history of our nation. They are blindly following an academic theory without regard to justice to the mine workers or the effects of such theory upon the people of the country.

Says Justice Is Denied.

"The responsibility for the crisis now confronting the nation must lie upon those statesmen who are using the powers of the government to oppress and deny justice to the great element of citizenship directly concerned in the mining industry.

"I cannot believe that the people of our country will indorse a policy of opression and repression which means continued industrial chaos, and intense suffering on the part of the mine workers and our entire citizenship."

The letter sent to Doctor Garfield by the operators of the central competitive coal field, accepting the government's offer, reads:

"Recognizing the seriousness of the present crisis and the urgent need of the country for coal, we wish to advise you that, subject to your approval and conditioned upon the mines resuming operations immediately, the operators' scale committee of the central competitive coal field accept, as a basis for the settlement of the present wage controversy and termination of the strike, the figures submitted by you to the joint meeting of operators and miners held yesterday evening, namely, an average increase of 14 per cent to be granted to all classes of mine labor, such increase to be apportioned in accordance with the wage bases that are acceptable to the employees and employers, thus preserving present differentials. Otherwise than as above, modified in complete accordance with your proposal, the present contract in all its term and conditions to be continued in full force and effect until March 31, 1922.

"We have already notified the miners to this effect.

Says Profits Eliminated.

"At the same time we wish to call your attention to the fact that the acceptance of this increase in wages without any increase in selling prices entirely eliminates the profits of a large number of mines. Such a large number, in fact, we fear that the production of coal will be seriously affected. We understand that operating statistics for 1919 are not now in your possession, and we shall rely upon the government, when such statistics are properly assembled and presented, to make such adjustments in selling prices as will permit these mines to make such fair and reasonable profits as they are entitled to under the Lever law."

William Green, secretary of the United Mine Workers, said:

"Secretary of Labor Wilson states that the mine workers are entitled to an increase in wages amounting to 31.6 per cent. Mr. Garfield says 14 per cent. Obviously these two conclusions conflict with each other and, to say the least, are confusing. The mine workers know the figures of Secretary of Labor Wilson are approximately correct and the figures of Doctor Garfield are erroneous. The mine workers challenge the figures of Doctor Garfield and cannot and will not accept them. We will accept the figures of a responsible cabinet officer, Secretary Wilson.

Hits at Garfield.

"Doctor Garfield, because of the responsible position which he occupies, has done a great injustice to a million miners in America. His statement and decision has served to inject into the settlement of the miners' wage controversy an almost insurmountable obstacle. In that respect his action approaches the commission of a moral crime against the public.

"Mine workers cannot mine coal at the figures fixed by Doctor Garfield. The acceptance of his conclusion would mean untold sacrifice, suffering and deprivation on the part of the miners and their families. The problem of decent wages and a decent American standard of living, together with an adequate production of coal cannot be solved as a college professor would work out a problem in geometry, algebra or theoretical philosophy.

"The practical way to solve the present problem of coal production is to grant the miners an increase in wages sufficient to meet the increase in the cost of living and to guarantee them an American standard of living. They will then risk their lives in the mines, accept all the hazards of the industry and mine a steady stream of coal sufficient to meet every requirement."

Garfield's Ruling.

Acting under instructions from the cabinet, United States Fuel Administrator Garfield told the coal miners and the operators that the wage increase for the miners should be 14 per cent and that the price of coal to the public should not be raised.

This declaration, coming from the goyernment as a basis for settling the wage controversy, was received with great dissatisfaction by both the miners and the operators.

Some of the miners' representatives declared that the offer of a 14 per cent increase, in the face of the fact that Secretary of Labor Wilson had offered them 31.6 per cent, was an insult. They declared that the miners would starve idle rather than go back to the mines at this wage increase.

The operators, who have been expecting that the government would see them through on any wage increase, declared that their margins would not permit them to give the miners the 14 per cent out of their own pockets. They said that it would break many of the weaker mines and that it meant ruin and sacrifice of years of earnings and savings.

Garfield Adamant.

The operators for the most part bore their disappointment in silence, but from the miners came denunciation after denunciation of the government's solution. Without reservation, and without mincing words, the miners questioned Doctor Garfield and, through him grilled the government for more than two hours.

Doctor Garfield stood adamant in the face of the questions and the criticism hurled at him from the miners' side of the hall. He answered all questions without betraying personal excitement and firmly but kindly told the miners that what he had laid before them was purely a series of facts.

Doctor Garfield said his statement was made on the facts and the figures in the case as he had investigated it. He said that it was as if one looked up at the clock and there read the time.

"The clock tells you the hour, and that is what I have done. I tell you that per cent of increase which should be applied to the miners' wages, on the average to equalize wages with the rise in the cost of living is 14 per cent," said Doctor Garfield.

Shot From Other Barrel.

Dr. Garfield was equally insistent on his finding that the price of coal should not be raised at this time. This was a shot fired from the other barrel of his double-barreled statement to the conference. He made it clear that the facts, as he found them, meant that if the miners' wages were increased 14 per cent, as he said should be done, that the burden should be borne entirely by the operators and not by the public.

PERSHING TO INSPECT CAMPS

General to Leave Washington December 3 for a Three Months' Tour of Establishments.

Washington, Nov. 28.—General Pershing will leave Washington December 3 on a three months' tour of inspection of all the military establishments in the United States. Plans for General Pershing's trip were announced by the war department. At the same time it was officially denied that it had any relation to the situation in Mexico.

General Pershing's first stop will be at Camp Lee, Virginia. From there he will go to several camps in the South and thence on to Chicago, where he will arrive on December 20 for a two-day visit. He is planning to be in Lincoln, Neb., on Christmas eve, and will also spend Christmas day there with his son and two sisters.

General Pershing will resume his tour immediately after the holidays, starting at Camp Grant, Rockford, Ill., and continuing westward.

WHO'S WHO in the WORLD

LADY ASTOR'S ELECTION CAMPAIGN

Lady Astor—"Miss Nancy from Virginia"—certainly made a picturesque campaign for the seat in the house of commons vacated by her husband, the new Viscount Astor, son of the late Viscount Astor of Hever Castle, formerly William Waldorf Astor of New York city. This American wife of an Englishman of title who owns many millions of dollars worth of New York real estate, developed a quickness of repartee which carried her triumphantly through most of the heckling at her meetings. Here are some of her sayings:

"It took the spirit of Drake and the faith of the Pilgrim Fathers to get me here tonight."

In a packed schoolhouse a woman cried out: "I want to ask Lady Astor why we are all packed into a room like this?" Quick as a flash came the retort: "Because men arranged it." After making a slight error of figures she quickly rectified it and said: "It was Eve who admitted she was wrong. It was not Adam. If we women make a mistake we will say so."

"The worst that can happen to him is to leave him alone. If I were the kaiser and felt that I had been sent from God to rule the world and found myself shut up in a Dutch village—that would be punishment enough for me."

"One of my enemies said I had a pretty face. I thought I had lost that 15 years ago. It has bucked me up more than anything I have heard for a long time."

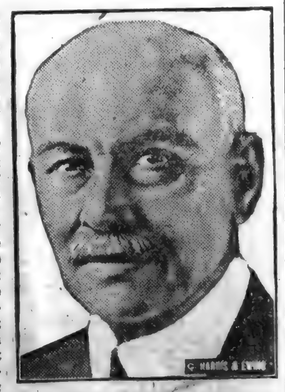
COOLIDGE NOW A NATIONAL FIGURE

The triumphant re-election of Governor Calvin Coolidge of Massachusetts because of his stand for Americanism against radicalism makes him a national figure.

Governor Coolidge comes by his Americanism logically for he was born on July 4. His birthplace was Plymouth, Vt. He is forty-seven years old. After attending Amherst college he took up the practice of law in Northampton, Mass. He began his political career as a member of the Northampton city council. Subsequently he was elected mayor, city solicitor, clerk of the Hampshire county court, state representative, state senator, president of the state senate, lieutenant governor and governor.

Governor and Mrs. Coolidge are the parents of two boys. The governor's father, Col. John C. Coolidge, was a member of the Vermont state senate the two years the son was in the Massachusetts senate. Governor Coolidge is noted for the brevity of his speeches.

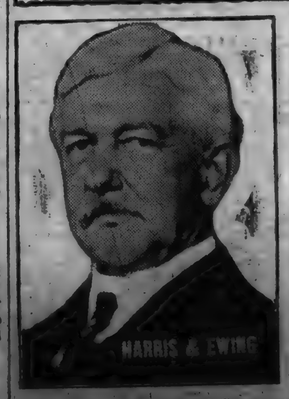
PEN SKETCH OF JUDGE E. H. GARY



Elbert H. Gary of the United States Steel corporation was the observed of all observers at the recent national industrial conference. Here is a pen sketch of him by William Allen White, the Kansas novelist, who is temporarily indulging in newspaper work:

"Judge Gary sits in the midst of the public group. He is the dapperest man in the room. He is dressed as if sitting for his portrait, with clothes creased and linen immaculate and hands manicured. They generally rest clasped together in his lap. He impresses one as being a nerveless man. He sat for 80 minutes without moving a muscle, except once or twice to brush his chin while Samuel Gompers stood arraigning the Steel trust and all its men in a powerful speech one afternoon. His terrier bright eyes glistened as they gazed dispassionately at Gompers' face, but they did not flinch at Gompers' climax, and no color came or went in his face as the tide of Gompers' oratory rose and fell. The whole conference, 50 reporters and a room full of spectators, were looking at Gary while Gompers spoke, and Gompers was looking at Gary with rather a fiery eye. But never a twitch moved Gary's face. Not even by a movement of a foot or a hand did he indicate that he was under the slightest nervous pressure. The cold, determined, indomitable physical nature of the man never had a more perfect test than it had that afternoon under the Gompers arraignment."

GORGAS ERADICATES YELLOW FEVER



America, which gave the world a new and terrible plague, has wiped it out, according to word received from Maj. Gen. William C. Gorgas. Yellow fever was unknown to the rest of the world before Columbus discovered America. Soon it was creating havoc in Europe and Asia.

The final extermination of this plague was one of the tasks undertaken by the Rockefeller foundation. A commission, headed by General Gorgas, had just succeeded in driving it back into the two or three places in South America where it was endemic, and was preparing to move on the outer works and exterminate the last remaining vestige of the disease when the great war broke out and the experts were called to a more pressing campaign. Sentries were left on guard, however, and as soon as Doctor Gorgas was relieved from military service he took up again the fight on yellow fever. Now General Gorgas reports that the fight is won. The last remaining plague spot was Guayaquil, Ecuador. General Gorgas, returning from this west coast port, announces that he believes the last trace of the disease has been eradicated, bringing about the definite end of the yellow fever menace, the first of the great diseases to suffer extirpation.

900 FLU CASES REPORTED TO HEALTH SERVICE

Washington dispatches state that there were over 900 flu cases reported to the public health service last week.

This is an increase over the previous week, and as cold weather draws near authorities are worried.

A recent public health report says: "City officials, state and city boards of health should be prepared in event of an recurrence of the flu."

Even if one recovers from the flu, the after effects are terrible. The only sane thing to do is to prevent the flu. Influenza can be prevented; last year's results prove that. It is important that a good germicide should be used frequently. Turpo is an effective germicide, combining the old-fashioned remedies of turpentine (which has for years been known as the best home germicide), camphor-menthol and pure mineral base. As a preventive for flu, Turpo has been a pronounced success.

Snuff a little Turpo up the nostrils several times a day, and the Flu germs will have little chance of getting a lodging and breeding place. Many physicians and hospitals use and recommend Turpo.

The fact that more than nine hundred cases of influenza have been reported to the United States Health Service makes it important that you prepare now. Buy a thirty cent jar of Turpo of your druggist now while he has a supply on hand, and use as directed.

If in spite of all precautions influenza develops, go to bed and summon a physician. Influenza is a serious malady, and requires the best medical attention.—Adv.

"A MILLION DOLLARS IN MY STOCKING—"

Synopsis.—While in the little French town of Vevay, where the "staid, proper spinster" who tells the story is spending a vacation, she is asked to allow a young girl, Claire de Ravenol, to be her companion back to the United States. Although forming an attachment to the girl, the heroine takes a dislike to Monsieur de Ravenol, Claire's father, and declines. On the boat she finds Claire in the care of a casual acquaintance, Mrs. Delario, whom she had met while each was purchasing a pair of slippers, exactly alike, which figure largely in subsequent events. When they reach New York, where Claire was to have been met by her mother, the latter does not appear, and Claire perforce goes to Mrs. Delario's home. In the confusion at the custom house, the spinster carries off one of Mrs. Delario's slippers. Through that happening she learns later that some one unknown to her has been in her flat. Calling on Mrs. Delario, that lady shows her some remarkable gems, believing them to be rubies, but which are really blood-red diamonds, and easily worth a million dollars. Mrs. Delario admits the gems were smuggled, but offers no explanation. While they are talking, a pounding on the door throws them into consternation.

CHAPTER IV.

The Wicked Flee.

I confess I was frightened when I thought of the diamonds and only two women alone in the house—apparently—to guard them, but Mrs. Delario was terrified.

"These stones"—she looked about the room despairingly. "Where can I hide them? And we two women alone in the house—"

Again the ring—a long, long rattle; whoever it was meant to get in. Followed a pounding on the door.

Mrs. Delario, though deathly white, was now composed and ready to meet the emergency, whatever it was. Mechanically she slipped the elastic over the box and rose.

"I'll go to the door," she decided. "It's better to see who it is, anyway. Perhaps it's only a district messenger. If it isn't—if it should be officers—they might break in the door."

And with that she whisked up her skirt and tucked the box down into her stocking.

I had risen and was preparing to follow her out, feeling she might need me, but she turned and said for me to wait behind the door out of sight and listen.

She left me. I heard the front door open just as the pounding began again. She asked, "What is it?" and a man's voice answered, "Does Eugene Delario live here?" She said he did, and demanded what was wanted of him. The man's voice said, "I must see him at once."

And then, to my amazement, I heard her tell the man, "I'm sorry, but you can't—tonight; he's sick in bed."

"I rather think I can see him, then," was the retort. "And I will."

There followed, well, not quite a scuffle but a very active shuffling of feet, and the man pushed his way into the house in spite of her, pushing her aside from the door, which he shut with a bang and a "Now, then." Sensations began to trickle down my spine.

"In which room is the young man sick?" demanded the voice.

"I tell you you can't see him—I refuse to let you go upstairs. What right have you forcing yourself into my house this way and demanding to see my sick son?" she asked angrily.

"Now, lady, be reasonable and I'll show you," he replied in a tone meant to conciliate. I heard a rattle of paper.

"A warrant!" she gasped.

"That's what," he said. "Want to see my badge?" There was a slight rustle as I assumed he showed it to her, for she gasped, "An officer—a warrant!" and seemed to sway on the stair.

"Now, lady," he began, still conciliating, "you don't want to make any more trouble for yourself than's necessary. I got to do my duty—and it ain't always pleasant—but I got to do it. It ain't my fault if I got to arrest your son—I ain't doing it to spite you, nor him—he didn't steal any diamonds off me, you know—"

"Steal any diamonds!" she interrupted. "He never stole a diamond in his life. Never!"

I fancied the man shrugging as he answered, "So much the better for him if he didn't steal them—I'm sure I hope for your sake he didn't, though it looks bad, him trying to sell them to the very parties that knew all about them."

"Oh!" and I could see her clinging to the banister. She was evidently at a loss what to do.

I understood in a flash what had happened—this man or an accomplice was the one who had followed her son home from the Maiden lane dealer's yesterday. He evidently thought he was making headway, for he went on.

"Now see here, lady, you take it from me—the parties that are pressing this case don't care for publicity any more than you do—or your son does. It would ruin him if it got into the papers, to say nothing of his serving time for it—"

"Serving time! My God!" broke from her involuntarily.

"Of course he'll serve time if it's proved on him," her visitor assured her.

She gave a sob. I was wrought up. It was all I could do to keep my place and not join her and help defy the man; but his next words held me listening.

"If he'll give back the stones he showed yesterday, or tell where he's hid them I can get this settled out of court and nobody will be the wiser—if you don't say anything. See?"

"It isn't true!" she cried. "My son never stole a cent's worth of anything in his life."

"Here's the warrant."

"Arrest him if you will, but the law will prove him innocent—if there's law in the land, and I sometimes doubt it."

"But hadn't you bettter talk to him first? It won't hurt to hear what he has to say, and if it can be arranged on the quiet—"

"I shall not talk to him! Do you think I would insult my son by asking him if he stole diamonds?"

Followed a silence. Then the man's voice, "Well, if you won't I suppose you won't. But you'll regret it."

"I won't."

"Then I'll have to do it myself. Which room is he sick in?"

"The third floor back—but you can't go up," and she planted herself across his way.

I saw his hand reach out and remove hers from the banister and as he passed her she sank on the lowest step and began to sob. I may have counted six when Mrs. Delario whipped into the seance room, my coat on her arm.

"Quick—you must go," she whispered. "You must hide my diamonds."

I gasped and asked, "How?"

"While he's upstairs trying to get into a locked room."

She was dragging my coat on my arms and saying at the same time, "It's a fake—that man isn't an officer. I knew it was coming—I saw it clairvoyantly when Eugene came home. Hurry—hurry!"

"But suppose—" I began.

She cut me short. "You can! He doesn't know you're here—he didn't see you. You can get away while he's breaking in the door and looking for Eugene. I'll have time to telephone the police. Only go—go immediately—before he sees you."

She whisked up her skirts as she spoke, pulled the box out of her stocking and thrust it in my hands. "I can't." I felt I simply couldn't take the responsibility.

"But they're mine—I swear to God they're mine," she cried, evidently thinking the man's words had convinced me that the stones were stolen.

"I Knew It Was Coming—Hurry—Hurry!"

"They're all I have in the world. If they're found by these scoundrels they'll be stolen from us. Don't you see it? That man's a thief."

From upstairs came the noise of pounding on doors and the words, "I know you're here, so you may as well open the door."

I held the box, too paralyzed to know what to do, but Mrs. Delario had her wits about her if I didn't.

"Put it in your stocking and run," she commanded. "Quick—your stocking."

And I whisked up my skirt, even as she had done, and stowed the diamonds in my stocking.

She pushed me out of the seance room ahead of her and we tiptoed to the vestibule. "Run," she whispered. "I'm going to scream for help as soon as you're out of sight."

In her hurry to get me off she almost pushed me down the steps. Then she snatched off her thin slipper, and the last glimpse I got of her as I turned the corner showed her ramming it into the crack of the front door to hold it open.

What she did next she told me later, but I may as well put it in here. I was out of sight when the man blustered up to where she stood in the open door, looking up and down the street for somebody to call.

"You may as well tell that young man of yours," growled he, "that if he don't let me in I'll break the door in."

"I don't think you will," she said calmly. "Now go."

"Not till I get what I came for," he said, taking hold of the door and trying to move it and finding it mysteriously wedged open.

"Well, you'll not do that this trip," said she with spirit. "He isn't there—and he wasn't there. He was in the sitting room at the end of the hall"—she pointed to the seance room, the door of which he could see stood open—"and while you were trotting upstairs he ran out for a policeman. If you don't believe it wait and see for yourself."

At that the fellow seized her arm and tried to pull her back into the house and shut the door, but found it still wedged open, he could not see with what, as he was on the inside. But the moment he laid hands on her she began to scream, "Help! Help!" as loudly as ever she could.

He didn't wait to see what happened—as a matter of fact nothing happened, for there wasn't a soul in sight on West End avenue when she screamed.

"I'll have a squad of police here myself to 'help' you if that's what you're after," he flung back as a parting threat when he bolted down the steps and disappeared around the same corner that had just hidden me. But that was the last she heard of him that night. She pulled her slipper out of the crack and shut the door. Then she went all to pieces and had a cry.

* * * * * * *

As for me, when I left the house, I crossed the street, turned south and into the first cross-street I came to. It seemed as though everybody knew I had a million dollars in my stocking and was just waiting to nab me, or hand me over to the next policeman.

But as nothing happened I became a little more coherent, though I had the feeling I was being followed all the time, yet I couldn't spot my shadow. My whole energy of mind was bent on giving my pursuer the slip. When at last I spied a subway station I jumped off the car, made a bolt of it for the stairs, rushed past the ticket chopper, throwing a nickel into his box, boarded a train that fortunately proved to be a north-bound express; got off at the next station and took a local; got out and took another express and got out for good when the guard bawled, "Huddn-n-forty-fift," walked round the block where I live, and when there wasn't a living soul in sight ducked into the front door of my apartment house.

The elevator was rattling down from upstairs but I didn't wait for it. I tiptoed up the stairs, the descending elevator drowning the sound of my steps. I let myself in, put up the chain-bolt and took a long breath. Then my knees suddenly crumpled up under me and I went all to pieces in a heap.

It was almost two o'clock before I found strength enough to undress, and I was so dazy I could hardly get my clothes off. While I was doing it I had brief thoughts of keeping on my stocking and taking the diamonds to bed with me; but I decided no—there's a limit to one's obligations in a case like this: if burglars come to burgle—and have you ever noticed how very near a burglar feels when you have a million dollars in the house?—I'll let them burgle. I'll not help, but I'll not hinder; life is too uncertain at its best. So I set the box on the edge of the dining room table, conveniently, where burglars who were looking for just such a shabby little box filled with diamonds couldn't fail to see it the instant they jimmied the front door off its hinges, or got in from the fire escape, or crawled up the kitchen dumb waiter, or came down the gas log into the fireplace.

And then I went to bed—and slept, expecting to find that box exactly where I put it.

CHAPTER V.

More Trouble.

And I did. For the only time—as far as I remember—in the whole of this adventure into which I'd been dragged to save a friend, the expected happened. I slept and overslept and waked up feeling drugged and cold and with a dull wonder if I'd dreamed it the night before, and as I came out of my bedroom I saw the box of diamonds just where I'd left it and it gave me a thrill. But I let it lie and took my bath and dressed without going near it. Then I lifted the lid with the feeling that I was bound to find the box empty.

And there lay the seven diamonds just as I had put them back.

At this point something dangerously like suspicions of Mrs. Delario began to trickle through my mind. She'd smuggled the diamonds, but how did I know she hadn't stolen them, too? These stones, by the looks of them, never belonged to any uncle or relative Mrs. Delario had in her life—they never belonged to anything less than a grand duke or a prince, and the fact that she had no idea of their real value was proof that she'd come by them in some surreptitious way.

Why had I ever brought the things home? Yet how in common humanity could I have helped it? It was just one of those things you've got to do—when you do it. But by the time I'd finished breakfast I had decided that the risks I ran and the responsibility—to say nothing of the mystery—were one too many for me and I'd wash my hands of the whole thing. So without waiting to hear from her I put on my wraps, stuffed the box in my stocking and went straight to her house.

A wild-eyed Swedish girl let me in and showed me to the reception room, saying that her mistress was "giving a reading and would be out soon," but I waited a good half-hour, ticked off by an ugly, expensive mantel clock, before I heard the seance room door open and the rustle of skirts that told me the sitter was leaving.

"Oh Please Keep Them Just a Little Longer."

Mrs. Delario showed her out and then came into the reception room looking pasty and unnatural. I held the box in my hand, ready for her When she saw me—and it—I thought she would faint.

"No—no—don't!" she cried, as I attempted to give it to her. She struggled for breath for a few minutes, but regaining her composure she apologized for the way she'd acted, saying that the shock of the night before had left her unstrung and that seeing the stones again in the house, when she thought they were safe, had been too much for her; and then she told me how she'd foiled the thief the night before and had afterward rushed to the telephone and warned her son—who was spending the evening with his fiancee—not to come home, but to go to a hotel under an assumed name. Which she hoped he'd done, but didn't know.

"Oh, if I could only see—if I could only see for myself and my dear ones," she burst out. "Like the doctor, I can help others but not myself," and she sank down on the sofa, murmuring: "If I could only see—if it were somebody else—"

"No," she said, "people don't understand—except professionals—that it's almost impossible for clairvoyants to get anything for themselves, or those very near to them. I can't even read for sitters after I come to know them very well. There's something—a kind of a veil—comes up—" she broke off in her explanation and went to the front door and looked out.

"I'm nervous and all unstrung," she excused, coming back and sitting down.

I made a motion to give her the box, only to see her draw back with the same frightened look and protesting gesture.

"You aren't going to desert me, are you?" she cried. "Oh, please—I beg of you—I implore you—keep them just a little longer—"

Trouble follows the trail of the blood-red diamonds.

PUBLIC HIGHWAYS

ENTRANCE ROADS FOR FARMS

Engineers of Bureau of Public Roads Give Advice on Application of Bituminous Material.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Owners of large farms and rural estates seeking a more satisfactory type of entrance road have applied to the bureau of public roads of the United States department of agriculture for advice regarding the application of bituminous material on main entrance and much-traveled farm lanes.

The bureau's engineers point out that such applications may be made successfully on any farm road which has already been constructed of stone gravel, or other similar material, and is in a thoroughly compacted and reasonably smooth condition. A coal-tar preparation applied cold, or an asphaltic oil, can be used and if applied by the farm employees, the cost should not exceed seven or eight cents a square yard for materials. The compacted gravel or stone road should be thoroughly cleaned of dust and the bitumen applied with ordinary sprinkling pots from which the perforated nozzle has been removed and the spout carefully flattened into a symmetrical rectangular opening about one-quarter of an inch wide, so that the material may be poured in a broad, flat stream. If a large amount of work is to be done, a specially designed pouring can may be purchased of dealers in road equipment. Care should be taken to have an even distribution, and the quantity applied should be approximately one-half gallon to a square yard of road surface. After applying the bituminous material, clean gravel or stone chips should be spread evenly over the surface, and if possible, rolled with a lawn or field roller. Where gravel or chips are not available, clean, coarse sand will serve as covering material. It should be spread in sufficient quantity to prevent the bituminous material from adhering to tires of passing vehicles. Attention is called to the fact that this treatment should not be made where drainage from the stables or barns will flow over it. Where mudholes are likely to form around hitching posts or at stable entrances, if a more durable pavement is desired, a section of concrete slab should be laid.

ROAD OUT OF SOLID GRANITE

Will Lead From Estes Park to Glen Lake, Connecting With Lincoln Highway.

In the Rocky mountains, Colorado, aided by the federal government, is building eight miles of road out of solid granite. The road, which will lead from Estes Park in the Rockies to Glen Lake, connecting with the Lincoln highway and forming a part of the transcontinental highway, will bring Switzerland to America. The road will cost, when completed, more than $25,000 a mile.

BIG ROAD PROGRAM PLANNED

Alabama to Issue $25,000,000 in Bonds to Match Federal Appropriation for Highways.

Plans to issue $25,000,000 in bonds to match a similar federal appropriation for building roads in Alabama were set on foot at a meeting of the Alabama Highway Improvement association. The project includes a three-mill levy by counties for maintenance. A constitutional amendment to authorize this project will be asked of the next legislature.

Country's Urgent Necessity.

The most urgent necessity of our country in the immediate future is good roads, permanent roads that can be used 12 months in each year.

Bond Issues Voted.

Bond issues aggregating many millions of dollars for new highway construction have been voted by more than a score of states this year.

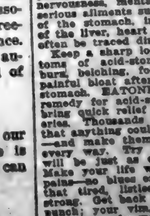
THE JOY OF MOTHERHOOD

Came to this Woman after Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to Restore Her Health

Ellensburg, Wash.—"After I was married I was not well for a long time and a good deal of the time was not able to go about. Our greatest desire was to have a child in our home and one day my husband came back from town with a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and wanted me to try it. It brought relief from my troubles.



I improved in health so I could do my housework; we now have a little one, all of which I owe to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. O. S. JOHNSON, R. No. 3, Ellensburg, Wash.

There are women everywhere who long for children in their homes yet are denied this happiness on account of some functional disorder which in most cases would readily yield to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Such women should not give up hope until they have given this wonderful medicine a trial, and for special advice write Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. The result of 40 years experience is at your service.

MILLIONS

Suffer from

Acid-Stomach

Millions of people suffer year after year from ailments affecting practically every part of the body, never dreaming that their ill health can be traced directly to acid-stomach. Here is the reason: poor digestion means poor nourishment of the different organs and tissues of the body. The blood is impoverished—becomes weak, thin, sluggish. Ailments of many kinds spring from such conditions. Biliousness, rheumatism, lumbago, sciatica, general weakness, loss of power and energy, headache, insomnia, nervousness, mental depression—even more serious ailments such as catarrh and cancer of the stomach, intestinal ulcers, cirrhosis of the liver, heart trouble—all of these can often be traced directly to acid-stomach.

Keep a sharp lookout for the first symptoms of acid-stomach—indigestion, heartburn, belching, food repeating, that awful painful bloat after eating, and sour, gassy stomach. EATONIC, the wonderful modern remedy for acid-stomach, is guaranteed to bring quick relief from these stomach miseries. Thousands say they never dreamed that anything could bring such speedy relief —and make them feel so much better in every way. Try EATONIC and you, too, will be just as enthusiastic in its praise. Make your life worth living—no aches or pains—no blues or melancholy—no more of that tired, listless feeling. Be well and strong. Get back your physical and mental punch; your vim, vigor and vitality. You will always be weak and ailing as long as you have acid-stomach. So get rid of it now. Take EATONIC Tablets—they taste good—you eat them like bit of candy. Your druggist has EATONIC—50 cents for a big box. Get a box from him today and if you are not satisfied he will refund your money.

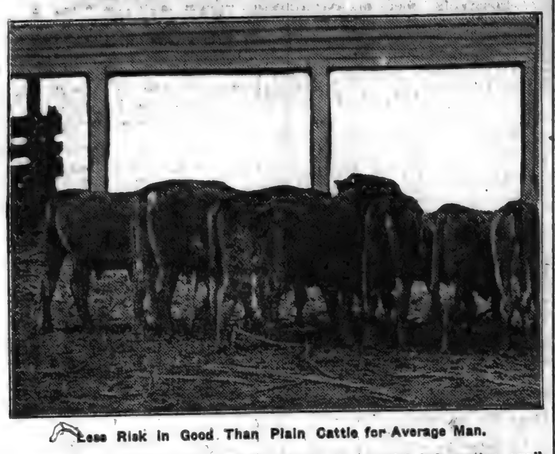
CATTLE FEEDERS MUST EXERCISE MORE CAUTION THIS WINTER THAN FORMERLY



Less Risk in Good Than Plain Cattle for Average Man.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Are you going to feed any cattle this winter? If so, what kind of feed are you going to use? And what kind of cattle are you going to feed?

Those questions have been asked persistently, one feeder of another, for the past several months wherever cattle are commonly fed in the United States. Now the time has arrived for filling the feeding lots—and the question is more insistent than ever.

It used to be the common practice, when corn was high in price, to feed more roughage. If corn was low, the feeder could afford to feed it in larger quantities over a longer period. If he was going to feed corn in considerable quantities over a long period, he was disposed to buy high-class cattle. If corn was high and the feeder felt that he had to use a larger proportion of roughage, he was disposed to buy plainer, thinner cattle.

A Day of New Rules.

But just now all the old rules are upset. Feeders, in common with everybody else, are living in a new world—just as truly a new world as if the things seen by the zealot of Patmos had come to pass. Corn is high—unprecedentedly high compared to prewar prices. The old rule would be "Feed more rough stuff." But roughage also is high—unprecedentedly so. What is to be done about it?

The United States department of agriculture agrees with the expression of many experienced feeders that, largely, it is a matter of each man's guessing for himself. Still the department insists that the accumulated knowledge about cattle feeding is worth a great deal and that it can be applied even under the present disturbed conditions by practically every feeder. The necessities of the situation will vary with different localities and with different individuals in the same locality. It is a time, the department experts believe, when no man should fail to avail himself of the help of the county agent and experienced feeders in determining what is best to do under particular conditions.

Some of the foundation facts of feeding, of course, are unchanged. It is still true, as it always has been, that the soil fertility of a grain farm is almost certain to be depleted unless a considerable part of the crop is fed to live stock and the fertility value returned to the fields. Feeding, after all, is ordinarily a part of a balanced agriculture, and its profits or losses cannot be exactly figured on the basis of money received for finished cattle—though every man, of course, should take all precautions reasonably possible to put the balance on the right side of the ledger for the single operation.

Feeding Period Shorter.

The new elements are variously applicable to different sections and to different individuals. At least one of them, however, is pretty general. The feeding period will have to be shorter than used to be considered desirable. The maximum period that most feeders can contemplate this year is said to be 150 days but preferably considerably less. That means, necessarily, that most feeders cannot afford to "feed to a finish." It has been realized for a long time that every pound of weight put on at the end of a finishing period costs more than a pound put on earlier in the process. When every pound put on at any stage of the process is costing, as the feeder feels, too much, the old six to eight months period of feeding is in the discard. It may come into play again on a new deal, but not while the cards are distributed as they are at present.

It used to be standard advice that only animals of good quality should be used, as they sell for a higher price and dress a higher percentage of beef. The department experts still say that the average feeder is taking less chance on a good steer than on a plainer one, but there are many feeders, especially the inexperienced, whom they advise to use the plainer kind. It just about sifts down to this expression from an old, experienced feeder: "A policy that is practical and profitable for one feeder may be wholly impracticable for another. Because one man buys only top feeders and feeds to a finish is no evidence that he is a better cattle man than his neighbor who buys a lower grade of cattle and does not feed to a finish." And that means, again, that every feeder is advised to analyze his own situation with the greatest care that he can give to it, that he avail himself of whatever aid the county agent can give, that he obtain the special information available from his state agricultural college and experiment station, and from the United States department of agriculture.

System Is Guessing.

The whole matter is much of a guess, as everybody admits. But there is a good deal of system, not to say science, in good guessing. The man who guesses how many beans are contained in a half-gallon jar does not simply say, "Well, I guess there are 469,873 beans in that jar." He ascertains, as nearly as he can, how many beans fill a cubic inch of space and then he computes the cubic contents of a half-gallon jar. With the variation in sizes of beans, thickness of glass and other things, it is still enough of a guess, but the guesser is not going it absolutely blind. The farmer whose profits for the year depend largely on how he comes out on the cattle he feeds should be at least as systematic a guesser as the fellow who takes a gamble on a jar of beans.

RIGHT KIND OF CORN SILAGE FOR FEEDING

Much Depends on Period of Maturity at Which It Is Cut.

Where Plant Is Immature, Not Well Glazed and Dented It Makes Washy, Low-Quality Feed, Likely to Sour.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The feeding worth and palatability of good silage depends on the quality of the corn and the period of maturity at which it is cut. Where the corn is cut when it is immature, not well glazed and dented, and still in its juvenile stage, it makes washy, low quality, acid-forming silage which is likely to sour. On the other hand, corn harvested when it is well dented and at the proper degree of ripeness for best use as silage, gives a winter feed which is one of the best producers of milk and meat. Corn should be allowed to pass well through the milk stage and become thoroughly dented before being siloed. Investigations have demonstrated that it is much preferable, for silage of the best quality, to have the corn a little overripe rather than underripe.

In some sections farmers, and particularly dairymen, are accustomed to ensile combination crops, using mixtures of soy beans and corn, cowpeas and corn, sorghum and corn, or a combination of these three for canning purposes. As a general proposition, where other branches of animal husbandry in addition to dairying are taken into consideration, corn or some other coarse forage is most desirable for ensilage purposes. Acre yield is the end sought the chief objection to the valuable protein forages such as cowpeas, soy beans and the like being that they are low yielders better adapted for hay than silage. Dairy farmers who require an abundance of succulent silage of a rather balanced composition highly prize the leguminous crops mentioned as supplements to corn and usually realize an adequate return from the sale of their milk to allow them to produce these crops at a profit.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

By Mary Graham Bonner

THE DOG'S FINE.

"Well, bow-wow, what do you think I had to do?" asked the St. Bernard dog, named Sport.

"What did you have to do?" asked Rover, another big dog, but not as big a dog as Sport. Rover was a collie.

"I had to do it before I came here," said Sport.

"Are you glad you came here, or didn't you mind doing what you had to do?" asked Rover.

"Yes, I'm glad I came here," said Sport, "and I'm glad that my master came, too, for I wouldn't be happy without my master no matter what I had to do. We've been together so much, in so many places, under so many different conditions—that is we've been together in pretty places and ugly places, in big places and small places, in the real country and in the real city, in every way possible."

"And on rainy days and sunny days," said Rover.

"Of course," agreed Sport.

"What made your master come here?" asked Rover.

The dogs had made friends when they had met in the village that morning. Every one had greatly admired the big St. Bernard and they had all heard what a wonderful record he had made through his life.

"Won't you tell me some of the things you've done?" asked Rover.

"Oh, dear," said Sport, "I've done what any dog would do who had had my chances. That's all."

"But tell me," said Rover, "and then tell me what you meant when you said you had had to do something which I should think about."

"I didn't say it quite that way," said Sport. "I asked you to think or to guess what it was that I had just had to do—I meant before I came down here?"

"I Got a Medal."

"I'll try to guess after you tell me your history," said Rover. "I won't be conceited, for we're friends."

"Well, I rescued a man and his daughter from a fire," he said. "I was quite young at the time. There was a fire in the opposite house and the firemen hadn't come and I knew the man and his daughter were inside. I had given the alarm as best I could by barking and waking up my master.

"He was quick to help me always and I knew that he would give the alarm. But I knew how I could get in the house and how one of the doors could be pushed open from the outside.

"I got the man and his daughter out—I took the daughter first, and I dragged them along with my teeth. I tore their clothes badly but that couldn't be helped.

"I got a medal for that which made my master very proud. And then I saved a little boy from drowning once and also stopped a runaway horse.

"I pulled out of the cold water a girl who was skating and who had fallen through the ice. Oh, I've done several little things like that, and I've had several medals and my picture has been in the paper and all of that."

"You're modest about it," said Rover. "You speak of those things you've done as though they were of no more signs of bravery than the eating of a bone."

"I'm not proud of those things," said Sport, "honestly I'm not, and that isn't false modesty either. I'm glad that I happened to be the fortunate dog who could do them.

"But my master moved from the city with me lately because he wanted a place where he could play lots of golf at any time on holidays and after he got home from business, and he thought it would be nicer for me to have the country to enjoy without having to wear a muzzle."

"Muzzle?" asked Rover.

"Oh, yes; that was what I was going to make you guess," said Sport. "I will tell you though instead for I am late for dinner. I was fined for not wearing my muzzle in the city. Of course my master hadn't put it on me and he paid the fine in one way. But I carried it in my mouth to the judge when he said what it was to be. And he fined me very little for he said I had such a splendid record. Wasn't that nice of him?"

"You've had every experience," said Rover, admiringly.

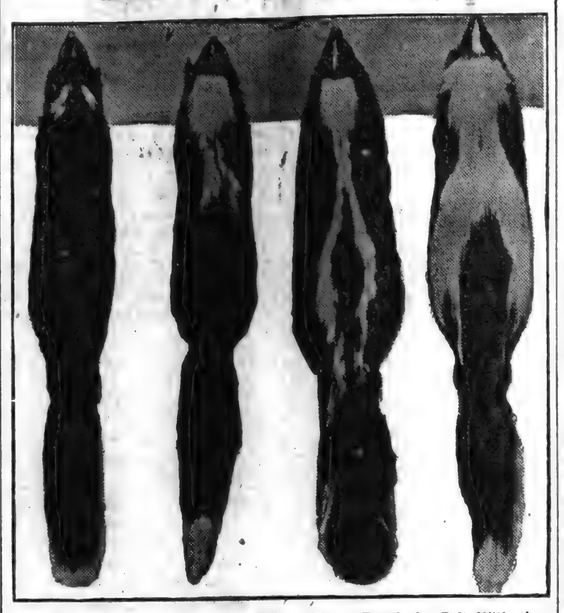
TRAPPING AND SELLING FURS CAN BE MADE PROFITABLE FARMING SIDE-LINE



Four Grades of Skunk Fur—Other Things Being Equal the Pelt With the Least White in the Fur Is the Most Valuable and That With the Most White Is the Least Valuable.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

With the approach of cold weather the thrifty farmer in almost any section of the country soon can undertake some form of fur trapping with profit. A knowledge of the fur-bearing animals found in his vicinity and how to treat their pelts reveals a source of income often overlooked. For the boy in the country nothing offers a more delightful diversion than a trapping expedition, particularly if it entails a money reward. Where the farm itself affords little opportunity for trapping, an accessible stream or wooded tract is generally to be found near-by where fur-bearing animals can be caught. While the fur resources of the country have been diminishing steadily, prices have been rising. The war also has been an important factor in this upward trend.

Wait Until Fur Is Right.

The person about to engage in pelt gathering must understand at the outset the necessity of postponing trapping until the animals' fur is at its best. The pelt of a mink, for example, killed in September might not be worth more than 50 cents, whereas if the same animal were killed in November or December, its pelt might bring $10. Speaking generally, trapping should not begin until cold weather has set in, that is, until late November or December, for most sections of the country. Two principal exceptions to the rule are the muskrat and beaver, whose fur is not at its best until February or March.

In addition to the widely distributed fur-bearing animals mentioned below each region has many others to lure the pelt collector. The prices given here are necessarily only approximations. Each trapper must bear in mind that the size and condition of the individual pelt, as well as other factors, will have much to do with the sum it will bring.

Skunk Pelts Valuable.

The skunk, one of the most common fur bearers, is found in every state of the Union. Large skunk skins probably will bring the trapper from $1 to $5 this season, while the pelts of the little spotted skunk will bring from 10 to 80 cents. The weasel, of one variety or another, is to be found in practically all sections of the country. Formerly the brown pelts were considered worthless, but with the rise in fur prices brown pelts should net the trapper from 10 to 25 cents each, while the white pelts will bring from 50 cents to $1.50.

An animal not to be found in large numbers, but native to regions north, south, east and west, is the mink. When in prime condition its skin, if secured in the north, should bring from $4 to $8, while a skin secured in the south should command $2 to $3. Likewise, the raccoon living in the north produces a better pelt than the one living in the south. Good raccoon skins are worth from $1.05 to $3.75 each to the trapper.

Many persons, particularly city dwellers, may be surprised to learn that many foxes still are trapped in this country. Red fox pelts, obtainable in widely distributed areas in the Northern states, should bring from $10 to $30 each this season, while the gray fox found in the Southern states will bring from $1.50 to $3 a pelt.

An example of returns that can be secured from fur resources long overlooked is found in the fact that the people of Oregon netted approximately $50,000 from mole skins last year, following trapping demonstrations of the representatives of the biological survey of the United States department of agriculture. The demonstrators showed that while millions of European mole skins were used by fur manufacturers in America before the war, the skins of some American moles, especially the large, common variety of western Washington and Oregon, are larger and have better texture than those from Europe. Farmers' Bulletin 832, published by the United States department of agriculture, describes the best kinds of mole traps, how to set them, and gives other information. The methods discussed are especially adapted to the Pacific coast states, but with modifications will apply to all localities where moles are found.

Muskrats Still Numerous.

While minks, raccoons, and skunks have become somewhat scarce in certain localities, muskrats have not diminished in numbers except in places where the marshes have been drained. These animals multiply much more rapidly than many other fur bearers, and because of their aquatic retreats and their habits are better fitted to maintain their numbers under reasonable protection. Muskrat pelts this season should bring from 75 cents to $2 each. Though the price of cottontail rabbit skins is low—15 cents to 35 cents a pound for dry cased skins—this source of income should not be overlooked by the trapper-farmer, as frequently a large number of these animals can be caught in the course of the winter. There is frequently a good market for the rabbit meat also. Among other fur-bearing animals more or less widely distributed throughout the country are opossums, badgers, and, for western regions, coyotes and wolves.

Handling the Fur.

If the farmer who temporarily turns trapper is to realize the best prices for pelts, he must learn the proper methods of handling them. Most skins should be "cased" for the market. A cased skin is one removed from the carcass after slitting the hind legs but not the belly of the animal, thereby leaving a tubular shaped pelt. The skin is left with the fur turned in, and dried on a stretcher made of thin board sharpened to a point, or of heavy galvanized wire.

The biological survey of the United States department of agriculture furnishes on application information regarding the trapping of fur-bearing animals, laws relating to the subject, and the preparation of pelts. It also supplies inquirers with lists of buyers for various kinds of pelts.

HONEY IS PROFITABLE CROP

Product Is Always in Good Demand and Some Home Club Members Have Made Good Profits.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

There is always a ready sale for good honey, the members of home clubs organized by the department of agriculture and the state agricultural colleges have discovered. Some members have made a remarkable success of the work. One in Morgan county, Kentucky, is known as the "Bee Woman," not only because of the size of her enterprise but because of her ability in handling the swarms. She had 150 hives of bees last summer. From 75 of them she has harvested 500 pounds of honey in six months. The home-demonstration agents teach up-to-date beekeeping to any women in their counties who are interested in bees. Often the difference between a money-making swarm and a hive which barely supplies its own needs is lack of knowledge.

Sciatica,— Lumbago,— Rheumatism Caused by Uric Acid

Laporte, Ind.—"I suffered for nearly a year with sciatica. I was unable to work for two months in the spring and about three weeks in the fall. I took electric treatments and several different kinds of medicine, but got no relief until a short time ago, when I came in possession of a bottle of Dr. Pierce's Anuric (anti-uric-acid) Tablets, which I took in accordance with directions. One week after I started taking 'Anuric' I went back to work in a greatly improved condition, and today, no matter what the weather is, I have no pain from sciatica, so I will recommend the 'Anuric Tablets' to all who are suffering from rheumatism."—Glen Hines, 204 Washington Street.

A WONDERFUL REMEDY FOR KIDNEYS, BLADDER, URIC ACID

Through failure of kidneys to act, through congestion, inflammation, any person's condition is ripe for disease to fasten its hold upon the system.

At Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., there has been tested for the past few years a new remedy for kidney, bladder, uric acid troubles, rheumatism, gout and such ailments as follow, and so many cases, both acute and stubborn, have yielded to this wonderful remedy that Dr. Pierce decided to name it Anuric (anti-uric-acid), and arrange for its distribution to the public through medicine dealers everywhere. You will find it many times more active than lithia, dissolving uric acid as water does sugar.

Obtain a bottle of these tablets today from your druggist here in town. Simply ask for Anuric Tablets and notice the gratifying results.

HOME MADE TEA FOR CONSTIPATION

Is used by entire families because it is purely vegetable, does the work and costs very little.

Why pay high prices for Liver and Bowel remedies when none are better than Dr. Carter's K. and B. tea, which is purely vegetable, can be brewed at home, and a small package will last a long time.

Thousands of old people will tell you they have been drinking it for years, and after the liver and bowels have been put in fine condition in a few days by a before bedtime cup, that only an occasional cup is afterwards necessary to keep one feeling fit and fine.

People who drink a cup of Dr. Carter's K. and B. Tea once in a while, seldom, if ever, have any bilious attacks, sick headache or sallow skin. It's good for boys and girls, especially those who are peevish and fretful. Druggists have been selling it for many years.

Catarrhal Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Catarrhal Deafness, and that is by a constitutional remedy. HALL'S CATARRH MEDICINE acts through the Blood on the Mucous Surfaces of the System. Catarrhal Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result. Unless the inflammation can be reduced and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing may be destroyed forever. Many cases of Deafness are caused by Catarrh, which is an inflamed condition of the Mucous Surfaces.

"CAN I BE CURED?" SAYS THE SUFFERER

How often have you heard that sad cry from the victims of disease. Perhaps the disorder has gone too far for help, but oftener it is just in its first stages and the pains and aches are only nature's first cries for help. Do not despair. Find out the cause and give nature all the help you can and she will repay you with health. Look after the kidneys. The kidneys are the most overworked organs of the human body, and when they fail in their work of filtering and throwing off the poison that constantly accumulates in the system, everything goes wrong. GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules will give almost immediate relief from kidney and bladder troubles and their kindred ailments. They will free your body from pain in short order. Wide Range in Latest Styles

For the woman who is not inexorably committed to the one-piece frock her suit is a matter of earnest consideration, observes a prominent fashion writer. Not so much as to what it shall be made of, for here there is scant choice, but as to how it shall be built to fit the peculiar requirements of her figure.

Never before in the history of the tailored suit has there been so wide a range of design as can be found in this season's models. And unless a woman has unerringly bad taste, or, as sometimes happens, cherishes an inner vision of herself as tall and willowy when unkind nature has designed her short and wide, there is no excuse for her selecting an unsuitable model.

Suits are very much in the foreground of the picture at present and show a wealth of interesting detail as to finish, as well as a wide latitude in type and cut.

Thoroughly well dressed women at the horse show will undoubtedly be exponents of the various ways a suit may take—the plain and strictly tailored suit with a fur neckpiece, for morning wear, and the dressier fur trimmed type for afternoon. It is in the latter, of course, that most of the variety in design is to be found, though the jacket, tailored on mannish lines, has, too, its picturesque differences of outline.

Daring and Picturesque.

There is a distinct leaning toward the daring and picturesque in the suit coats displayed this season. Especially new and attractive are the coats on Louis XV. lines, rather fitted, with a nipped-in waist and a good deal of spring at the hips, often accentuated by means of large pocket flaps, godets or a circular cut to the coat skirts.

This is the most radical departure from the lines to which we have become accustomed and has its extremely short version in which the coat skirt stands out in a series of hard and ungraceful godets, its medium length version in which the coat is very true to type, and its long version, which covers all but two or three inches of the skirt.

A coat of this last character was shown among the imported models and is worthy of note for the reason that very long coats are said to be approaching. In this instance the coat of brown velours de laine is cut so that it is quite smooth at the back and in the cross over front, but has much fullness of the coat skirt at the sides.

These full sides are held in place at the waist by means of embroidery and the coat is collared, cuffed and hemmed with fur.

The coat of long or medium length is much more in evidence than is the short one, and perhaps the coat either partially or wholly ungirdled is more to be desired than the girdled coat.

Besides the coat on Louis XV. lines there are other ways contrived of enlarging the outline of the hips.

Coats Straight and Slim.

In striking contrast to the suits on these lines are coats cut as straight and slim as a willow wand, which, when they are trimmed at all, usually open over a fur waistcoat.

Attractive Duvetyn Fur Trimmed Suit Regarded as a Striking Model.

A typical Russian blouse suit is shown which is straight of line and apparently has no means of ingress. This suit is fashioned of beaver colored wool velours and has bands of military looking embroidery ending in tassels at one side stretched across its smooth front. It is loosely girdled with a double bend of cloth and has a high collar of the beaver fur which finishes the sleeves and the edge of the coat and slips on over the head but these have never attained great popularity in this country.

There are, however, a number of models, which close on the shoulder and the side, leaving the front unbroken by fastenings, and one very charming suit, the upper part of which crosses over in bodice fashion, wrinkles about the waist and ties in flat girdle ends at the side.

The back of this coat is flat and plain, but in the front are two circular sections which are gathered in many folds. In one curious little suit the short jacket godets slightly at the back, has a cutaway front and a choker collar all banded with fur. The back of the skirt is plain, but in the front hangs a full fur edged apron drapery almost to the edge of the skirt.

Charming Brown Velvet Suit Conspicuous Because of Cartridge Plaits.

There are very few short jackets, but among them is one which is sure to make itself felt, for, though abbreviated, it is by no means insignificant. It has an immense collar, which falls over the shoulders and wrinkles in hood fashion about the throat and the fullness of the loose back ripples in many folds, banded by fur.

There are suits with coats which are short in front but have a long loose panel at the back, and there are other irregularities in the coat skirts, but on the whole they hang on an even line about the figure.

Coats which blouse either in the back or the front all around are by no means unusual and look well on the young and slim. An excellent model for a woman with large hips is the coat with a straight long waisted upper part on which the skirt is slightly gathered.

Importance of Pockets.

Pockets have taken on an extraordinary importance in the more elaborate suits. They are bold, assertive and are frequently the means by which the characteristic outline of the model is produced.

The bulging hip line is brought about in one simple coat by immense pockets set crosswise, exactly at the hip line and trimmed by stitched bands of cloth, above and below which are wide bands of fur.

Another means of widening the hips is seen in coats cut with pannier draperies, the looped out tops of which constitute enormous fur edged pockets. These are found in both long and short coats.

Again there is a curious but not unpleasing fashion of placing the great pockets directly on the fronts of the coat. This peculiar line is even accentuated by allowing the pockets to loop at the tops which are bordered deeply with fur. Or the front sections of the coat skirts may be made entirely of fur in which pockets lurk or a wide band of fur may extend across the front of the jacket, standing out at the top to form pockets. In every case coats trimmed in this fashion have a flat, plain back.

A very picturesque and handsome suit of brown velvet has its full hip sections set on in cartridge plaits and a ruche of cartridge plaited velvet to edge the fronts and the enormous eighteenth century cuffs.

Velvet suits as yet appear only in small numbers, but the various woolen fabrics with the exquisitely soft velvet finish, which it is easier to group under the name of duvetyn, are in all but universal use.

Unbelted Topcoats.

Topcoats for the coming season promise to be on straight, unbelted lines, with many low bloused backs.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Teacher of English Bible in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1919, Western Newspaper Union)

LESSON FOR DECEMBER 7

PETER AND JOHN ASLEEP IN GETHSEMANE.

LESSON TEXT—Mark 14:32-42.

GOLDEN TEXT—Watch ye and pray, lest ye enter into temptation.—Mark 14:38.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL—Mat. 26:36-56; Luke 22:39-54; John 18:1-11.

PRIMARY TOPIC—An Angel Strengthening Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Peter and John Fail to Help Jesus.

INTERMEDIATE TOPIC—Asleep on Duty.

SENIOR AND ADULT TOPIC—Jesus Depends upon His Disciples.

I. Christ's Suffering (vv. 32-34).

1. The place (v. 32). The garden of Gethsemane—an inclosure containing olive and fig trees, beyond Kidron, about three-fourths of a mile from Jerusalem. The name means olive-press. The name is significant of the occasion. Edersheim says it is an emblem of trial, distress and agony. Perhaps the garden was owned by one of Jesus' friends.

2. His companions (v. 33). He took with him the 11 disciples, that they might share, so far as possible, this sorrow with him. Being a real human being he craved sympathy. He bade them watch with him. While he knew that he must "tread the wine-press alone," he had a keen appreciation of sympathy so far as those who loved him could give it. The behavior of the disciples shows the utter limitation of human sympathy.

3. His great sorrow (v. 34). This is the same as the "cup" in verse 36. It was not primarily the prospect of physical suffering that was crushing him; it was the suffering as a sin-bearer—the sensations of his pure soul coming into contact with the awful sin and guilt of the world. Only pure and refined natures can understand this. In addition to this, there was the judgment stroke from the holy God as it fell upon his Son instead of the sinner. God caused the iniquities of the world to strike upon Jesus (II Cor. 5:21; Isa. 53:6).

II. Christ Praying (vv. 35-42).

Though he prized human sympathy in the hour of supreme need, his only recourse was prayer. The sympathy of our friends is helpful, but in the great crises of life we can find help only when we go to God in prayer. "Is any among you afflicted? Let him pray" (James 5:13).

1. The first prayer (vv. 35-38). (1) His posture (v. 35). He fell on his face, prostrate on the ground. In the hour of our great need we naturally prostrate ourselves before God. This is a becoming posture. (2) His petition (v. 36). "Take away this cup from me." By the cup is meant his death on the cross. He did not desire to escape the cross. No doubt it was most grievous to him to face its shame, but he pressed on, knowing that for this cause he had come into the world (John 12:27, 28; cf. Heb. 2:14). He prayed that the "hour might pass from him," that is, that his life might be prolonged to die on the cross at the appointed time to make atonement for the sins of the world. The burden was so great that it seemed his life would be crushed out. His prayer was heard (Heb. 5:7). When God hears our prayers he grants the petition desired (I John 5:14-15). Angels ministered to him, giving the necessary grace to endure to the end (Luke 22:43). (3) His resignation (v. 36). His will was in subjection to the Father. He knew that his death on the cross was the will of God the Father; for he was the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world. (4) The disciples rebuked (v. 37). He singled out Peter, since he had been the most conspicuous in proclaiming his loyalty (John 13:38). Though he would go with him to death, he could not watch one hour. (5) Exhortation to the disciples (v. 38). "Watch and pray, lest ye enter into temptation." The only way to be able to stand in the time of trial is to be watching and praying. Jesus knew that although the disciples meant well, they would fail in the trial unless aided from above. The flesh is too weak to stand the strain.

2. The second prayer (vv. 39, 40). He withdrew the second time from his disciples and uttered the same words in prayer. This was not vain repetition. It is proper to repeat our requests. He found the disciples asleep again. Their shame and confusion was more marked than at first.

3. The third prayer (vv. 41, 42).

He uttered the same words in his third prayer (Matt. 26:44). He now tells the disciples to sleep on and take their rest, as the hour had come for his betrayal. There is such a thing as being asleep when wanted and awaking when it is too late. If the disciples had been praying they would not have fallen asleep.

BOSCHEE'S SYRUP.

A cold is probably the most common of all disorders and when neglected is apt to be most dangerous. Statistics show that more than three times as many people died from influenza last year, as were killed in the greatest war the world has ever known. For the last fifty-three years Boschee's Syrup has been used for coughs, bronchitis, colds, throat irritation and especially lung troubles. It gives the patient a good night's rest, free from coughing, with easy expectoration in the morning. Made in America and used in the homes of thousands of families all over the civilized world. CARRIES WEALTH IN MOUTH

Bowhead Whale Worth Much Money If Only That Part of Its Anatomy Were Usable.

A full-grown bowhead whale is worth $15,000 merely for the whalebone it carries in its mouth. This is the species that furnishes the bulk of the commercial supply of whalebone, which is now worth $7.50 a pound. It is a denizen of the arctic seas.

The bowhead, like other whalebone whales, has no teeth. Instead, its jaws are furnished with a series of long, tapering slabs of a horny substance fringed with hair. Of these slabs, which are the whalebone of commerce, there are as many as 600.

The biggest of them are 10 to 12 feet long, and they are inserted in the gum of the upper jaw, from which they hang. They serve as a sieve to strain out the whale's food. Swimming along, it takes a huge mouthful of squids and other pelagic small fry. Then the huge trap is closed and, the slabs entering and fitting into grooves in the lower jaw, the water is expelled.

SUBSTITUTE FOR ROYAL ARMS

Placing of Cap and Bells on English Paper Was the Origin of the Word "Foolscap."

Several explanations have been given of the meaning of the word "foolscap" as applied to a certain class of paper. One of the explanations is that when Charles I of England found his revenue short, he granted certain privileges, amounting to monopolies, and among these was the manufacture of paper, the exclusive right to which was sold to certain parties, who grew rich and enriched the government at the expense of those who were obliged to use the paper. At this time all English paper bore, in watermarks, the royal arms. The parliament under Cromwell made a jest of this law, and among other indignities to the memory of Charles it was ordered that the royal arms be removed from the paper and the fool's cap and bells be substituted. These were in their turn removed when the Rump parliament was dismissed, but paper for the size of the parliament's journal still bears the name of "foolscap."

Peterson Writes Again.

South Connellsville, Pa.

Dear Fred:

"He Haw" came to us all O. K., and a copy of the "News" in the same mail. Of course we were both pleased to hear from home, and note the different happenings in old St. Joe. Why, Mrs. P. even read the "ads" all through trying to find the price of butter, eggs, flour, etc. It might be well to tell you that there is a vast difference in the prices here and St. Joe of those articles: Butter, (Country) is 85 cts., Creamery, 90 cts.; Fresh eggs, 80c. per dozen, Storage, 72c; Dressed hogs, 16½c; Potatoes, $1.75 per bushel; Clothing, Shoes, etc., especially shoes, are too high to reach with an airship; Common Shoes like those worn by the miners and coke workers run from $6.50 to $8.50, while dress shoes run from $12.00 to $20.00; wages are like the shoes, fifteen year old boys getting $3.75 per day at common labor.

I had anticipated giving you a meager discription of some of the mines here, but the past ten days it has rained almost constantly, as a consequence, I have not been able to get out much, to-day I did venture out so far as the Youghiogheny River. Opposite is the third largest Electrical Power House in Pa., which supplies the power for the great Penn Interurban System, and many cities for their street cars and lighting systems. The Western Maryland R. R., crosses the valley just south of this power house, on piers built of cement, and some of them over 100 feet high. It is a little over a quarter of a mile across this valley. The recent rains up in the mountains has made the "Yough" (as they call it here) a vicious looking torrent.

I am sending you under a seperate cover, one of the "Wedding Bells" used at our Grand-daughter Margaret's wedding, the 25th., also a clipping from the Connellsville Daily Courier, which only briefly contains ALL that took place, especially after the wedding supper, when many gathered at the depot to give them a "send-off" not only the "just-married" couple were nearly drowned with rice, but the passengers in the coach also, who gathered up rice and helped on the fun.

We go this week to Layton, for a couple of weeks, and will probably go from there to Fayette City for a few weeks, but our postoffice address will remain South Connellsville, Pa. I will probably write you from Layton, giving you a description of the large Paving and Fireproof brick works, five different factories.

Well, Fred, if the weather clears up I can probably give you a more interesting letter next time.

Mrs. Peterson joins me in sending all our friends our kindest regards.

Yours Truly,
W. E. Peterson.

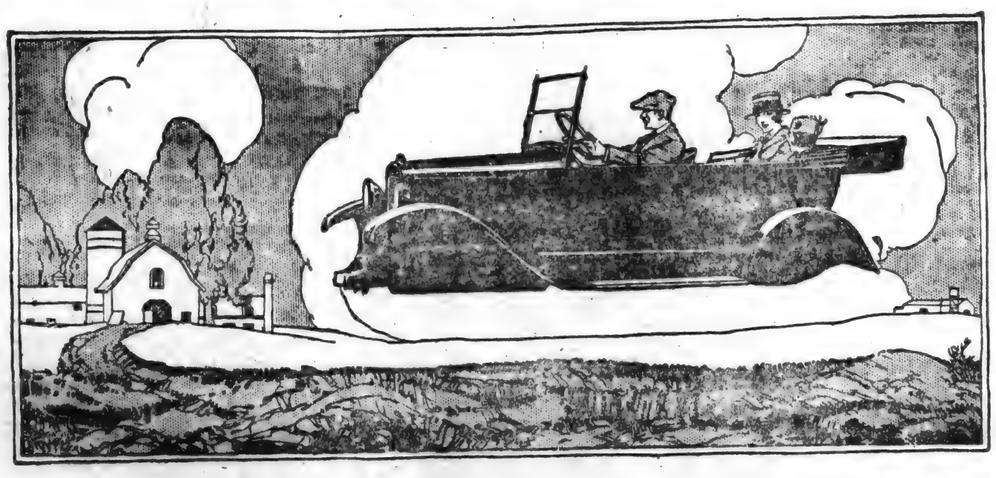
Overland



With Three-Point Cantilever Springs New Overland 4 Seems to "Sail Over The Roads"

THE new Three-Point Cantilever Springs of Overland 4, by their special construction and design, protect car and passengers from ordinary road jolts. Bumping, twisting, swaying and vibrating are wonderfully lessened. The blows of the road seldom reach you. There is less tendency to bodily fatigue after long rides.

The springs of Overland 4 attached at the ends of a 130-inch Springbase give the riding comfort and road steadiness heretofore possible only with cars of long wheelbase and great weight, yet Overland 4 retains the light weight and economy advantages of 100-inch wheelbase.

Three-Point Cantilever Springs protect the car from the hammering and wear of road blows. They lengthen its life and reduce upkeep costs.

Equipment of Overland 4 is dependable and complete from Auto-Lite Starting and Lighting to Tillotson Carburetor.

250,000 miles of test have made the strength and endurance of this car a matter of record.

Steward and Beams, Spencerville, Ind.

An attractive home wedding was that of Miss Anna Margaret Carson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Carson of South Connellsville, and Charles A McCormick, son of Mrs. Thomas R. Cunningham of East Apple street, solemnized this afternoon at 3 o'clock in the home of the bride in Vine street. Thirty guests, including only the relatives of the two families and a few intimate friends attended. Rev. Dr. Ellis B. Burgess pastor of the Trinity Lutheran church, officiated using the beautiful ring service. As the bridal party entered the living room, where the service took place, the bridal chorus from Lohengrin was played by R. O. Clabaugh. The bride wore her traveling suit of brown velour trimmed in squirrel and a hat of brown duvetyn. White roses and valley lilies formed her corsage Mrs. David Edwards of Munhall, the matron of honor, and the bride's only attendant, wore a gown of brown charmeuse and a corsage of pink roses. Charles E. Carson, Jr., a brother of the bride, was best man.

The ceremony was followed by a handsomely appointed luncheon, a color scheme of green and white being charmingly carried out. The bridal table, at which covers for ten were laid, and smaller tables from which the other guests were served, were centered with white chrysanthemums. The favors were small wedding bells, adorned with sprays of orange blossoms, and filled with rice. The decorations throughout the house were beautiful, southern smilax and chrysanthemums being effectively used. Owing to the prominence of Mr. McCormick and his bride the wedding was one of unusual interest. The bride for several years was a stenographer for the West Penn Railways company and has a wide circle of friends. Mr. McCormick is assistant to Funeral Director Charles C. Mitchell and is one of the best known young men of the city. Quite a number of beautiful wedding gifts were received. The young couple left this afternoon for a brief wedding trip. Upon their return they will be at home on South Pittsburg street.

Attention Subscribers!

During the past week, as was stated in the NEWS of last week, a statement has been mailed to every reader of this paper that their subscription dated back of January 1, 1920, and as far as we know we have done this and the reeposes are beginning to come in freely. As was stated in the letter sent out that we are doing this in order to get our list collected up to January 1, in order that we might make some further plans as to meeting the high advance in print paper that was made December first upon all village newspapers. It matters not if you owe us but one month (15c.) we sent out the letter just the same and expect all to respond within the next 10 days. We are not doubting anyone by sending out this word to them of their indebtedness whether it be dollars or a few cents, it means we want all paid up to the New Year. Just what action we intend to take is not determined yet but we hope to be able to give our final decision by the issue of the 18th. or at least by the Christmas Day edition.

The responses by mail are coming in fine and the many letters expressing their appreciation of the notice is appreciated by the editor. Here is what one letter contained: "I received your kind and welcome letter. Thank you for your kindness for letting me know about the paper. I will send you a one dollar bill and pay you till Jan. 1, 1920, by that time I will send you more money to send it on."

Here is what a 35c. subscription account said: "Here is your dunning letter, I want to pay up and then you can stop sending it. I guess I have got that much and if I haven't I'll go to the bank and borrow it."

Another says: "Please find enclosed $2.10 thank you for your forbearance with me. Send the News right along it has become a house hold necessity at our house. With best wishes for your success."

SEES PEACE DELAY AS UNREST CAUSE

President Wilson So Declares in Message Read Before Both Houses of Congress.

BUDGET SYSTEM IS URGED

Necessity of Increased Production to Help Decrease Cost of Living—Imperative Need of Definite Program Concerning Labor.

Washington, Dec. 2.—President Wilson's message, which was read to both houses of congress today, only incidentally mentioned the peace treaty, blaming the delay in ratification as one of the causes of nation-wide unrest. The president said:

I hope that congress will bring to a conclusion at this session legislation looking to the establishment of a budget system. That there should be one single authority responsible for the making of all appropriations and that appropriations should be made not independently of each other but with reference to one single comprehensive plan of expenditure properly related to the nation's income there can be no doubt. I believe the burden of preparing the budget must, in the nature of the case, if the work is to be properly done and responsibility concentrated instead of divided, rest upon the executive.

The budget so prepared should be submitted to and approved or amended by a single committee of each house of congress, and no single appropriation should be made by the congress, except such as may have been included in the budget prepared by the executive or added by the particular committee of congress charged with the budget legislation.

Another and not less important aspect of the problem is the ascertainment of the economy and efficiency with which the moneys appropriated are expended. Under existing law the only audit is for the purpose of ascertaining whether expenditures have been lawfully made within the appropriations. No one is authorized or equipped to ascertain whether the money has been spent wisely, economically and effectively.

Taxation Question Taken Up.

I trust that the congress will give its immediate consideration to the problem of future taxation. Simplification of the income and profits taxes has become an immediate necessity. These taxes performed indispensable service during the war. They must, however, be simplified, not only to save the taxpayer inconvenience and expense, but in order that his liability may be made certain and definite.

With reference to the details of the revenue law, the secretary of the treasury and the commissioner of internal revenue will lay before you for your consideration certain amendments necessary or desirable in connection with the administration of the law—recommendations which have my approval and support.

It is of the utmost importance that in dealing with this matter the present law should not be disturbed so far as regards taxes for the calendar year 1920, payable in the calendar year 1921. The congress might well consider whether the higher rates of income and profits taxes can in peace times be effectively productive of revenue and whether they may not, on the contrary, be destructive of business activity and productive of waste and inefficiency.

There is a point at which in peace times high rates of income and profits taxes discourage energy, remove the incentive to new enterprise, encourage extravagant expenditures and produce industrial stagnation with consequent unemployment and other attendant evils.

The message then discussed the favorable balance of trade and the need of adjusting our economic life to the changed conditions and of abandoning the policy of isolation. In the matter of recognition and relief for returned soldiers the president repeated the recommendations in his last message. He also urged tariff revision to protect our chemical and dyestuff industries. He continued:

Farmers Are Praised.

During the war the farmer performed a vital and willing service to the nation. By materially increasing the production of his land, he supplied America and the allies with the increased amounts of food necessary to keep their immense armies in the field. He indispensably helped to win the war. But there is now scarcely less need of increasing the production in food and the necessaries of life. I ask the congress to consider means of encouraging effort along these lines.

The importance of doing everything possible to promote production along economical lines, to improve marketing and to make rural life more attractive and healthful, is obvious. I would urge approval of the plans already proposed to the congress by the secretary of agriculture, to secure the essential facts required for the proper study of this question, through the proposed enlarged programs for farm management studies and crop estimates.

I would urge, also, the continuance of federal participation in the building of good roads, under the terms of existing law and under the direction of present agencies; the need of further action on the part of the states and the federal government to preserve and develop our forest resources, especially through the practice of better forestry methods on private holdings and the extension of the publicly owned forests; better support for country schools and the more definite direction of their courses of study along lines related to rural problems; and fuller provision for sanitation in rural districts and the building up of needed hospital and medical facilities.

Blames Government for Unrest.

I would call your attention to the widespread condition of political restlessness in our body politic. The causes of this unrest, while various and complicated, are superficial rather than deep seated. Broadly, they arise from or are connected with the failure on the part of our government to arrive speedily at a just and permanent peace permitting return to normal conditions, from the transfusion of radical theories from seething European centers pending such delay, from heartless profiteering resulting in the increase of the cost of living, and, lastly, from the machinations of passionate and malevolent agitators. With the return to normal conditions, this unrest will rapidly disappear. In the meantime it does much evil.

It seems to me that in dealing with this situation congress should not be impatient or drastic, but should seek, rather, to remove the causes. It should endeavor to bring our country back speedily to a peace basis, with ameliorated living conditions under the minimum of restrictions upon personal liberty that is consistent with our reconstruction problems. And it should arm the federal government with power to deal in its criminal courts with those persons who by violent methods would abrogate our time-tested institutions.

With the free expression of opinion and with the advocacy of orderly political change, however fundamental, there must be no interference, but toward passion and malevolence tending to incite crime and insurrection under guise of political evolution there should be no leniency.

Should Extend Food Control.

I renew and strongly urge the necessity of the extension of the present food-control act as to the period of time in which it shall remain in operation. The attorney general has submitted a bill providing for an extension of this act for a period of six months. As it now stands it is limited in operation to the period of the war and becomes inoperative upon the formal proclamation of peace. It is imperative that it should be extended at once. The department of justice has built up extensive machinery for the purpose of enforcing its provisions; all of which must be abandoned upon the conclusion of peace unless the provisions of this act are extended.

During this period the congress will have an opportunity to make similar, permanent provisions and regulations with regard to all goods destined for interstate commerce and to exclude them from interstate shipment if the requirements of the law are not complied with. Some such regulation is imperatively necessary. The abuses that have grown up in the manipulation of prices by the withholding of foodstuffs and other necessaries of life cannot otherwise be effectively prevented. There can be no doubt of either the necessity or the legitimacy of such measures.

The president renewed his recommendations that a law be passed regulating cold storage and that all goods destined for interstate commerce should be marked with the price at which they left the hands of the producer. He also urged the federal licensing of corporations engaging in interstate commerce. Coming to the question of labor, the message said:

Labor and Capital Peace Renewed.

No one who has observed the march of events in the last year can fail to note the absolute need of definite program to bring about an improvement in the condition of labor. There can be no settled conditions leading to increased production and a reduction in the cost of living if labor and capital are to be antagonists instead of partners.

Sound thinking and an honest desire to serve the interests of the whole nation, as distinguished from the interests of a class, must be applied to the solution of this great and pressing problem. The failure of other nations to consider this matter in a vigorous way has produced bitterness and jealousies and antagonisms, the food of radicalism. The only way to keep men from agitating against grievances is to remove the grievances. An unwillingness even to discuss these matters produces only dissatisfaction and gives comfort to the extreme elements in our country, which endeavor to stir up disturbance in order to provoke governments to embark upon a course of retaliation and repression. The seed of revolution is repression.

The remedy for these things must not be negative in character. It must be constructive. It must comprehend the general interest. The real antidote for the unrest which manifests itself is not suppression but a deep consideration of the wrongs that beset our national life and the application of a remedy.

Eight-Hour Day Is Big Step.

Congress has already shown its willingness to deal with these industrial wrongs by establishing the eight-hour day as the standard in every field of labor. It has sought to find a way to prevent child labor. It has served the whole country by leading the way in developing the means of preserving and safeguarding lives and health in dangerous industries. It must now help in the difficult task of finding a method that will bring about a genuine demonstration of industry, based upon the full recognition of the right of those who work, in whatever rank, to participate in some organic way in every decision which directly affects their welfare.

It is with this purpose in mind that I called a conference to meet in Washington on December 1 to consider these problems in all their broad aspects, with the idea of bringing about a better understanding between these two interests.

Rights of Labor Are Cited.

The great unrest throughout the world, out of which has emerged a demand for an immediate consideration of the difficulties between capital and labor, bids us put our own house in order. Frankly, there can be no permanent and lasting settlements between capital and labor which do not recognize the fundamental concepts for which labor has been struggling through the years. The whole world gave its recognition and indorsement to these fundamental purposes in the League of Nations.

To analyze the particulars in the demands of labor is to admit the justice of their complaint in many matters that lie at their basis. The workman demands an adequate wage, sufficient to permit him to live in comfort, unhampered by the fear of poverty and want in his old age. He demands the right to live and the right to work amidst sanitary surroundings, both in home and in workshop, surroundings that develop and do not retard his own health and well-being; and the right to provide for his children's wants in the matter of health and education. In other words, it is his desire to make the conditions of his life and the lives of those dear to him tolerable and easy to bear.

Collective Bargaining Right.

Governments must recognize the right of men collectively to bargain for humane objects that have at their base the mutual protection and welfare of those engaged in all industries. Labor must not be longer treated as a commodity. It must be regarded as the activity of human beings, possessed of deep yearnings and desires. The business man gives his best thought to the repair and replenishment of his machinery, so that its usefulness will not be impaired and its power to produce may always be at its height and kept in full vigor and motion.

No less regard ought to be paid to the human machine, which, after all, propels the machinery of the world and is the great dynamic force that lies back of all industry and progress. Return to the old standards of wage and industry in employment are unthinkable. The terrible tragedy of war which has just ended and which has brought the world to the verge of chaos and disaster would be in vain if there should ensue a return to the conditions of the past.

Labor not only is entitled to an adequate wage, but capital should receive a reasonable return upon its investment and is entitled to protection at the hands of the government in every emergency. No government worthy of the name can play these elements against each other, for there is a mutuality of interest between them which the government must seek to express and to safeguard at all cost.

The right of individuals to strike is inviolate and ought not to be interfered with by any process of government, but there is a predominant right and that is the right of the government to protect all of its people and to assert its power and majesty against the challenge of any class. The government, when it asserts that right, seeks not to antagonize a class but simply to defend the right of the whole people as against the irreparable harm and injury that might be done by the attempt by any class to usurp a power that only government itself has a right to exercise as a protection to all.

Hour of Test and Trial.

This is the hour of test and trial for America. By her prowess and strength and the indomitable courage of her soldiers, she demonstrated her power to vindicate on foreign battlefields her conception of liberty and justice. Let not her influence as a mediator between capital and labor be weakened and her own failure to settle matters of purely domestic concert be proclaimed to the world.

There are those in this country who threaten direct action to force their will upon a majority. Russia today, with its blood and terror, is a painful object lesson of the power of minorities. It makes little difference what minority it is; whether capital or labor, or any other class; no sort of privilege will ever be permitted to dominate this country. We are a partnership or nothing that is worth while.

We are a democracy where the majority are the masters or all the hopes and purposes of the men who founded this government have been defeated and forgotten. In America there is but one way by which great reforms can be accomplished and the relief sought by classes obtained, and that is through the orderly processes of representative government. Those who would propose any other method of reform are enemies of this country.

America will not be daunted by threats nor lose her composure or calmness in these distressing times. We can afford, in the midst of this day of passion and unrest, to be self-contained and sure. The instrument of all reform in America is the straight road of justice to all classes and conditions of men. Men have but to follow this road to realize the full fruition of their objects and purposes. Let those beware who would take the shorter road of disorder and revolution. The right road is the road of justice and orderly process.

General Pershing as a Grammarian.

General Pershing, according to Everett T. Tomlinson, parsed himself into the United States army. In "The Story of General Pershing" we are told that: "Eighteen applicants took the examination and Pershing won, though by only a single point, and that was given only after he and his competitor, Higginbotham, had broken the tie by each diagramming the following sentence: 'I love to run.'

"Higginbotham's solution:

"'I'—subject.

"'love'—predicate

"'to run'—infinitive phrase qualifying the meaning of the verb.

"Pershing's solution was as follows:

"'I'—subject.

"'love'—predicate

"'to run'—is the object.

"The commission preferred Pershing's diagram, and thus by a single point he won the competitive examination and received the appointment.

Police Dogs Latest Fad.

Belge is the first European-born dog to accompany an American Y. W. C. A. secretary to her home in the United States.

American army officers started the fad of bringing French or German police dogs back with them. Belge is a Belgian police dog who was presented to Miss Marion Alchin of Lynn, Mass., by an officer of the army of occupation.

Miss Alchin was assigned to the Y. W. C. A. hostess house in Coblenz when she first made the acquaintance of Belge, a handsome, black and white puppy, with a long pedigree which won him a high place in the dog show held in Coblenz. He is four months old.

Saturday Half Holiday.

The custom of having Saturday afternoon as a holiday is supposed to have originated in Scotland. It appears that by a council of William, king of Scotland, A. D. 1208, it was determined that Saturday, after the twelfth hour, should be kept holy, that every one might attend Vespers in preparation for Sunday.

Big Ben's Big Bell.

The bell that strikes the hours at Big Ben in London, largest clock in the world, weighs 16 tons.

HOME OF THE CIRCUS.

A school teacher was reading an exciting story to her group of youngsters about the jungle. In order that each child might understand clearly what the story was about, she said: "Which one of you can tell me what the jungle is?" One bright little boy waved his hand in the air and the teacher told him to give his definition. He stood up before the class with a great deal of importance and said: "The jungle is where the circus lives."

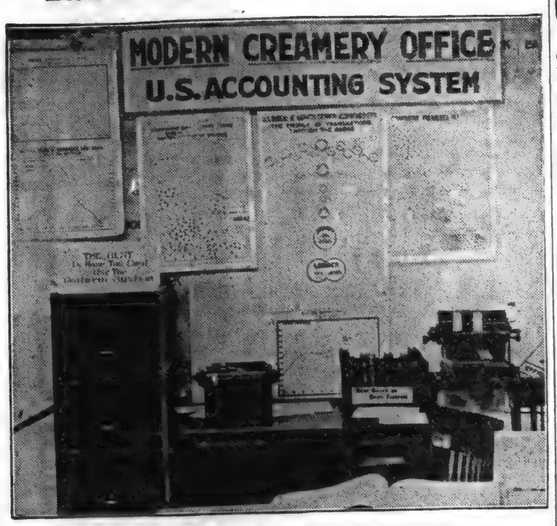
MARKET ORGANIZATIONS OFTEN FAIL FOR LACK OF UP-TO-DATE BUSINESS METHODS



Modern Accounting Methods for Co-operative Organizations.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

One of the outstanding weaknesses of marketing organizations is the almost entire lack of up-to-date business methods. According to the bureau of markets, United States department of agriculture, which has made an extensive study of the subject, a large number of failures in the co-operative field have been traced directly or indirectly to lack of proper accounting systems. Other investigations indicate that this difficulty exists to no less an extent in nonco-operative enterprises.

It is the desire of the bureau to make the results of these investigations available to nonco-operative enterprises and not confine its activities solely to assisting co-operative concerns. However, due to the insistent demand for assistance and advice from co-operative organizations, and the lack of such demand from the nonco-operative field, a large portion of the work has of necessity been confined to the former class of organization.

An essential of co-operative business effort is that every participant obtain an equitable share of profits. Without proper accounting there is no guaranty that this object is attained. With up-to-date bookkeeping none can point the finger of suspicion or doubt. Good accounting promotes economy and breeds confidence.

Double-Entry Bookkeeping.

The double-entry system of bookkeeping is the only one suitable for use, as without it there is no adequate check on the accounts. It shows the effects of business transactions on the assets, liabilities, capital, surplus, and revenue, and also the expenses of the business.

When the term "up-to-date methods" is used it does not imply complicated methods. Only two books are absolutely necessary for a complete systematic record of the financial transactions—the journal and the ledger—though, of course, with the growth of a concern, convenience may dictate that the material recorded in these two volumes be subdivided and entered in other volumes. The journal shows the business transactions in the order that they occur, while the ledger shows them classified according to the respective accounts.

The records of a co-operative concern must record a history of each member's property from the time of delivery until payment is made. All this material should be so arranged that the maximum volume of business can be cared for without confusion, and at the same time the various details should be easily accessible.

Many co-operative organizations have adopted the system of pooling, which necessitates prorating returns on like grades of fruit and other produce. Such records should be clear as to the time of shipments, average prices received, and awarded items.

The form of business organization should be as simple as possible, but the duties of each officer should be clearly defined, board meetings should be held regularly after due notice has been given, and the laws require that complete records of the meetings must be kept. In a wide margin on the left-hand side of each page of the minute book notations can be made which in the future will greatly aid in locating desired information. All persons handling organization funds should be bonded. If this is an invariable practice, insistence on a bond will not be considered as being prompted by any personal consideration.

False Economy Costly.

Many organizations are tempted to practice false economy in regard to expenditures for an up-to-date accounting system, competent help, and labor-saving devices. The cost of an adding machine or a calculating machine may seem large, but it may save its original cost in the course of a year, providing the volume of business is sufficient to make its use economical. Columnar development, loose-leaf systems, card systems, and the use of carbon copies have all lessened the routine of the bookkeeper and made modern bookkeeping possible and economical.

The office, whether large or small, should be provided with filing cabinets, equipped with guides for indexing purposes and folders to hold the correspondence. The alphabetical filing system is the simplest and perhaps is the best suited for the organization of average size. In numerical filing, an alternative system which some prefer, a number is assigned to each person with whom considerable correspondence is carried on. To locate any particular number in the file an alphabetical cross index is kept.

Safeguarding the Cash.

A regular system of safeguarding the cash should be adopted and adhered to strictly. All cash entries should be explicit and items supporting such entries should be filed so as to be easily accessible. No entries should be recorded in the cash book which do not relate to cash. If possible, the full receipts of each day should be deposited in the bank. All canceled checks should be filed in numerical order, and duplicate checks should be covered by indemnity bonds. The cash or check register and the bank pass book balance should be reconciled each month, and a permanent record kept of this agreement. Checks, sales slips, receipts and the like should be numbered with a numbering machine, and any which are spoiled in use should be marked void or left in the book. A regular system should be used for acknowledging all cash sales or miscellaneous cash items received. A systematic record should be kept of all petty cash payments.

An important item often neglected in the accounting of marketing organizations is depreciation. The extent of depreciation should be estimated as closely as possible and credited to the time "Reserve for Depreciation" account as the books are closed for the year. This will decrease the net profit by the amount of depreciation, and set aside amounts to replace the assets out of the earnings. One other essential in the proper accounting of any marketing organization, as well as in other business efforts, is the auditing of the accounts. Both external and internal audits should be made at regular intervals. The latter may be conducted by a committee of members, while the former should be made by an expert accountant and should be complete, all original documents being available for his investigation.

CO-OPERATIVE BUYING SAVES

Instance Cited in Action of Florida Farmers Clubbing Together to Buy Poison.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

An instance of the value of co-operative buying is found in the recent action of a group of farmers in Orange county, Florida, who combined their orders for carbon bisulphid and placed them through their county agent. The purchase totaled 1,000 pounds and the material was secured at a saving of 38 cents a pound under the price that would have been charged for individual purchases in small quantities, so that the deal represented a saving of $380 to these farmers. This carbon bisulphid will be used in fumigating the corn to kill corn weevils. Losses from this source sometimes are as much as 20 per cent. The farmers who are planning to fumigate their corn either have remodeled their old cribs to make them airtight or have built new ones.

FLU CAUSES SIX DEATHS IN CHICAGO

The weekly bulletin of the health department issued yesterday, shows that six persons died in Chicago last week as result of Influenza. Dr. W. A. Evans, health authority and writer of Chicago, last week predicted that the world would again be swept by an epidemic of Influenza far more severe than last year, when thousands of lives were lost. One thing is sure, that is, the warm weather this fall has kept the epidemic down, but as colder weather approaches, Influenza is liable to break out any time. Dr. Brady says: "No one has as yet discovered a positive method of diagnosing early cases of Influenza from alleged 'colds.'" The utmost care should be taken, therefore, not to catch cold, for colds weaken the resistance to Influenza germs.

Doctors seem to agree that it is much easier to prevent Influenza than to cure it. The secret of preventing Influenza is to keep the germs from lodging and developing in the respiratory organs—the mouth, nose and throat. No one should be allowed to breathe in your face because the germs are often transmitted in this manner.

Influenza can be prevented; last year's results prove that. As a preventive for Flu, Turpo has been a pronounced success. Turpo is an effective germicide, combining the old-fashioned remedies of turpentine (which has always been known as the best home germicide), camphor and menthol in a pure mineral base. These ingredients have long been recognized as effective germicides, as well as having really wonderful qualities in relieving colds and congestions. Snuff a little Turpo up the nostrils several times a day, and the Flu germs will have little chance of getting a lodging and breeding place. Many physicians and hospitals use and recommend Turpo.

Prepare now. Buy a thirty cent jar of Turpo, while your druggist has a supply on hand, and use as directed. Last year druggists could not supply the demand. Remember that Turpo is a preventive, not a cure for Influenza. Take care of yourself.—Adv.

Taming the Bolshevik Turkey.

Most of us consider the turkey a domestic fowl. He is not. He is the bolshevist among farm birds. He refuses to submit to barnyard government except when feed cannot be obtained by foraging.

To keep his turkeys out of the neighbors' cornfields, one farmer fitted up an attachment that at first glance looks like a turkoplane. It is merely a board fitted around the turkey's neck and tied by a heavy cord that passes under the wings.—Popular Science Monthly.

Catarrhal Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Catarrhal Deafness, and that is by a constitutional remedy. HALL'S CATARRH MEDICINE acts through the Blood on the Mucous Surfaces of the System. Catarrhal Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result. Unless the inflammation can be reduced and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing may be destroyed forever. Diamond Cut Diamond

"EUGENE, MY SON! HE'S BEEN KIDNAPED!"

Synopsis.—While in the little Swiss town of Vevay, where the "staid, proper spinster" who tells the story is spending a vacation, she is asked to allow a young girl, Claire de Ravenol, to be her companion back to the United States. Although forming an attachment to the girl, the heroine takes a dislike to Monsieur de Ravenol, Claire's father, and declines. On the boat she finds Claire in the care of a casual acquaintance, Mrs. Delario, whom she had met while each was purchasing a pair of slippers, exactly alike, which figure largely in subsequent events. When they reach New York, where Claire was to have been met by her mother, the latter does not appear, and Claire perforce goes to Mrs. Delario's home. In the confusion at the custom house, the spinster carries off one of Mrs. Delario's slippers. Through that happening she learns later that someone unknown to her has been in her flat. Calling on Mrs. Delario, that lady shows her some remarkable gems, believing them to be rubies, but which are really blood-red diamonds, and easily worth a million dollars. Mrs. Delario admits the gems were smuggled, but offers no explanation. While they are talking, a pounding on the door throws them into consternation. The caller asserts he is an officer of the law, with a warrant for the arrest of Mrs. Delario's son on a charge of stealing the diamonds. She outwits him and persuades the spinster to take the gems to her home for safe keeping. Next morning, realising the responsibility in her possession of the diamonds, the spinster takes them back to Mrs. Delario, who begs her to keep them a while longer.

"Haven't you some way of hiding them? Really I don't see how I can take the responsibility—suppose I'm robbed!"

"You won't be."

"But you don't know. I may have been followed home last night."

"You were not—that man was working alone."

It was on the tip of my tongue to tell her my real reason was that I didn't like being mixed up in a smuggling affair; but out of pity—and common human decency for a woman in trouble—I refrained, and she hurried on, "You needn't fear about losing them—I see the word 'safe' in yellow letters over your head and I know, absolutely—they'll be safe with you."

To me that wasn't convincing, and I made a last effort to rid myself of the incubus and suggested, "Your son—couldn't he find means to hide them?"

"Eugene!" Her face clouded with fear. "I don't even know where he is this morning—he hasn't telephoned me, or anything, since I telephoned him last night to hide—and every time I think of him I get the impression of 'trouble.' There isn't a living soul I can appeal to now but you. Oh, please—a day—two days—until I can decide what to do. Help me now, and I swear to you that I will explain everything—"

The telephone bell suddenly rang out from the upper hall. Her hands flew to her heart, as they had the night before when the house bell rang; but without a word she hastened upstairs to answer the call.

While she was gone I had a few minutes to think, and I took my stand, once for all: I'd help her through thick and thin. I therefore slipped the box back where I'd taken it from, and was preparing to leave with it as soon as I could say goodby to her, when she reeled into the room, looking as if she'd had the shock of dreadful news.

"Eugene. My son!" she gasped, almost with a scream. "He's been kidnaped!" and with that she fainted.

I caught her as she fell and let her slide to the floor as gently as my strength would allow, and I was considering whether to try to find the bathroom upstairs and get some water, or to search the lower regions for the wild-eyed Swede and send her for the nearest doctor, when I heard Mrs. Delario's voice: "Save my diamonds—save my son. Go—go at once!"

I didn't go—in fact she held me so I couldn't—and somehow, between us, she managed to get up on the sofa, where she released my hands, imploring me to save the diamonds.

"Those men are coming," she urged. "In five minutes it may be too late—you'll be caught—I'll lose everything—my future—Lila's future—you're safe if you go instantly—"

It was incoherent, but rapid; terribly earnest. She gave me a feeble push, and, hardly knowing what I did, I fled the house—for the second time in twenty-four hours with a million dollars' worth of diamonds in my stocking.

I had dashed down the steps expecting to encounter—and escape from—a pair of dark-browed villains; I actually did encounter a delivery boy hopping off his wagon, who almost knocked me over with his basket and then berated me soundly for getting in his road and not looking where I was going.

My bumping into the grocery boy dislocated the alarm in which I had left Mrs. Delario, and it didn't seem to occur to me on the return trip that I might be followed, or that I should take at least some small precautions to elude a possible shadow. My mind was so engrossed with Mrs. Delario and what had happened to her son that I really quite forgot I had the diamonds myself! I bought a bunch of hyacinths at a florist's and left an order at the grocer's, and it wasn't till I was inside my flat that the thought really struck me, "I'm the one who is in danger—I have the diamonds!" and it was too late for me to find out if I'd been shadowed home or not.

However, my depression was presently succeeded by a mood of elation—at last I was living things! I was enjoying the game for its own sake. On with the dance, Mr. Robbers—let's see if you can get the diamonds! Which only goes to show what fools some women can be, sometimes. For if I meant to hide the diamonds where they'd be safe, why didn't I take them instantly to my bank and put them in a safe-deposit box? A mere man would have done it on the spur of the moment without stopping to think about it; and the idea never entered my head. So I let slip my one chance of something brilliant and did what ninety-nine out of a hundred other women would have done under the same circumstances: I HID THEM IN MY FLAT. And in that one act I pitted myself against the most subtle intelligence, amazing complications and overwhelming odds that a quiet, respectable gentlewoman of my profession ever had to reckon with outside of the ink bottle. I got both a revolver and a dagger ready for me—only I didn't know it at the time.

I have always prided myself on the way I hid those diamonds—since I was stupid enough to do it at all. As I say, I had bought a bunch of hyacinths—Roman hyacinths—when after sitting in my big chair for a good half-hour thinking, I got up to put them in water, the brilliant idea came to me to hide the diamonds there.

Water wouldn't hurt the diamonds; but who would ever think that anyone would be silly enough to put them in it? So I got a glass—a common white glass that would show the stems—set the hyacinths in the middle of the table and poked the diamonds down among the stems. The raffia string held everything in place, and—there you are!

My real trouble was in disposing of the box. I could have burned it and been done with it, but to keep it was so much more sportsmanlike: to enjoy my game—as I was feeling it just then—I saw I must, above everything, be sportsmanlike. To this end, therefore, I must disguise the box, put it where Mr. Thief—or Mr. Detective—or Mr. Chief of Police, when he came, might take it in his hand and cast it from him as a thing of naught in his search for Mrs. Delario's diamonds.

With an odd bit of shiny blue paper I happened to find in the drawer where I keep odds and ends of paper, and my scissors and library paste, I transformed that box so the fairies wouldn't know it. After that I filled it up with pens and set it conspicuously on the tray with my pencils, penholders and other things of the sort. I set it so you could not help seeing it if you tried! As a last touch—which it seemed to require for art's sake—I cut a part of a pen advertisement out of a magazine and pasted it on the lid.

For the first time, then, I took note of the clock—it was twenty minutes past two—I'd frittered away almost an entire day on some one else's affairs instead of my own bread and butter, and there lay the pile of proof, not half done, that I had hoped to have off by night.

I hastily made a cup of chocolate, slapped together a few sandwiches, and, reading as I munched, I tried to make up for lost time; and it was not till I had finished eating that I remembered to put away my coat and hat that I had thrown off on the divan.

I carried them to my bedroom and pulled open the wardrobe door. In the bottom of it lay the three turquoise-beaded slippers!

My coat and hat fell out of my hands on the floor and I sank down on the bed. I was not merely mystified—I was frightened. How had they come there?—and when? They were not there when I took out the coat in the morning to go to Mrs. Delario's—to that I knew I could swear, for in my hurry to be rid of her diamonds I had snatched the coat out and dropped it, and I couldn't have missed seeing the slippers then, any more than I had missed seeing them now.

Now, under ordinary circumstances, finding the three slippers in my wardrobe wouldn't have upset me—I should very likely have thought it a lapse of memory and let it go at that; but I was by way of keeping tab on them and I knew I couldn't have put them in the wardrobe, because the last thing I knew of them they were gone out of the flat entirely. I could only stare and feel horribly creepy.

If this were not a manifestation, then somebody had access to my flat. But who? And why slippers? I jumped up at this thought and began digging into my bureau drawer—I had five hundred dollars cash buried there that had been paid over to me in the settlement of an estate and I'd not had a minute to take it to the bank.

The cash was safe. Everything else was safe, as far as I could see; not a chair was out of place; nothing had been moved or touched since I left the flat—only three slippers. And why slippers? The more I thought the more disturbed I became, it was all so uncanny. One thing was clear to me, though—whoever came in to monkey with the slippers came while I was out.

"I'll get a new lock as my next move in the game," said I; and this I prepared to do immediately, not by going out and leaving the diamonds—oh, no!—I was too really scared by the slippers to leave the diamonds now alone in the flat—but by finding a locksmith in the telephone book and inviting him to call; and I was diligently pursuing him thus when my telephone rang and I threw down the book to answer it. And in response to my "hello" I recognized the voice of Monsieur de Ravenol.

"Why, how do you do, monsieur?" I exclaimed, thinking instantly he had some scheme on for getting me to take charge of Claire for him, since Mrs. Delario wouldn't keep her.

"I am as always, sank you, but it is our friend, Madame Delario, I wish to speak wis you about."

"Mrs. Delario!" I cried, thrown off my guard by this unexpected name. "What about her?"

"She meets wis an accident and wishes to see you immediately."

"An accident!" I was dismayed and thought, "Poor woman, what next for her?" but I called back, "What sort of an accident?" and before he could tell me I added, "When did it happen?"

"My daughter and I are just now calling on her to pay our respects and madame faints and falls, striking se verely her head. I call at once se physician and he says zere may be necessary an operation. She refuses—until she can speak wis you about some private matters. I shall tell her you will come?"

For a moment I wondered if she had given him a hint of the "private matters," and I asked him point blank, "Do you know what she wishes to see me for?"

"She asks only sat I send for you immediately, and I obey her instructions. I tell you only what se doctor have told me—and ask me to send for her best friend. She say it is yourself and she must see you. You will come immediately?"

"Yes—immediately. I'll be there in about twenty minutes."

I rushed to her, buttoning my coat as I ran downstairs, and it was not until I had taken my seat in the subway that I remembered I had left her diamonds in my flat!

CHAPTER VI.

Monsieur Drops His Mask.

The wild-eyed Swedish maid let me in. The seance room door opened and M. de Ravenol stepped out and came to greet me.

Monsieur advanced with outstretched hand but no smile. We spoke in whispers.

"Where is she?"

He pointed up, to indicate her bedroom, and whispered, "I must speak wis you before you see her," and moved out of the vestibule, motioning me to follow.

I took two steps and stopped.

"Ze way, if you please," said he, pointing to the seance room.

I took two more steps and stopped again, in front of the reception room door. I had the strongest feeling come over me that I didn't want to go into the seance room with him—that I simply could not go—that my feet refused to budge another inch in that direction.

As I hesitated—for there was such a ratty look in his face that he repelled me—he added, "Pardon, madame, but I have for ze present ze responsibility. It was merely sat I wish beforehand to acquaint madame wis ze nature of ze disaster zat have overtaken her friend zat I ask for some words in private—" he made a gesture toward the basement stairs, and dropping his voice, finished, "One never knows but ze most trusted servants in one's employ are spies."

Thinking of the wild-eyed one, I smiled. He shrugged. "Madame, we are wasting precious time sat may mean everysing to Madame Delario. Permit me to beg of you—"

And I followed him at once to the seance room, the door of which he pushed open, standing aside and saying in French, "Permettez moi . . . Apres vous, madame," to let me enter ahead of him.

To my surprise the room was brilliantly lighted with all the electric bulbs in full bloom; and I turned just in time to see him lock the door on us and pocket the key!

He did it so swiftly, so silently, that under ordinary circumstances I shouldn't have known I was locked in with him. I believe now that the brilliant light into which he'd thrust me out of the dim hall was especially designed to confuse me should I turn on him sooner than he had calculated I would. But the very instant I crossed the threshold I knew he was going to lock the door, and I wheeled—just one second too soon. Had I taken four more steps into the room I should have been none the wiser about the key—till the time came.

But having caught him in the act I let him know it.

"What, monsieur," I demanded haughtily, "is the object of that precaution, may I ask?"

"It was necessary," he returned, coming toward me and searching my face with his beady eyes.

Neither of us spoke for several seconds. Where was Mrs. Delario, and had anything really happened to her? Was this merely a precaution on his part against spies, or did he mean me some harm? Well, if he did, I had a couple of good stout hatpins within call.

"Monsieur, you will kindly unlock that door immediately."

"In one moment—when I have said what I have to say," he replied, in a smooth attempt to keep up appearances. "I have someesing of importance to ask madame—"

"And I have nothing to say to monsieur—behind locked doors," I interrupted angrily. "If monsieur is a gentleman he will instantly unlock that door."

He took a step nearer, as if to show me he had no intention of taking orders from me. He'd open the door when he got ready to.

I thought he meant to lay hands on me. I whipped out my hatpin and confronted him, my eyes blazing and my teeth set so hard I heard them grit.

My act brought him to his senses, and he began to apologize—said he was sorry he had "alarmed" me—that on his word of honor he meant me no harm whatever—a whole lot of palaver like that, designed to get the hatpin where it came from and me into an amenable frame of mind and once more at his mercy.

I listened to the palaver coolly—with the hatpin in my hand I felt perfectly safe, and I didn't put it back. I hardly thought he was armed himself, or he'd have drawn when I did, and the hatpin in my firm clutch gave me a sense of immense advantage in dialogue.

I actually, in a minute or two, had several thrills of joy. I had more thrills when he said, "I implore madame to consider se position she puts me in—a gentleman—by standing zere wis a weapon in her hand."

His face darkened. The black showed under the rose.

De Ravenol shows his true colors.

GOOD ROADS

SENTIMENT FOR GOOD ROADS

Governors of Twenty-Two Western States Petition for Increased Annual Appropriation.

If the passage of the Townsend bill depended on the support from Western states the measure calling for a national system of highways would become law by an overwhelming majority, says a representative of a large rubber concern.

At Salt Lake City recently governors of 22 states signed a petition, which will be forwarded to congress, to increase immensely the annual appropriation for road-building, to be expended during the next five years.

While the Townsend bill asks for $425,000,000, their petition calls for a billion dollars. The Western governors not only indorse the bill as men, but as governors of their respective states. This action reflects plainly what the West thinks of the necessity of highways and furnishes an influence which cannot be overlooked. The West has gone on record as being willing to stand its share of the cost of a system of nationally administered roads, and the share will be a big one.

RURAL ROADS NOT IMPROVED

Not More Than One-Fourth of 1 Per Cent of Nation's Roads Suitable for Motor Traffic.

Official figures show that there are in the United States approximately 2,500,000 miles of rural roads of which 12 per cent are classed as improved. Road engineers, however, estimate that no more than one-fourth of 1 per cent of the nation's roads are suitable for motortruck traffic. More than 6,000,000 motor vehicles are now using the highways, and of this number about 500,000 are trucks varying from less than a ton capacity to vehicles capable of hauling five to seventeen loads.

The most conspicuous example of anything approaching the efficiency of a national thoroughfare in the United States is the Lincoln highway. Organized as a private enterprise six years ago, to stimulate good-road building, the officers of the association have raised several million dollars by private subscription and have stimulated the improvement of many sections of the highway by the states and counties through which it passes.

SLIDING SHOES SAVE ROADS

Wooden Device Tightly Fastened to Rear Wheel Does Much to Prevent Ruts Forming.

After a road which has steep grades is carefully repaired, it is disconcerting to see heavy wagons going down the hills with one or both rear wheels tightly clamped by the brake, grinding along the roadway and cutting ruts. On a stretch of road which had suffered greatly from this cause, heavy wagons were provided with a sliding shoe, which was placed under one rear wheel when descending a hill, to furnish braking action. The other wheel revolved and prevented side slip. The shoe was made of hard wood, surfaced on the bottom with sheetiron, and provided with a staple, ring and chain, by which it was attached to the wagon.—J. W. Shaw, Corinth, N. Y., in Popular Mechanics Magazine.

A Wide Shoe Placed Under One Rear Wheel of Each Heavy Wagon Which Descended the Steep Hills on a Road Did Much to Prevent Ruts Being Formed.

LOCAL MATERIAL NEGLECTED

One of First Economies Engineer Makes Is Utilization of Overlooked Essentials.

When a competent engineer is engaged to look after road building and maintenance one of the first economies he makes in many cases is the utilization of local materials previously neglected or undiscovered.

American Roads Inadequate.

The roads of America today are absolutely inadequate, inefficient, and antiquated. They are not designed to carry heavy traffic.

Urgent Need of Country.

The most urgent necessity of our country is good roads—permanent roads that can be used twelve months in each year.

Division of Country's Wealth.

In 1917 there were 1,832,132 persons who reported an income of $2,000 a year or more. The total income of these was $11,191,246,207, an average of a little over $6,100 each. The average tax paid was $368.56. Only 141 persons, nearly half of whom are women, had an income of $1,000,000 or more. There were 315 persons who had incomes ranging from $500,000 to $1,000,000. About nine-tenths of the wealth of the country is held by persons of more moderate fortune, down to $1,000 or $2,000 a year.

GREEN'S AUGUST FLOWER.

Constipation invites other troubles which come speedily unless quickly checked and overcome by Green's August Flower which is a gentle laxative, regulates digestion both in stomach and intestines, cleans and sweetens the stomach and alimentary canal, stimulates the liver to secrete the bile and impurities from the blood. It is a sovereign remedy used in many thousands of households all over the civilized world for more than half a century by those who have suffered with indigestion, nervous dyspepsia, sluggish liver, coming up of food, palpitation, constipation and other intestinal troubles. Tuberculosis Kills Producers It can be Prevented Use Red Cross Xmas Seals

General John J Pershing, commander of the American Expeditionary Forces has written a very strong letter to the National Tuberculosis Association, endorsing the Red Cross Christmas Seal Sale. These little stickers, sold each year during the holidays are a big factor in the fight against the White Plague. This year more than 650,000,000 Red Cross Christmas Seals will be sold in an effort to raise $6,500,000 for the intensive educational campaign against tuberculosis, being conducted by the National Tuberculosis Association. "It gives me great pleasure to heartily endorse the Red Cross Christmas Seal Sale for 1919 being conducted under the auspices of the American Red Cross and National Tuberculosis Association," writes General Pershing. "It is deserving of loyal support and every success." Concord township is allotted ten seals per person and the campaign is now on and the young folks are soliciting. Don't fail to buy.

The Juniors expect to play the St. Joe High School Team of 1918 with "Happy" Perry of the T. O. P., of Ft. Wayne, as their Center, during the Holidays. The game promises to be a "work out" for the Juniors as this team took second championship at the Basket Ball Tournament at Kendallville last year.

The Spencerville High School, teachers, Grammar Room and a few parents were entertained Friday afternoon at the High School by the "Reilly" Club, who had charge of the program presented the play entitled "Good English" which was followed by a debate,—"Should we teach Germad in American Schools". It was decided that it should not by eleven points. The caste of the play was as follows:—Miss Mary Koch, Queen of Good English; LaVern Rhodes, Every girl; Lawerence Pflaumer, Every boy; Walter Horn, Highbrow; James Reed, Webster's Dictionary; ——Ailleen Allen; Chas. Butler, as "Slang" and his four children, Bina Zimmerman, Goodnight; Alice Timmerman, Golly; Glen Hart, Gosh; Aubur Butler, Darn. The entire High School had "Good English" week; Miss Josephine Doll having thirty-nine marks receiving a Webster Dictionary as prize.

The Peace Time Casualty List

Uncle Sam sacrificed the lives of 67,882 soldiers, sailors and marines on the Altar of Freedom. It was a needed sacrifice and these men have not died in vain.

Each year 150,000 persons die of Tuberculosis in the United States.

Most of this death toll is a needless offering on the Altar of Waste to the God of Ignorance.

THE COLORS.

An interesting little scene was witnessed at the Auteuil barrier during the recent strike movement in France. Infantrymen had been posted to guard the tram line at a particular point, and on the advance of a crowd of strikers bearing the red flag the men took up their positions barring the road. The situation looked ominous enough and there seemed every likelihood of a collision, when a trooper appeared with the colors, and advancing to the front of the line displayed the blue, white and red of France. The effect of the beloved colors, symbol of so much sacrifice and so much glory, was almost instantaneous. The crowd stood silent a moment, then the revolutionary flag disappeared and soon after the strikers had all dispersed.

MARINES AS CAVALRYMEN.

Mounted marines were seen for the first time in the streets of Salt Lake City when members of the United States marine corps appeared as cavalrymen in a parade, given in honor of visiting Rotarians, who held a convention there recently. The sea soldiers explained that while "horse marines" are a novelty in this country, many of their comrades are serving as mounted infantry at Peking, China, and that several troops of mounted marines are now busy rounding up bandits in Hayti.

DOUBLE BEAUTY OF YOUR HAIR

"Danderine" creates mass of thick, gleamy waves

In a few moments you can transform your plain, dull, flat hair. You can have it abundant, soft, glossy and full of life. Just get at any drug or toilet counter a small bottle of "Danderine" for a few cents. Then moisten a soft cloth with the "Danderine" and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. Instantly, yes, immediately, you have doubled the beauty of your hair. It will be a mass, so soft, lustrous and so easy to do up. All dust, dirt and excessive oil is removed.

Let Danderine put more life, color, vigor, and brightness in your hair. This stimulating tonic will freshen your scalp, check dandruff and falling hair and help your hair to grow long, thick, strong and beautiful.—Adv.

Suggestive Name.

"There's a waiter in our restaurant named 'Scales.'" "Ah! Expects everyone to tip him, I suppose."

YOUR COLD IS EASED AFTER THE FIRST DOSE

"Pape's Cold Compound" then breaks up a cold in a few hours

Relief comes instantly. A dose taken every two hours until three doses are taken usually breaks up a severe cold and ends all the grippe misery.

The very first dose opens your clogged-up nostrils and the air passages in the head, stops nose running, relieves the headache, dullness, feverishness, sneezing, soreness and stiffness.

Don't stay stuffed-up! Quit blowing and snuffling! Clear your congested head! Nothing else in the world gives such prompt relief as "Pape's Cold Compound," which costs only a few cents at any drug store. It acts without assistance, tastes nice, contains no quinine—Insist upon Pape's!—Adv.

Unheeded Eloquence.

"We haven't many of the old-fashioned orators."

"We don't need them," answered Senator Sorghum. "Everybody now feels perfectly competent to make a speech. What we really need is more audience."

Dr. Peery's "Dead Shot" is not a "lozenge" or "syrup," but a real old-fashioned dose of medicine which cleans out Worms or Tapeworm with a single dose. Adv.

Only a doctor of long experience can look doleful when an epidemic is brewing.

"COMPLETELY DISCOURAGED"

Is the feeling and plaint of women who are "run-down" so low that work drags, head aches, back aches, dragging down feelings, dizzy, pale and weak, little things annoy and "everything goes wrong."

Look the other way just a minute and see what Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription has done for more than a million women in the last fifty years.

What it has done for others it can do for you.

A helping hand to lift up weak, tired, overtaxed women—that's what you'll find in Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It gives you just the help that you need. To be had in liquid or tablets. Tablet form, 60 cents, at all drug stores.

Frankfort, Ind.—"At different times while raising my family whenever I felt in need of a tonic, I have taken one bottle of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and have been strengthened—my whole system would tone up almost at once.

"I would recommend the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription by all women at run-down and nervous periods."—Mrs. Thomas Edwards, 457 W. Morrison Street.

Gary, Ind.—"Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription helped me, and that some other women who have suffered may be benefited, I am glad to tell what it did for me. A couple of years ago I began suffering with women's weakness. I had severe backaches, became very weak and nervous, could not eat nor sleep well. I doctored, but did not get better under the treatment. At last I began taking the 'Favorite Prescription' and it made a well woman of me, and in less than six months I was stronger than I had ever been."—Mrs. Sadie Weikel, 827 Penn St.

ON THE FUNNY SIDE

Thriftless.

"You don't seem to have much respect for those chaps painters refer to as 'the old masters.'"

"None whatever," said Mr. Dustin Stax. "They slighted their opportunities. Think of the money they could have made merely by painting into each picture a package or a bottle of something that was being advertised."

Mortal Superiority.

"If you will make three wishes," said the old-fashioned fairy, "I will see that they all come true."

"You're a little slow," responded the rustic. "Any feller that runs for office out this way will promise to make wishes come true faster'n you can think 'em up."

THOSE DEAR GIRLS.

"Jack says there isn't another girl in town with a complexion like mine."

"And you still speak to him."

Hard Going.

Life is a journey all secure
As over level roads we slip—
And then Fate calls for a detour
That spoils the pleasure of the trip.

Wish Him Luck.

"Brown has a great idea, if he ca work it out."

"What's he doing now?"

"He's trying to invent a dollar that will buy twice as much as the one we now have."

Apprehensive.

Friend—You saw the doctor, did you? I suppose he started to regulate your diet.

Dyspeptic—No; I think he started to eliminate it.

A Mad World.

Jack—I have noticed that some fellows act like fools when in love.

Edith—And I have noticed that it is not even necessary for some to be in love.—London Answers.

Leisure.

"Why can't you keep a servant?"

"I think," replied Mr. Crosslots, "that it's because she draws so much wages for the first week that she feels ready to take a two-week vacation."

Financially Speaking.

"Did Mayme accept the college professor?"

"No; she wanted an automobile and a diamond necklace, so she married the skilled day laborer."

The Woman Depositor.

"Sorry, madam, but your account is already overdrawn!"

"Well, what of it, young man? Haven't I a right to do what I like with my own account?"—Life.

Modern Simplicity.

"What a beautiful gown you have."

"My dear, it's really a very simple little thing and most inexpensive. I paid only $185 for it, would you believe it?"

The Reason.

"And you haven't any friends, poor man?"

"No, ma'am, and it's because I am a poor man that I haven't any."

In Washington.

"Yes, they sometimes launder the soiled money at the treasury."

"Can you tell me where they hang it out?"

A Defect.

"Don't you think athletics in school make a boy strong?"

"They haven't made our boy strong enough to bring up a bucket of coal."

Not for Such.

"No doubt about it," exclaimed the physician; "by means of this wonderful discovery old men can be made young."

"Why don't you try it on yourself?"

"It's no good for a doctor. A doctor spends half his life trying to look old enough to be regarded as highly erudite and experienced."

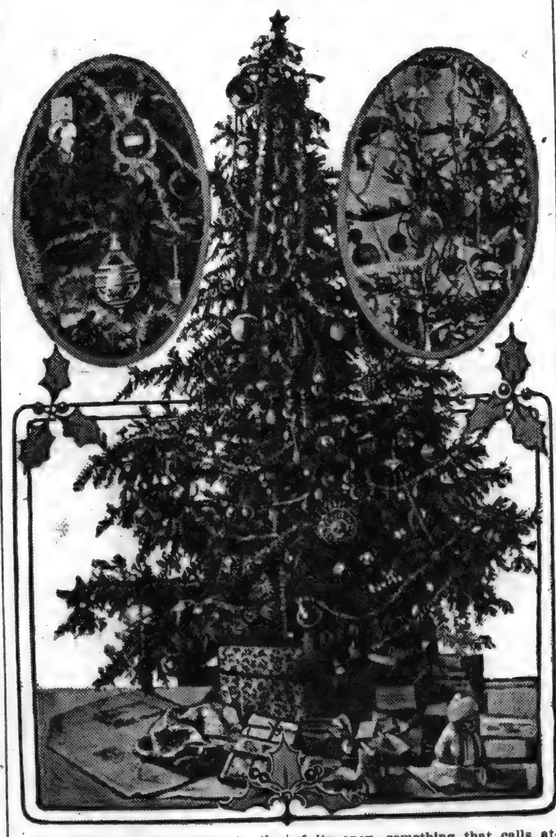
Poor Paw.

"My, what a bright looking boy! Do you take after your father much?"

"No, but you ought to see maw."

About the Christmas Tree

Suggestions for Trimmings and Decorations That Will Make the Holiday More Pleasant.



The Christmas tree seems to the happy eyes of little folks the most beautiful and splendid and gracious thing that the long year brings to them. Anticipation of it fills the children's thoughts and hearts for weeks before the great day comes, and they are happy to have a hand in making preparations for it. It seems important that the Christmas tree should help to impress on young minds the meaning of the year's greatest festival—that "peace on earth, good will toward men" is the occasion of Christmas joy and generosity. Therefore the manner of dressing the Christmas tree is worth considering.

All the old-fashioned decorations, which the children have always helped to make, we love for old associations' sake—the strings of popcorn and the strings of cranberries, little tarlatan stockings and bags for holding candy and nuts. Besides these there are birds and butterflies, stars and crosses to be added to the list of things that are made at home. Festoons of tinsel, bright, fragile glass balls and strings of bright-colored beads, that are bought at the stores will last from year to year, but the home-made decorations are new every year, and their making is a part of the play.

At the top of every tree, on the tip of its apex, something that calls attention to the day as the birthday of the Christ child should be placed, and it ought to be the most conspicuous thing on the tree. A bright Star of Bethlehem, the little figure of an angel blowing a trumpet or one of the Christ child, or a bright picture of the infant Christ framed in tinsel is to have this place of honor. Nothing is prettier than the old-fashioned Christmas tree candles, but they are more troublesome than little electric lights and less safe—only to be sparingly used when there are no electric lights to be had.

In dressing the tree strings of popcorn and silver tinsel used more abundantly than the strands of cranberries or red balls, make the prettiest effect.

They set off all the many colored trinkets placed among them, the red apples and yellow oranges that find a place on some trees and all the small gifts tied to branches.

The heavier gifts wrapped in white paper and tied with red and green ribbons or tinsel cord are to be placed at the base of the tree and the tree so dressed that when the small gifts are taken off it is still a thing of beauty, the joy and pride of the children during the Christmas holiday.

Christmas Pastimes

There are a few fine, old fashioned Christmas observances and pastimes that we have drifted away from, which it is a pity to lose. It is all right to exchange presents at Christmas time, but the mad rush of shopping that engrosses people a week or so before the holidays, indicates that Christmas revelries are being replaced by a mere exchange of gifts. After this has been accomplished there is nothing further planned, and the universal wish—for a "Merry Christmas"—has small chance of fulfillment.

We cannot hope to have as many days to give to gayeties as people had a few generations ago when the yule logs' burning measured the length of the holidays. But one, or perhaps more days can be planned so that they will not have any dull moments—and will not be too crowded. Christmas is above all a day for family reunions and for merry making among relatives and friends.

The Christmas carol has almost been lost sight of—more's the pity. Little parties of children and young people used to serenade their friends and every house had a little spread of cakes and candies, with other Christmas goodies, which they tendered to the serenaders. Then there were the small merry masquerade parties that were liable to drop in rather early in the evening of Christmas day. One of the party, unmasked, presents himself at the door of a friend or neighbor, with his masked companions behind him. Having been made welcome he dons his mask and enters with his company usually all dressed up in mirth-provoking togs. Then there is guessing as to who is who, a little dancing and everyone unmasks. The host and hostess serve a little refreshment and the masqueraders depart. Fathers and mothers get together before Christmas time to prepare and be prepared for these parties.

Children play their favorite indoor games that have come down to them and will pass on to other generations. The younger people—and others—like to dance at Christmas time, so these amusements may always be depended upon. One of the easiest and funniest features that can be introduced at a Christmas party is the time-honored shadow show. All that is needed for this is a curtain made of a sheet, with a very strong light behind it that will project on the curtain the silhouette of anyone passing between it and the light. The audience is seated in front of the curtain and all lights are turned out except the one behind the curtain.

The "actors" disguised in various costumes pass between the light and the curtain and the audience guesses as to the identity of each one. After the review the most successful guessers may become actors, while the actors who were least successful in their masquerade become spectators.

Julia Bottomley

MERRY CHRISTMAS.

It was the week before Christmas—the time of the last frantic efforts to straighten out the Christmas list.

"Let me see"—Edwin L. Sabin wrote this in the American Magazine—"there's Helena. I've simply got to give her the collar. It's almost done, anyway. No, I can give her the one I made for Winifred and send Winifred a card, or else give it to Nettie. I'm so glad I haven't finished the towel, though. A card will do so well for Virginia. All she sent me last year was a sample bottle of cheap perfumery. And she's rich. I believe I'll send Aunt Georgia a card, too, or else write a nice letter to explain that we're being sensible this year and economizing, especially at Christmas. She doesn't give to anybody."

"But she may leave us something some time," I hinted.

"So she may. Perhaps I'll give her a collar of mine, then, that I've never worn. What did I have down for her? Oh, yes; a pin. But the collar is just as good, as a remembrance, and I can save the pin. Or I can give the pin to ——. Let's see. I can give it to Lois. No—I'm to send Lois a card, wasn't I? Or Virginia."

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Teacher of English Bible in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1919, Western Newspaper Union)

LESSON FOR DECEMBER 28

REVIEW: THE TRAINING OF PETER AND JOHN.

GOLDEN TEXT—Ye shall be my witnesses.—Acts 1:8.

SELECTION FOR READING—I John 1:1-9.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Two Strong Friends of Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Witnesses for Jesus.

INTERMEDIATE TOPIC—Steps in the Training of Peter and John.

SENIOR AND ADULT TOPIC—Qualified to Serve.

A good way to review the lessons of the six months' course of study in the lives of Peter and John will be to arrange them under three heads, as follows: I. Their Call; II. Their Training; III. Their Service. The first half of the studies, the part we have now completed, have had to do with the calling and training of Peter and John. The last half, the lessons for the first quarter of 1920, will have to do with their service.

I. Their Call.

1. To be disciples (Lesson 1) John 1:29-42.

Before Christ trains for service he calls to salvation.

2. To be fishers of men (Lesson 2) Mark 1:14-20.

It would seem that after their conversion the disciples had gone back to their trade of fishing. Those who are called by Christ unto salvation should go back to their ordinary callings in life, if they be honorable, until he definitely calls them into special service.

II. Their Training.

1. Jesus in Peter's home (Lesson 3) Mark 1:29-39.

Christ's entry into Peter's home and the healing of his wife's mother showed to his disciples that he was a sympathizing Saviour.

2. A lesson in trust (Lesson 4) Matt. 14:22-33.

The pressing and abiding need of the disciples in their ministry was to trust the Lord.

3. Peter's great confession (Lesson 6) Matt. 16:13-24.

The Lord had been revealing himself in various ways to the disciples. He now examined them to see what they knew about himself. Peter, as spokesman for the rest of the disciples, confessed both the Messiahship and Deity of Christ.

4. Witnesses of Christ's glory (Lesson 7) Luke 9:28-36.

The disciples were offended at the revelation of the cross; their hopes were shattered because they could not see beyond the cross. The transfiguration convinced them not only of his essential glory, but gave them a foregleam of his triumph in his coming kingdom (II Peter 1:16-18).

5. Jesus corrects John's narrowness (Lesson 8) Luke 9:46-56.

The disciples needed to know that all who are really doing the Lord's work, casting out devils, and casting them out in Christ's name, should be received into fellowship and bidden Godspeed. Religious intolerance is displeasing to Jesus.

6. Jesus teaches true greatness (Lesson 9) John 13:1-16.

The truly great are those who take the lowest place in service for others.

7. Peter and John asleep in Gethsemane (Lesson 10) Mark 14:32-42.

Though Christ was suffering the awful agony in the garden, his disciples were asleep. Because they did not watch and pray, they failed in the hour of temptation.

8. At the trial crucifixion and resurrection of Jesus (Lesson 11) John 18:15-18; 19:25-27; 20:1-10; 21:15-19. Peter's presumptuous self-confidence kept him from heeding the Lord's warning. He played the coward and even indulged in oaths. Note the steps in Peter's downfall: (1) Self-confidence (Mark 14:29). Jesus had just told them that all of them should be offended, but Peter was determined to show the Lord that he was mistaken in him. (2) Failure to watch (Mark 14:37). Self-confidence is always followed by unwatchfulness. One who thinks himself strong will go to sleep. (3) Failure to pray (Mark 14:38). It is the one who realizes his weakness who always seeks the communion of God in prayer. (4) Zeal without knowledge (Mark 14:47). Peter thought now to make up for his lack of watchfulness and prayer by outward acts. Many today are equally foolish. (5) Following afar off (Mark 14:54). Christ's rebuke of Peter for his ignorant zeal cut him to the quick. He was not ready to forsake him, but followed afar off, no doubt wondering what would be the outcome. (6) Warming himself at the enemies' fire (Mark 14:54). (7) Open denial (Mark 14:66-72).

Position in Life.

THE MAKING OF A FAMOUS MEDICINE

How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Is Prepared For Woman's Use.

A visit to the laboratory where this successful remedy is made impresses even the casual looker-on with the reliability, accuracy, skill and cleanliness which attends the making of this great medicine for woman's ills.

Over 350,000 pounds of various herbs are used anually and all have to be gathered at the season of the year when their natural juices and medicinal substances are at their best.

The most successful solvents are used to extract the medicinal properties from these herbs.

Every utensil and tank that comes in contact with the medicine is sterilized and as a final precaution in cleanliness the medicine is pasteurized and sealed in sterile bottles.

It is the wonderful combination of roots and herbs, together with the skill and care used in its preparation which has made this famous medicine so successful in the treatment of female ills.

The letters from women who have been restored to health by the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound which we are continually publishing attest to its virtue.

Acid-Stomach Makes 9 Out of 10 People Suffer

Doctors declare that more than 70 nonorganic diseases can be traced to Acid-Stomach. Starting with indigestion, heartburn, belching, food-repeating, bloat, sour, gassy stomach, the entire system eventually becomes affected, every vital organ suffering in some degree or other. You see these victims of Acid-Stomach everywhere—people who are subject to nervousness, headache, insomnia, billousness—people who suffer from rheumatism, lumbago, sciatica and aches and pains all over the body. It is safe to say that about 9 people out of 10 suffer to some extent from Acid-Stomach.

If you suffer from stomach trouble or, even if you do not feel any stomach distress, yet are weak and ailing, feel tired and dragged out, lack "pep" and enthusiasm and know that something is wrong although you cannot locate the exact cause of your trouble—you naturally want to get back your grip on health as quickly as possible. Then take EATONIC, the wonderful modern remedy that brings quick relief from pains of indigestion, belching, gassy bloat, etc. Keep your stomach strong, clean and sweet. See how your general health improves—how quickly the old-time vim, vigor and vitality comes back!

Get a big 50c box of EATONIC from your druggist today. It is guaranteed to please you. If you are not satisfied your druggist will refund your money.

MUST BE MELTED IN TOWER

Only Way City of St. Louis Can Get Rid of Bell Which Renders Structure Unsafe.

The two-ton bell which hangs in the tower of the city hall has made the tower unsafe, but the bell is so large it would be dangerous to try to take it down, so it is to be melted right where it is with acetylene blow torches, such as are commonly seen in use by workmen repairing car tracks, says the St. Louis Post Dispatch.

Building Commissioner McKelvey pronounced the tower unsafe as long as the bell remains, because the steel supports have been corroded. Moreover, he said, an attempt to lower the bell would be very dangerous, therefore the decision to take it down a bucketful at a time.

The only time in recent years that the bell has been rung was the day of the armistice celebration. It was rung when the building was constructed in 1904. The bell cost about $2,000. The expense of removing it will be about $1,500. It is six feet high and four feet in diameter at the base.

Not So Shrinking.

Grayes—She seems a timid, flower-like girl.

Leigh—Well?

Grayes—Do you think her mother would allow her to go to the theater without a chaperon?

Leigh—Why, I think so, my boy. She drove an ambulance in France during the war.—London Answers.

Dinner Invitation Declined.

"We're invited to the Browns for dinner tomorrow night," said he enthusiastically.

"We're not going," she replied.

"Why not? We have no engagement for tomorrow evening. The Browns are good friends of ours."

"That's all right, but we're not going there for dinner. That man Brown has altogether too much liquor in his cellar. If you spend an evening there I'll have to drive the car home. I'm taking no chances."

FOOLED BY FINE FEATHERS

Eastern Potentate Evidently Unaccustomed to Seeing Flunkys With So Much Gold Lace.

The gorgeous uniforms of the dignified English servants who always are in attendance at all official receptions have been the rocks upon which the pride of more than one foreigner has been wrecked. The initiated is never sure as he approaches one of these impassive-faced functionaries whether the latter is a field marshal or a footman. Witness the discomfiture of his highness Prince Feisal, son of the king of Hedjaz, at the great reception in the guildhall to England's returning hero, Field Marshal Viscount Allenby.

The Arabian prince, clad in his official robes of oriental design, was one of the many famous men at the guildhall. Always punctilious in the extreme, his highness made his way into the ancient hall, bowing to right and left as he met great soldiers and statesmen of the country.

He neared one, who, wearing wonderful raiment adorned with yards of heavy gold lace, appeared to be greater than them all. The prince bowed deeply—to the lord mayor's flunky.

Poetic Nomenclature.

Illinois is an Indian word with the French suffix "ois," meaning "Tribe of Men." Indiana means "Indian Land." Michigan is an Indian word meaning "Fish Weir," so called from a fancied resemblance of the lake to a fish trap. Minnesota is Indian for "Sky-tinted water." Ohio means "beautiful water." Wisconsin means "rushing water."

In the Right Place.

"Where was that tongue of land situated you were talking about?"

"Just at the mouth of the river."

Hoosier News Briefly Told

Evansville.—The Wabash river bottom corn crop is a 100 per cent loss; the lower Ohio valley corn, 50 per cent, according to Julius Artes, manager of the Union elevator of this city. He says cars of corn coming in from the bottoms steam as if on fire.

Anderson.—Members of the school board at Elwood were enjoined from permitting the use of the high school auditorium there for a Socialist lecture by an order issued in the Madison county superior court by Judge W. S. Ellis. An application for the restraining order was made by Dr. W. H. Hopenrath, and 32 other citizens of Elwood.

Evansville.—Hundreds of farmers on both of the Indiana and Kentucky sides of the Ohio river between Evansville and Paducah, Ky., are buying more hogs than ever before. In the flood of two weeks ago many thousands of acres of corn were so badly damaged that it can not be marketed and farmers figure it will be economy in the long run to buy hogs to which to feed it.

Indianapolis.—Two men dead, four women hurt, one man severely cut and bruised, and damage to light and telephone wires, show windows, signboards, church steeples, telephone poles and other property—this is the toll of a violent rainstorm and gale which broke over Indianapolis. The anemometer of the United States weather bureau on the roof of the Lemcke Annex building registered a velocity of 56 miles an hour.

Madison.—Martin Wade, as president of the Jefferson County Society of Medical Freedom, has filed an injunction suit in which he seeks to restrain the school board of Madison, school superintendent, a number of scholteachers and several local physicians from conducting further physical examinations in the city schools. The case will be heard at the January term of the Jefferson circuit court.

Lafayette.—Twenty-two per cent, or 4,256 hens in the poultry flocks on Indiana farms were found to be slackers and were discarded by poultrymen of the Purdue university extension department in the culling campaign which they conducted during August and September, according to figures which are contained in the final report of their work. During the two months that the campaign was going on the men conducted 214 demonstrations in 56 counties and handled 16,068 hens.

Evansville.—Unable to supply the needy persons in the city with coal, Ralph Stece Stevens, trustee of Pigeon township here, is giving all the applicants who apply for coal a load of wood. He is obtaining it from a grove near the city and thus far has been able to get enough to take care of all families without coal. Many people in southern Indiana towns are using wood and it is said that in some instances shade trees have been cut down for use as fuel.

Columbus.—Teachers in the North side public school here serve lunch of bread and butter and milk to pupils. Each pupil receives a pint of milk and a slice of bread and butter. The milk is sipped through straws provided by teachers. It was the intention at first to feed only those who seemed to be undernourished, but other pupils said they were hungry, too. The children were weighed and will be weighed again the last day of the present month to determine whether the object of the experiment, to increase the weight of the children, has been accomplished.

Indianapolis.—The 1920 automobile license plates show olive green numbers on a buff background. They are made of heavier steel than the 1919 plates, which generally were complained of as being too light and inclined to warp. The plates are made at the state prison. As usual the plates will not be mailed until just after Christmas because of the heavy pre-Christmas mails. The state department expects that more than 15,000 applications will be on file by that time. Truck plates will bear the word "truck" stamped perpendicularly on the left end. The department has collected more than $1,558,000 in license fees this year.

Chicago.—Peter J. Lux of Shelby county, Indiana, was crowned corn king of the United States, and Gus Myers of Elwood, Ind., brought another of the five biggest prizes of the international live stock exposition to Indiana when he won grand championship in the carlot hog classes. He won with a carload of fat Hampshires, while his father, Michael Myers, who took home this coveted prize last year, had the reserve champions this time. These two men were the only representatives from Indiana in this class and they won over 25 other entries from the corn belt states. The elder Myers also showed the champion pen of Hampshire barrows and won other smaller prizes.

Indianapolis.—Scarlet fever was the most prevalent infectious disease in Indiana in October, a report of the state board of health shows. Influenza was prevalent in 18 counties, but with only slightly higher than normal numbers of cases. The state birth rate for the month was 20.7 for each 1,000 of population and the death rate was 10.2.

Bedford.—When the Lawrence County Driving association was unable to obtain a renewal of its lease on ground here the association was dissolved. Money in the treasury was divi[illegible]ong the stockholders.

Indianapolis.—L. H. Wright, master of the Indiana State grange, has announced that the state grange meeting will be held in Nappanee January 20 to 23, 1920. The national grange organization met recently in Grand Rapids, Mich.

Indianapolis.—Organization of all transfers and warehouse men in the state was urged at a meeting of the Indiana Transfer and Warehousemen's association at a meeting held here. The following officers were elected: C. F. Borgman of Fort Wayne, president; Tom Snyder of Indianapolis, secretary, and C. W. Abrams of Indianapolis, treasurer.

Indianapolis.—Pleas of guilty were entered by sixty defendants out of 104 arraniged before Judge A. B. Anderson in one day in the federal court. Pleas of not guilty were entered by forty-three defendants. Joseph Feinbloom, lawyer, Indianapolis, was sentenced to the penitentiary for two years and fined $100 for having appropriated and altered a savings stamp certificate.

Terre Haute.—The board of park commissioners of the park district of Terre Haute has formally approved the appraisement of properties that it is proposed to acquire in the establishment of a park, playground and boulevard district for the city. The decision to create this district was reached at a special election held last spring. The vote was small, but the result was two to one in favor of the project.

Gary.—Gary leads all Indiana cities in construction in the last 11 months. During this period 1,144 permits have been issued for a total construction expenditure of $5,263,142. These figures do not include the expenditure of approximately $10,000,000 for the new Gary tin mills, nor for the construction of the addition to the gas plant of the Gary Heat, Light and Water company, costing $300,000. The building and industrial construction activity total approximately $15,500,000 for the 11 months.

Clinton.—Six men were killed and three seriously injured in an explosion at Bogle coal mine No. 3 at Jacksonville, near here. All of them either were mine officials or employees in the office of the company, who, in attempting to get out sufficient coal for the boilers, set off a badly prepared blast. The mine has been closed by the strike. The dead are: John Stark, Terre Haute; Herbert Campbell, Clinton; Joe Robertson, Clinton; S. G. Stephens, Terre Haute; Charles Watson, Clinton; John Logsdon, Terre Haute. Stark and Robertson were office employees, Stephens a civil engineer, Watson an assistant mine boss, and Logsdon a room boss.

Lafayette.—Corn, wheat and oats, the principal grain crops of this state, have shown a steady increase in yield the last thirty years, according to the nineteenth annual report of the Indiana Corn Growers' association, which is being sent from the office here of G. I. Christie, secretary-treasurer, to 2,500 members of the organization. "The average yield for the state in all these crops is yet far too low and with the attention of more of our farmers to better methods, the use of better machinery, maintenance of soil fertility, the rotation of crops, much can be done to increase the returns. Indiana corn growers are urged to study this situation and to plan for a further improvement of their farm crops," the report says.

Chicago.—First honors in the first ring at the cattle show of the International Live Stock Show exposition here went to Indiana, when Clara Ray, 17 years old, of Mellott, Fountain county, showed the grand champion steer, A grade Short Horn, in the boys' and girls' calf club class. By this winning, the Indiana girl wins the title of being the champion calf club feeder in the country. Her steer, Buster, won over twenty others from a number of states in the junior yearling class, and a few minutes later defeated the steer that won first in the senior calf class. Charles Hendry, a son of James Hendry, manager of the McCray stock farm, at Kentland, landed in the third place with a purebred Hereford calf, Wilson. Another calf, also fed by young Hendry, finished seventh.

Indianapolis.—Maximum retail and wholesale margins on sugar, effective for the entire state, were set by Stanley Wyckoff, federal fair price commissioner for Indiana. Mr. Wyckoff fixed .65 of a cent a pound as the wholesale margin, and 1½ cents a pound as the retail margin. The order was effective on announcement. According to Mr. Wyckoff's figures, beet sugar should sell in this state at not more than 18 cents a pound, and Louisiana clarified cane sugar, the only other kind of sugar being received in the state, at not more than 21 cents. However, Mr. Wyckoff has announced that where a grocer has both kinds on hand in order not to sell sugar at 21 cents to another, the grocer is authorized to average the cost of both sugars, figure his cent and a half profit on the average cost, and sell the entire lot at the average price. This will make sugar at such stores sell at any figure between 18 and 21 cents a pound.

Terre Haute.—Representatives of farmers' organizations and commercial clubs in 18 counties in the Wabash valley met here to formulate plans for the organization of the "Wabash Valley Empire," under which title a "get-together-marketing-production" movement is to be started throughout eastern Illinois and western Indiana. The representatives decided to present the matter to their respective organizations to prepare programs for the campaign which it is proposed to undertake during the month of February. The plans contemplate many public meetings throughout the territory.

THE MOST DANGEROUS OF ALL DISEASES

No organs of the human body are so important to health and long life as the kidneys. When they slow up and commence to lag in their duties, look out! Danger is in sight.

Find out what the trouble is—without delay. Whenever you feel nervous, weak, dizzy, suffer from sleeplessness, or have pains in the back, wake up at once. Your kidneys need help. These are signs to warn you that your kidneys are not performing their functions properly. They are only half doing their work and are allowing impurities to accumulate and be converted into uric acid and other poisons, which are causing you distress and will destroy you unless they are driven from your system.

VASSAR GIRLS DRESS DOLLS

Students at Famous College Revive Old Custom for the Benefit of Neighborhood Children.

People who have been brought up to believe that college girls are inevitably of masculine type might be interested to know that the students at Vassar college are at present in the midst of a doll-dressing contest. Nor is this contest a new event at Vassar. Every year shortly before Thanksgiving 600 dolls are bought by the Christian association and distributed among the students to be dressed in time for Christmas for the children of the surrounding neighborhood. At an appointed time the dolls are assembled by their respective owners and placed row on row for inspection. The best-dressed doll is selected and her owner rewarded with a prize.

This custom has been observed at Vassar for many years. For the last two years, however, it has been omitted, owing to the exigencies of war work. But now that those services are not needed the work has been taken up again with an added interest and enthusiasm.

Consolation.

"I-gash, you'll have to excuse me, Mr. Mullinax!" apologized through the closed door the landlord of the Petunia tavern to the Kansas City newspaper man who had been aroused from his slumber by mine host's knocking. Logs Set Afire by Friction.

The curious spectacle of great logs set afire by friction of their rapid descent in a long chute was witnessed recently in the mountains of Washington state. Logs of exceptional length were needed for special water-front piling, and could be found only at a great height. The chute down which the cut timbers were slid was over a mile long, and the big sticks attained a tremendous velocity. One that "jumped the track" on the way, shattered a 24-in. oak tree in its course, without material damage to itself.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

New York Lost Population.

New York state has sustained a potential loss of 90,000 in population during the last 20 months, due to a remarkably low birth rate and the ravages of influenza last year, according to Dr. Herman M. Biggs, state commissioner of health.

The death rate has declined steadily since the epidemic, and the present rate, 10.4, is the lowest recorded for many years. The birth rate, at the same time, is the lowest ever recorded, the rates for July and August having been 18.7 and 18.8 a thousand population, or about 29 per cent lower than for the corresponding months of 1918.

A Supernatural Work.

In these days of loose views concerning personal conversion, it is very essential that the Bible doctrine should be kept to the front. It is a saddening fact that some theological teachers, as well as many ministers occupying evangelical pulpits, are telling people, and especially young, unconverted ones, that it is not necessary for one to subject himself to the process of regeneration in order to become a Christian. Those men talk in favor of "salvation by character" The folly of this thing may be seen in the fact that personal character and personal salvation are two distinct things. Those men would make personal character the power of one's own salvation. It means that the natural man has the ability to lift himself from the lowness of mortal corruption into the height of Christian life. It also means that man is his own saviour.

Of course all this is the rankest kind of naturalism. It shows an entire independence of Christ. It is also a contempt for the atonement of Christ. And yet such advocates call themselves Christians! They are simply unmasked sinners. The sober truth is, every true conversion to Christ is a distinctly superhuman work. It is only by the direct power of God in Christ that a sinner can be changed into a saint. The Bible recognises only two general classes of people, calling them saints and sinners, or believers and unbelievers. No sinner can cross the line between the two classes, except by means of regeneration, and personal regeneration is always a supernatural work. The fatherhood of God does not in itself save any person. Nor does God's life in itself save a sinner. Gods love has provided a plan of salvation; the plan itself is superhuman, and when it is made effective to an unsaved one, it is by supernatural power. He who despises that power deprives himself of the only power that can save him from spiritnal death and eternal condemnation. Let Christ save you now!

Christmas Plums

Christmas—co-operation, cheer!

It is a catching affair—this spirit of Christmas—and the nearer it approaches the more contagious it becomes.

Every time that Christmas comes around again we wonder why we haven't cultivated the Christmas spirit all the year.

Here's hoping that all our soldier boys, on land and sea, will have a few Christmas plums on the day of good will—even though this year they may be mostly in the pudding.

Probably the girls are saying the same thing this year that they have said every year in the past—"Well, I'm going to start making presents right away for next Christmas."

We get most of the enjoyment of Christmas out of the dreams that come before and after. Oh, to dream of it before it comes, to enjoy it while it is here, and to appreciate it when it has gone!

At least we are reasonably sure of one thing—which is that no soldier will have to go without a good Christmas dinner. Well, this is as it should be, since—to paraphrase our old friend, Mr. Dryden—surely the brave deserve the fare.

• • •

Not namin' any names, we are willing to admit that there are folks in this world whose Christmas dinner doesn't interest us in the least—except that we hope they'll have plenty of food for reflection, and that after the meal is over they'll get their just desserts.

WRAPPING ADDS TO THE GIFT

Home Art Specialist Suggests Use of White Ribbon and Tissue Paper With Bits of Foliage.

The wrapping of a Christmas gift is an expression of the giver as much as the gift itself, asserts Miss Araminta Holman, instructor in home art in the Kansas State Agricultural college.

"A pretty gift will lose much of its charm if it is wrapped carelessly," said Miss Holman. "As much care should be taken in the wrapping as in the selection of the gift.

"The wrappings should be dainty and inconspicuous, and in harmony with the gift and the sentiment that the giver wishes to accompany the gift. White tissue paper tied with white ribbon with a bit of foliage for color, makes a prettier and neater wrapping than colored paper and colored ribbon. If the gift is to be sent through the mail, the outside wrappings must necessarily be of strong paper, but if tied neatly and securely with tinsel Christmas cord, the package will make an attractive appearance, and at the same time will protect the gift."

Personal touches, such as original sketches on the gift card or a spray of foliage from the region of the giver's home convey a deep sentiment and thoughtfulness on the part of the giver, according to Miss Holman. While holly and mistletoe are the emblematic Christmas foliage, a spray of hemlock, bittersweet, pepper bough, or any pretty native foliage may be used.

ROAST GOOSE FOR CHRISTMAS

How to Prepare Fowl Which for Hundreds of Years Has Been Conventional Holiday Dinner Dish.

For hundreds of years goose has been an important conventional Christmas dinner dish. Select a young, tender goose, for its palatability greatly depends on this, one weighing about eight or ten pounds, says an experienced housekeeper.

For the dressing take four cupfuls of hot mashed potatoes, two and one half tablespoonfuls of finely chopped onions, one cupful of English walnut meats chopped moderately fine; one and one-half teaspoonfuls of salt, one half cupful of cream, two tablespoonfuls of butter and the yolks of four eggs and a teaspoonful of sage.

Stuff the body with the dressing and sew up the openings. Bring the legs and wings close to the body and tie with a white string which must be removed just before serving.

Put the goose in the dripping pan with two cupfuls of boiling water and roast for nearly two hours, according to size of fowl, basting often and freely. Remove the goose to a hot platter, pour off the oil in the pan and make a gravy with flour that has been browned. Always serve apple sauce with roast goose.

Select juicy, tart apples and pare, slice and stew with just enough water to keep from burning. When done, rub them through a sieve and add sugar to taste.

The poor will many a care forget,
The debtor think not of his debt,
But, as they both enjoy their cheer,
Wish it were Christmas all the year.
—Thomas Miller.

Safety First

Don't allow children to touch the lighted tree.

Don't remove presents from the tree while it is lighted.

Don't leave anything highly inflammable near the tree.

Don't set the tree up haphazardly. Be sure it is securely fastened so it will not tip over easily.

Don't blow a candle out. The flame might be carried against a dry branch and set fire to the whole tree.

Don't fasten any tinsel ornament near any lights on the tree. If one should ignite the blaze would spread all over the tree.

Don't forget to fasten the candles securely to the tree if candles are used. Also avoid placing them under another branch.

Always have a wet sponge convenient to the tree. A candle often burns up too quickly, and the sponge could be used to extinguish it.

Don't leave the tree until you are sure the lights are all extinguished, and never trust the work of extinguishing the lights to children.

Don't light the tree after it has stood in a warm room for three or four days. It becomes so dry it will burn almost as quickly as powder.

Don't trim the tree with cotton to represent snow. Use an asbestos preparation which looks like cotton. This applies particularly to those who illuminate their trees with candles.

Don't light the trees with anything but electric bulbs, if possible. Where it is impossible to use electricity never leave the lighted tree alone and never allow children in the room unless accompanied by a grown-up person.

• • •

Don't set the tree up near upholstered furniture. The danger of sparks setting it afire is great. A piece of such furniture might smolder for hours without being discovered—probably not until the family has been in bed some time.

VALUE IS ONLY SENTIMENTAL

Mistletoe One of Most Greatly Admired of Evergreen Plants But Is Practically Worthless.

Perhaps none of our evergreen plants is more loved and admired than the mistletoe, with its modest yellowish-green leaves and its clusters of small white berries. For centuries it has been considered an important feature of the Christmas decoration. Yet, in regard to the real value of the plant, the mistletoe is practically worthless.

It is a small shrub comprising more than four hundred known species, mostly tropical and parasitic. In the eastern and southern parts of the United States the common mistletoe grows on various species of deciduous trees. In Europe, it seems to prefer the apple-tree to any other host.

It sends its roots through the bark of the tree and draws sustenance from the sap. However, it is only a partial parasite, for it has green leaves which enable it to do some work in making food for itself.

In some species of mistletoe the flowers are showy, while those of other species are more modest. The pistils and stamens do not grow within the same flower, or even on the same plant, but the pistillate flowers grow on one plant and the staminate on another.

The berries contain flat seeds, surrounded by a very sticky substance, from which birdlime may be made. This birdlime is spread upon places frequented by birds, to impede their movements and render them easily captured. In a similar way it may be used to snare ground-squirrels and other small animals. This is the only practical use that has ever been made of the mistletoe.

The plant grows very slowly, and not until it is four years old does it bear its first white, translucent berries. However, it drains the vital juices necessary to the growth of the tree, and when many bunches find lodgment upon the same tree, they ultimately cause its decline and death.—Shining Light.

The Circle of Divine Love

Christmas reverses creation. One gave us man in the image of God, while the other gave us God in the image of man. The two complete the circle of divine love. That the gods should come down in the likeness of man was long recognized as a universal possibility. And yet Christmas stands alone. It has no counterpart in all the recorded manifestations of deity. The story is natural when one recalls of whom it was written. That a man like Jesus should have entered the world by a special door is not strange. He was different from all others. The wine press of his life no one could tread but himself. That night belongs to no calendar. The very stars were their brightest faces, when from before the depths of space God drew aside his curtains of richest blue. Jesus did not come alone.

Many People Poisoned

Scores of people meet death each year by a slow process of poisoning that is going on within our bodies. This poisoning is caused by the liver and kidneys failing to perform their proper function. Poisonous matter accumulates within the body and health declines. The unsightly liver splotches, biliousness, headache and dizziness, bad taste in the mouth, coated tongue, a pain in the back or under the shoulder blade, a tired or achy feeling are some of the most common symptoms of this poisoning. If this poisoning it not expelled and the cause removed the resisting power is finally gone and life pays the penalty. Are you of the heedless class or are you safeguarding your health? If you want health you must keep the liver, kidneys and bowels active. Glando Tonic is what you need to restore this activity and expell the poisons. Keep on the safe side and use a reliable remedy. Glando Tonic is put up in a treatment form and guaranteed to do the work. Ask your druggist for a large $1 treatment. Take it as directed and you will be surprised to know how much poison was stored up within your body. When the liver is inactive a mucus or slime collects within the stomach and bowels which hinders digestion and the assimilation of food. This is called catarrh of the stomach or bowels. Glando Tonic cuts this slime and mucus and removes it. A nauceated feeling is sometimes experienced when this mucus is breaking loose but as soon as it is removed from the bowels, you will feel fine, the complexion clear, the appet te return and you will want to tell others of your wonderful cure.

Glando Tonic is sold by druggists or may be secured by sending direct to the Gland-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Indiana.

At Lowber Mines.

Fayette City, Pa.
Dec 12, 1919.

Dear Fred:

As you will see, I have been "rambling," and that is one reason why I have not written before. We, Mrs. Peterson and myself left South Connellsville two weeks ago today for Layton, where we visited with Mrs. Peterson's relatives, and where she is now, but expects to join me here Sunday. While at Layton, a place about the size of St. Joe, I visited the different brick yards. The Bowman yards first. There they make mostly paving brick. Through the courtesy of Mr. Ed Hamilton, the foreman, I was shown through the works. Their capacity is about 30,000 paving brick a day. They have eighteen large kilns, holding several thousand bricks each, steam pipes layed under the floor keeps the floors hot all the time, and the bricks soon dry after being placed there. They are then carted to the kilns and made ready to burn, which takes about ten days and about four to five days to cool off. They work about 125 hands, and run night and day. They all call the material the brick is made of "clay," but if any of our St. Joe friends should see it, they would call it stone. They haul it from the mine on little cars that hold about 4 tons, drawn from the mines with horses, on a narrow guage track, while up at the weighing office on the side hill, Mr. Hamilton handed me a carbide miner's lamp and says: "We will now get into one of these "wagons" (they call the cars wagons,) and go into the mines and I will show you how we get our "clay." So in I jumps and away we went, when we came to the mouth of the mine, he shouted out "duck" and I did duck, for the opening was just high enough for the horse to enter. After we had gotten into the mine a hundred yards, it was dark as night. Then was when our lamps came in good use, we went on and on and passing many switches that leads off into "rooms" which had been worked out. Some of them hundreds of yards away from the main track that we were on. At last, about three quarters of a mile from the mouth, we came to where the miners were working. The vein of "clay" from the opening is about 9 feet. They drill a hole in the clay, (rock) put in each hole three sticks of dynamite, light the fuse, then run to one of the many "rooms". Once think of it, here we are, between three and four feet under the ground, and such a blast. What if the roof of the mine should fall in while in there and they were blasting? "Old Pete" would raise no more garden truck in old St Joe.

I visited the other yards, and they were all on the same principal, except the Soisons, where they make only Fire Proof brick, called "Silica." At Layton, which is a valley, the B. & O. R. R. runs on one side of the Yaughagana river and the P. & L. E. on the other side, the hills on either side raising to from five hundred to six hundred feet. These hills are full of coal and "clay." I almost forgot to tell you that this clay or stone, after it gets to the yards is wheeled to a powerful stone crusher, then to a large grinder that grinds it fine, then damped, then to the moulders. These brick yards are interesting to a stranger, and do not in the least compare with our brick yards out there.

In my next letter, I will speak of the coal mines and coke ovens here. I expect to go into the coal mines here the Fayette City, which mine runs six miles into the mountain, and the cars are hauled to and from the mines by cable, the same of the Lowber mine, next week, as the mines here have been closed on account of the strike.

Well, Fred, there are many things here that perhaps might be as interesting to you out there as they are to me here, but I don't want to be tedious.

Mrs. Peterson joins me in sending our kindest regards to all.

Yours truly,
W. E. Peterson.

The timber business in St. Joe is a growing industry and quarters about the railroad are being filled up with the finest kind of logs and lumber. The lumber is being sawed in the Henry Krabill woods and shipped in plank form while the logs are being taken from the Jas. Hamilton farm east of town and shipped. The firm that purphased this saw timber are figuring on having 100 car loads all to be loaded here within the next couple of months. The local saw mill is having a good run, running nearly every day and orders for material are being secured by Don Hindman manager of the mill, faster than the men are able to get out the work.

Staman Residence Burns.

The farm residence of William Staman, Jr., was destroyed by fire on Sunday. Every thing upstairs was burned, consisting of carpets beds, bedding, clothing and many other articles. The fire was discovered while they were at the barn doing the chores. William run to the house and attempted to go up stairs but the rooms were so filled with smoke that he was not able to go up and get any thing out. The goods down stairs were moved out when some of the neighbors arrived. The fire department was called but by the time the boys were gathered together and then made the run of two and a half miles, the fire had gained such headway that it was impossible for them to do much only to keep it confined to the part that was on fire. Chas. Miller, the hired man is short of all his clothes with the exception of the work clothes he had on. Insurance to the amount of $ was carried on the house and contents. The young folks moved what goods they saved in with Mr. Wm. Staman, Sr. and wife.

Our Final Statement.

Today The News comes to it's readers with its statement as to how it will deal with the high cost of print paper and print materials in general, and that is, that after the Christmas issue we expect to suspend the publication.

Many things have been taken into consideration during our advance in print paper during the month of December, that but few folks know anything about at all. It simply meant to us that the subscription price must be advanced to $1.50 at least, advertising rates increased and the other products of our office also. To do this would mean a loss of considerable business and this we could not afford as our field is limited already.

For thirteen years the present editor has had charge of THE ST. JOE NEWS, and while we have made some mistakes, yet we can place the local paper along side any of our exchange papers coming from towns our size and feel mighty proud. For some months the work of the office has been carried on with the assistance of Mrs. Leighty only and this has become quite a burden for her.

In order that every one fully understands, we have made arrangements whereby our subscription list will be taken over by The Auburn Courier and The Auburn Dispatch, two county seat newspapers. These papers will continue the subscriptions to The News according to the preference of the subscribers. Both of these newspapers have assurred us that they will have St. Joe and Spencerville departments and in addition will give the court house news, real estate transfers, marriages, and all county news, thereby affording the best service obtainable for our readers. Both the Dispatch and the Courier are published twice-a-week and are recognized as leaders in the republican and democratic fields of DeKalb county. C. B. Hamilton is editor of the Courier and V. E. Buchanan is editor of the Dispatch. Both are capable newspaper men and we believe that all subscribers of the News will be pleased by the arrangement.

We have put much time on arranging the mode of caring for our subscribers and we feel as though this is the best method of proceedure. Every person who is paid in advance on the News at $1.25 a year will in turn receive a $2.00 a year paper, twice-a-week until the time of the expiration of their subscription.

It has been hard for us to make our decision in this matter, but we feel as though we have served our community well and that no word of condemnation can be passed upon us. We have at this time, several positions open, which we hope will prove satisfactory to us, as we go to the new work.

Let us again call our readers attention to the statements sent out a week ago, we ask that they respond promptly with their remittance to January 1, 1920, at which time we expect to make the transfer of the subscription list to the new editors.

The equipment and property in which we have been operating, will still be held in our possession.

S. S. Widney, who has his place of business with The News, will continue as before, and he will take over the school supplies, post cards, magazine retail and subscription business, stationery, cardboards and supplies now handled by The News.

THE "BLUES"

Caused by

Acid-Stomach

Millions of people who worry, are despondent, have spells of mental depression, feel blue and are often melancholy, believe that these conditions are due to outside influences over which they have little or no control. Nearly always, however, they can be traced to an internal source—acid-stomach. Nor is it to be wondered at. Acid-stomach, beginning with such well defined symptoms as indigestion, belching, heartburn, bloat, etc., will, if not checked, in time affect to some degree or other all the vital organs. The nervous system becomes deranged. Digestion suffers. The blood is impoverished. Health and strength are undermined. The victim of acid-stomach, although he may not know the cause of his ailments, feels his hope, courage, ambition and energy slipping. And truly life is dark—not worth much to the man or woman who has acid-stomach!

Get rid of it! Don't let acid-stomach hold you back, wreck your health, make your days miserable, make you a victim of the "blues" and gloomy thoughts! There is a marvelous modern remedy called EATONIC that brings, oh! such quick relief from your stomach miseries—sets your stomach to rights—makes it strong, cool, sweet and comfortable. Helps you get back your strength, vigor, vitality, enthusiasm and good cheer. So many thousands upon thousands of sufferers have used EATONIC with such marvelously helpful results that we are sure you will feel the same way if you will just give it a trial. Get a big 50 cent box of EATONIC—the good tasting tablets that you eat like a bit of candy—from your druggist today. He will return your money if results are not even more than you expect.

STRIKE ENDED ON WILSON TERMS; MEN GO BACK AT ONCE

Leaders Accept 14 Per Cent Increase and Commission Offer.

OFFICIAL ORDER SENT OUT

Acting President Lewis Issues Statement in Which He Says the President's Proposal Only One With Concrete Offer.

Indianapolis, Dec. 11.—The strike of 400,000 bituminous coal miners of the country was settled here when the general committee of the United Mine Workers of America agreed to accept the plan offered by President Wilson.

Acting President Lewis of the United Mine Workers announced that telegraphic orders would immediately be sent to the 4,000 miners' locals throughout the country, instructing the miners to return to work at once. An official order carrying the signatures of the miners' officials will follow the telegraphic instructions.

A reconvened convention of the officials of the various miners' unions throughout the country will be called in Indianapolis as soon as the work has been fully resumed in the mines. Mr. Lewis announced, during which a full and complete explanation of the action of the officials in settling the strike will be made.

Statement by Lewis.

Following is the announcement of the settlement of the coal strike made public by Mr. Lewis:

"The United Mine Workers' representatives agreed to accept the president's proposal as a basis of settlement of the strike. They did so because it provides a definite, concrete and practical method by which adequate consideration and a proper adjustment of their claim for an increase in wages and improved conditions of employment may be brought about. The United Mine Workers have full confidence in the president of the United States and a profound regard for his will and judgment.

"The president's proposal differs from any proposal heretofore made, in that it leaves nothing in doubt, so far as a plan of adjustment and the details thereof is concerned. The scheme proposed by Doctor Garfield left no hope for the mine workers other than the acceptance of an increase in mining prices of 14 per cent. The president's proposal provides that this amount of advance is preliminary and that the tribunal which he will set up will have full authority to consider further questions of wages and working conditions as well as the profits of operators and proper prices for coal, readjusting both wages and profits if it shall so decide. It further provides that the commission will have authority to settle internal questions peculiar to each district, all of which are of very great importance to the mine workers.

"The commission will make its report within 60 days unless some unsurmountable difficulties arise which prevent it from doing it and the commission will have the authority to fix the date when any award they make will become effective.

Expects Full Justice.

"The president's plan further provides that upon a general resumption of operations, the status quo will be maintained, that is, all mine workers will return to work with an increase in wages amounting to 14 per cent upon the same basis which obtained on October 31, 1919. Neither operators nor miners will be allowed to change the basis and no discrimination by the coal operators will be permitted.

"It was these specific features of the president's proposition which made it acceptable to the international officers of the United Mine Workers when submitted to them through the attorney general and Secretary Tumulty in Washington on Saturday, December 6.

"We are accepting the president at his word, feeling confident that he will appoint a tribunal composed of fair minded men who will give full and complete recognition to the justice of the mine workers' claims."

Palmer Issues Statement.

The following statement was issued by Attorney General Palmer on the settlement of the coal strike:

"The coal strike is settled as the government wanted it settled. When Messrs. Lewis and Green came to see me Saturday I restated what the government's position had been from the beginning and insisted on their acquiescence.

"They finally agreed to it. They have now persuaded the officers of their organization that the situation calls for compliance with the court's orders and the government's wishes and I am certain that all the miners in the country will cheerfully acquiesce in the decision of their leaders.

"I desire to publicly commend the wise and patriotic action of Mr. Lewis, Mr. Green and their associates. I am, of course, gratified at the outcome, which is one the entire country will approve.

"Mining will be fully resumed at once, the danger and distress and suffering during the winter is passed, the authority of the government has been recognized and upheld, the supremacy of the law has been vindicated, and a precedent, of incalculable value has been set for the peaceful, orderly and lawful adjustment of industrial disputes."

The President's Proposal.

President Wilson's proposal to the miners as a basis for settling the strike is as follows:

"I have watched with deep concern the developments in the bituminous coal strike and am convinced there is much confusion in the minds of the people generally and possibly of both parties to this unfortunate controversy as to the attitude and purposes of the government in its handling of the situation.

"The mine owners offered a wage increase of 20 per cent, conditioned, however, upon the price of coal being raised to an amount sufficient to cover this proposed increase of wages which would have added at least $160,000,000 to the annual coal bill of the people.

"The fuel administrator, in the light of present information, has taken the position, and I think with entire justification, that the public is now paying as high prices for coal as it ought to be required to pay and that any wage increase made at this time ought to come from the profits of the coal operators.

Would Equalize Wages.

"In reaching his conclusion, the fuel administrator expressed the personal opinion that the 14 per cent increase in all mine wages is reasonable, because it would equalize the miners' wages on the average with the cost of living, but he made it perfectly clear that the operators and miners are at liberty to agree upon a larger increase, provided the operators will pay it out of their profits so that the price of coal would remain the same.

"The secretary of labor, in an effort at conciliation between the parties, expressed his personal opinion in favor of a larger increase. His efforts at conciliation failed, however, because the coal operators were unwilling to pay the scale he proposed unless the government would advance the price of coal to the public and this the government was unwilling to do.

"The fuel administrator had also suggested that a tribunal be created in which the miners and operators would be equally represented to consider further questions of wages and working conditions, as well as profits of operators and proper prices for coal. I shall, of course, be glad to aid in the formation of such a tribunal.

Assured Steady Employment.

"I understand the operators have generally agreed to absorb an increase of 14 per cent in wages, so that the public would not pay to exceed the present price fixed by the fuel administrator, and thus a way is opened to secure the coal of which the people stand in need, if the miners will resume work on these terms pending a thorough investigation by an impartial commission which may readjust both wages and prices.

"By the acceptance of such a plan the miners are assured immediate steady employment at a substantial increase in wages and are further assured prompt investigation and action upon questions which are not now settled to their satisfaction.

"I must believe that with a clear understanding of these points they will promptly return to work. If, nevertheless, they persist in remaining on strike, they will put themselves in an attitude of striking in order to force the government to increase the price of coal to the public, so as to give a still further increase in wages at this time rather than allow the question of a further increase in wages to be dealt with in an orderly manner by a fairly constituted tribunal representing all parties interested.

Must Resume Work.

"No group of our people can justify such a position, and the miners owe it to themselves, their families, their fellow workmen in other industries and to their country to return to work.

"Immediately upon a general resumption of mining I shall be glad to aid in the prompt formation of such a tribunal as I have indicated to make further inquiries into this whole matter and to review not only the reasonableness of the wages at which the miners start to work, but also the reasonableness of the government prices for coal.

"Such a tribunal should within sixty days make its report, which could be used as a basis for negotiation for a wage agreement. I must make it clear, however, that the government cannot give its aid to any such further investigation until there is a general resumption of work.

"I ask every individual miner to give his personal thought to what I say. I hope he understands fully that he will be hurting his own interest and the interest of his family and will be throwing countless other laboring men out of employment if he shall continue the present strike, and further, that he will create an unnecessary and unfortunate prejudice against organized labor which will be injurious to the best interests of workingmen everywhere.

"WOODROW WILSON."

Three-Fifths of U. S. Unmapped.

Washington, Dec. 11.—Needs of an adequate map of the whole territory of the United States for military purposes as well as a means of promoting national development was emphasized in the annual report of the director of the geological survey. Nearly 60 per cent of the area of the country is totally unmapped, the report said.

Indiana News Tersely Told

Indianapolis.—Mining in the bituminous coal fields of Indiana was started after a five weeks' strike, reports from all the belts indicating that the resumption was pretty general. Disgruntled miners were few, most of them being found near the Terre Haute fields.

Goshen.—It being generally agreed that the provisions of the will of Mrs. Laura A. Kindig of Goshen, for establishing and maintaining a seminary with the bulk of her $90,000 estate, can not be carried out, the circuit court will be asked to approve of a plan to use $65,000 in establishing and maintaining a nurses' home and training school in connection with the Goshen hospital.

Goshen.—The members' council of the chamber of commerce decided to conduct a referendum vote for the purpose of obtaining expressions from citizens of Goshen on whether to establish a civic club, as outlined recently, or a Y. M. C. A. as advocated by the Goshen Ministerial association. All residents more than eighteen years of age will be permitted to participate in the election.

Shelbyville.—Farmers of Shelby county, attending an annual meeting of the Shelby County Farmers' association here, heard a report by a blue sky committee, appointed to investigate all stocks offered for sale in this county, showing that of 34 stock propositions investigated, 30 were not approved. Early ratification of the peace treaty, including the League of Nations covenant, was recommended by the meeting.

Crawfordsville.—Wabash college is expected to profit by the estate of Harry J. Milligan of Indianapolis, to the extent of not less than $175,000 and possibly $225,000. The value of the endowment left in a will will depend somewhat on what is realized from certain securities and real estate holdings. Mr. Milligan was a graduate of Wabash with the class of 1873 and was for many years president of the board of trustees of the college.

Jeffersonville.—Twenty-seven inmates of the Indiana reformatory and two inmates transferred from here to the state prison at Michigan City were paroled by the board of trustees at the regular session the past week, but the men will probably have one more Christmas dinner within the walls of the institution, as they may not be released until after the next board meeting. About thirty men, who were paroled at the last meeting, are ready to leave the reformatory.

Columbia City.—The suit of Ernest Cotterly and a number of taxpayers of Whitley county to enjoin the state board, Auditor Burwell and Treasurer Deeter from listing taxes in the county according to the mandate of the state board based upon an increase of 30 per cent in valuations in all townships of the county except Churubusco, where the increase is 10 per cent, was heard by Judge Wrigley, and the demurrer of the defendants sustained.

Indianapolis.—W. N. Loan, geologist for the state conservation commission, in a report to the commission on coal mining in Indiana, says the waste in the mining of coal in Indiana is greater than the average waste in the mining of bituminous coal. "In some states," reported Mr. Logan, "the waste has been reduced to 50 per cent of the coal mined, but the waste in Indiana has not been reduced to that minimum. The waste here has been much greater than it is at present, but there is need for greater improvement."

South Bend.—Nineteen families, numbering nearly fifty people, are without homes; thirty-five employees of the Woolworth five and ten cent store are without work and property owners sustained a loss of $155,000 as the result of a fire of unknown origin, which completely gutted the Livingston building in the business district. The entire stock of the Woolworth store, largely augmented by the arrival of holiday goods, and valued at $50,000, was consumed. The total loss is estimated at $155,000.

Indianapolis.—The state board of pharmacy has announced the list of 18 successful candidates who took the state examination for registered pharmacist and assistant registered pharmacist October 13 to 15. Fifty applicants took the examination. The names of persons granted registered pharmacist's certificates follows: Mervin L. Kaufman, Francis W. Schoppenhorst and Henry G. Timmerman, Indianapolis; Charles G. Beaven, Evansville; Charles E. Canan, Muncie; Frank M. Cravens, Vincennes; Thomas H. Curran, South Bend; Mark H. Gants, Terre Haute; John I. Groom, Rensselaer; Clyde Newgent, Marion; Harry S. Rosefield, Chicago, Ill; Russell M. Steward, Wakarusa; May E. Thrapp, Avilla, and Lloyd E. Waltz, Pennville.

Terre Haute.—The Indiana State Chamber of Commerce, an association active in the various interests of the state, will hold its annual meeting at Terre Haute, January 19 to 21, 1920.

Indianapolis.—Dr. Rolland H. Bunch, former mayor of Muncie; Horace Murphy, former Delaware county prosecuting attorney; Chauncey Stillson, hotelkeeper, and Elmer Gentry, Stillson's partner, arrived here from Muncie, surrendered to the United States marshal and were taken to Atlanta, Ga., to begin serving sentence in the federal penitentiary for complicity in the so-called Muncie fake fight swindles.

Washington.—Oak Davis, a Harrison township farmer, has the record for corn production in this county. Five acres of corn which he cultivated in the river bottom yielded 556 bushels, or 111 bushels to the acre.

Evansville.—With the coming of cold weather many farmers in the pocket counties are preparing to slaughter hogs for their winter meat. Farmers are selling few hogs at the present time, owing to lower prices.

Washington, D. C.—Reorganization of the National Guard of Indiana on the principle of efficiency, involving the weeding out of the "old timers," is the program that has been adopted by Henry B. Smith, adjutant general of Indiana, according to the testimony he gave before the military committee of the senate.

Gary.—P. M. Kent, supervisor of census for the Tenth Indiana district, has announced that 36 enumerators will begin here January 2. Estimates indicate that Gary has quadrupled in population since 1910. Gary had a population of 16,000 nine years ago and the number now is estimated at 70,000 to 85,000.

Warsaw.—January 13 has been set by the Kosciusko board of county commissioners as the date for a special election to decide whether a memorial hospital shall be erected in memory of the soldiers and sailors of this county. The proposed hospital would cost $100,000, to be paid by general taxation.

Indianapolis.—In reversing the decision of the St. Joseph circuit court in the conviction of Thomas Ward, charged with unlawfully keeping intoxicating liquors, the supreme court held the 1917 prohibition law does not make it any offense to keep any quantity of intoxicating liquors within the state of Indiana. Ward had been found guilty by jury of keeping liquor within the state for sale.

Indianapolis.—Instructions received by J. L. Doerr, chairman of the Pennsylvania railroad coal committee, direct that the furnishing of power to manufacturing plants outside the first five priorities be curtailed at once to place such plants in the same situation as if they were using coal. Doctor Doerr said that the order would probably mean the complete shutdown of nonessential industries.

Indianapolis.—Governor Goodrich has received a copy of resolutions passed by the Joseph R. Gordon post, No. 281, of the G. A. R., declaring that its members "as in the days of '61 to '65, are ready to take up arms at any time should our country need us to defend the law and Constitution of the United States of America against all traitors such as anarchists, bolsheviks, I. W. W.'s, the 'reds' or any combination of interests or people who are not 100 per cent American." The resolutions "favor death for all traitors."

Chicago, Ill.—"For president, Major Edwin Denby of the marines, late of the banks of the Ohio; for vice-president, Henry A. Barnhart of Rochester, Fulton county, Indiana." That was the ticket chosen unanimously by the Indiana Society of Chicago in convention here, the occasion really being the fifteenth annual dinner of the society. The dinner-convention was one of the happiest in the history of the society and many distinguished Hoosiers and ex-Hoosiers were present. The dinner-convention was organized in true Hoosier convention style, with everything cut and dried, yet bearing the marks of full political unanimity.

Indianapolis.—County officials are enjoined from attempting to collect taxes in eight townships of Marion county under the property valuations as assessed by the state board of tax commissioners, in a ruling by Judge Linn D. Hay of superior court. The ruling was given in the injunction suits of farmers in the eight townships of the county outside of Center township. Leo K. Fesler, county auditor, is enjoined from certifying to the treasurer the tax duplicates bearing the assessments as fixed by the state tax board, placing blanket increases on the assessments that previously had been fixed by township and county taxing officials.

Jeffersonville.—A loose leaf tobacco warehouse is being opened at Charlestown by W. L. Jones, a Kentucky tobacco man. It is estimated that the Clark county tobacco crop this year will be worth $1,000,000. The yield is estimated at 5,000,000 pounds of an average value of 20 cents a pound. Mr. Jones will handle 500,000 pounds which will be hauled to Charlestown, graded and packed in hogsheads. It is said that new limestone land will yield the best leaf and he expects some farmers will sell their entire crop at 50 to 60 cents, equaling the price of the best Kentucky product. Hundreds of acres of this kind of land have been sold during the last twelve months to Kentucky tobacco men from Spencer county and adjoining territory and scores of Clark county farmers who never tried tobacco before are raising some. A limited amount has been raised in the county for a number of years. The city may erect a tobacco loose leaf warehouse before next season.

Anderson.—Approximately 16,000 men and women workers in Madison county were idle as a result of the withdrawal of electric power from all nonessential industries because of a shortage of fuel. More than 10,000 persons directly affected by the closing are in Anderson.

Washington, D. C.—The war department announced that it has transferred to the department of agriculture for good roads activities 4,831 nonstandard vehicles, including 199 from Columbus, Ohio; 630 from Jeffersonville, Ind., and 1,900 from Ft. Benjamin Harrison, Ind.

WOMAN WORKS 15 HOURS A DAY

Marvelous Story of Woman's Change from Weakness to Strength by Taking Druggist's Advice

Peru, Ind.—"I suffered from a displacement with backache and dragging down pains so badly that at times I could not be on my feet and it did not seem as though I could stand it. I tried different medicines without any benefit and several doctors told me nothing but an operation would do me any good. My druggist told me of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I took it with the result that I am now well and strong. I get up in the morning at four o'clock, do my housework, then go to a factory and work all day, come home and get supper and feel good. I don't know how many of my friends I have told what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me."—MRS. ANNA METERIANO 36 West 10th St., Peru, Ind.

Women who suffer from any such ailments should not fail to try this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Restless Life.

Little Helen's older sister was conferring on her some bits of useful knowledge as she helped the child undress.

"You know, dear," she said, "all the stars are worlds like ours."

"Well, if that's so, I shouldn't like to live on one of them," declared Helen stoutly. "It would be so horrid when it twinkled!"

BOSCHEE'S SYRUP.

A cold is probably the most common of all disorders and when neglected is apt to be most dangerous. Statistics show that more than three times as many people died from influenza last year, as were killed in the greatest war the world has ever known. For the last fifty-three years Boschee's Syrup has been used for coughs, bronchitis, colds, throat irritation and especially lung troubles. It gives the patient a good night's rest, free from coughing, with easy expectoration in the morning. Made in America and used in the homes of thousands of families all over the civilized world. Sold everywhere.—Adv.

Destination Lacking.

John Collins, son of Judge James A. Collins of the criminal court, left recently for Arizona. The judge, being acquainted with a man employed in the railroad business in Chicago, wired to the acquaintance, asking him to make reservations for his son on the Santa Fe train out of Chicago Saturday night. A wire came back to the judge, saying:

"Sure, I will, but where does he intend to go?"—Indianapolis News.

HOW RHEUMATISM BEGINS

The excruciating agonies of rheumatism are usually the result of failure of the kidneys to expel poisons from the system. If the irritation of these uric acid crystals is allowed to continue, incurable bladder or kidney disease may result. Attend to it at once. Don't resort to temporary relief. The sick kidneys must be restored to health by the use of some sterling remedy which will prevent a return of the disease.

Get some GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules immediately. They have brought back the joys of life to countless thousands of sufferers from rheumatism, lame back, lumbago, sciatica, gall stones, gravel and other affections of the kidneys, liver, stomach, bladder and allied organs.

They will attack the poisons at once, clear out the kidneys and urinary tract and the soothing healing oils and herbs will restore the inflamed tissues and organs to normal health.

All others are imitations. Ask for GOLD MEDAL and be sure the name GOLD MEDAL is on the box. Three sizes, at all good druggists.—Adv.

Her Worst Sin.

In the sewing circle of a small town there was an old Scottish woman whom the other members loved to hear talk.

"What was the worst thing you ever did, Mrs. McCillop?" one of them asked one day to start her going.

"The wor-r-st thing?" said Mrs. McCillop. "You couldna guess! Once when I was a wee thing, I stoppit the clawk wi' a sweetie!"

Indigestion produces disagreeable and sometimes alarming symptoms. Wright's Indian Vegetable Pills stimulate the digestive processes to function naturally. Adv.

Lion Had Long Life.

Authorities differ as to the age limit of a lion. Some biologists fix the normal span of a lion's life at about twenty-two years. A lion which died in the Tower of London in 1760 had lived in captivity over 70 years.

A wise man knows a good thing when he sees it, but a fool doesn't know a good thing when he has it.

Bureau of Internal Revenue officials say that no more applications for appointment in the prohibition enforcement service can be considered from Indiana. The number of applications in Indiana now on file is so great that the full quota of appointments can be made with well qualified men immediately, officials declare. It will be impossible, they say, for local officers to investigate and report upon additional applicants.

Results of Corn Test At Co. Farm.

The final result of the corn breeding trial put on by the County Agent at the County farm this year, has been obtained and we find that out of the nineteen men in the county entering, that the Tri-township comes in for a lot of the honor. Each farmer entering selected five ears of his choicest corn and one half of each ear was planted in the demonstration. Each ear was kept seperate and the record is astonishing as to the final result in production. Below we give the Tri-township entries and the result of each ear:—

Concord township, Clarence Hart.

Ear No. 11—69.2	bushel per acre.
Ear No. 12—60.2	" " "
Ear No. 13—71.4	" " "
Ear No. 14—60.7	" " "
Ear No. 15—62.8	" " "

Spencer Tp., Chas. Henderson.

Ear No. 71—37.1	bushel per acre
Ear No 72—47.1	" " "
Ear No. 73—51.4	" " "
Ear No. 74—48.5	" " "
Ear No. 75—42.8	" " "

Newville township, John Varner.

Ear No. 51—45.7	bushel per acre
Ear No. 52—54.2	" " "
Ear No. 53—45.7	" " "
Ear No. 54—57.1	" " "
Ear No. 55—46.4	" " "

Neff Culler.

Ear No. 56—56.4	bushel per acre
Ear No. 57—50	" " "
Ear No. 58—47.8	" " "
Ear No. 59—46.4	" " "
Ear No. 60—61.4	" " "

The highest yield in the test was 75.7 bushel per acre.

The corn will be on display at the Short Course in February.

Clarence Hart leads the county taking the five ears in a whole with the exception of the one ear that tested 75.7 bushels.

The test on soy beans for hogging down proved that the Early Brown, Ito-San, Elton, Manchu and Mammoth Yellow were the best varieties. The Holly Brook being the best for silo use.

"CLAIRE'S JEWELS ARE MRS. DELARIO'S DIAMONDS."

Synopsis.—While in the little Swiss town of Vevay, where the "staid, proper spinster" who tells the story is spending a vacation, she is asked to allow a young girl, Claire de Ravenol, to be her companion back to the United States. Although forming an attachment to the girl, the heroine takes a dislike to Monsier de Ravenol, Claire's father, and declines. On the boat she finds Claire in the care of a casual acquaintance, Mrs. Delario, whom she had met while each was purchasing a pair of slippers, exactly alike, which figure largely in subsequent events. When they reach New York, where Claire was to have been met by her mother, the latter does not appear, and Claire perforce goes to Mrs. Delario's home. In the confusion at the custom house, the spinster carries off one of Mrs. Delario's slippers. Through that happening she learns later that someone unknown to her has been in her flat. Calling on Mrs. Delario, that lady shows her some remarkable gems, believing them to be rubies, but which are really blood-red diamonds, and easily worth a million dollars. Mrs. Delario admits the gems were smuggled, but offers no explanation. While they are talking, a pounding on the door throws them into consternation. The caller asserts he is an officer of the law, with a warrant for the arrest of Mrs. Delario's son on a charge of stealing the diamonds. She outwits him and persuades the spinster to take the gems to her home for safe keeping. Next morning, realizing the responsibility in her possession of the diamonds, the spinster takes them back to Mrs. Delario, but while there she learns that that lady's son has been kidnaped, supposedly on account of the gems, and agrees to keep them in a bunch of hyacinths and has the lock of her door changed and a chain-bolt added. Over the telephone De Ravenol informs her Mrs. Delario has met with an accident and urges her to call at once. Hastening to her friend, and leaving the gems, the heroine is met by De Ravenol, who for the first time gives a strong hint of his real character.

"Is madame intending to converse wis me, holding a weapon in her hand?"

"Is monsieur intending to converse with me behind locked doors?"

"For se present—yes."

"Very well, then, get it over. What is it?" I felt very sure by this time it had nothing, directly, to do with Mrs. Delario.

"It is zis—my daughter, Claire, was robbed of some very valuable jewels on se steamer coming over. Zere are but two persons who could possibly have committed ze seft—Mrs. Delario and—yourself."

I was dazed—so dazed that I stammered.

"You say Claire was robbed coming over on the steamer—and you think I did it?"

"Precisely."

My wits came back with that flat accusation.

"Then why didn't she say something about it at the time?" I demanded.

"Probably because she was not aware of it at ze time—one seldom is, if I may be permitted to point it out to madame."

I was so completely innocent of even knowing that the girl had jewels with her—except such little trinkets as a child values and that nobody but a street thief would have bothered his head over—that I saw monsieur's accusation as blackmail. That word suddenly popped into my head and gave me the basis of a return attack.

"You mean to tell me that Claire had valuable jewels on the steamer yet never mentioned the fact to either Mrs. Delario or myself?"

"Naturally, she says nossing—why should she? She is under no obligation to speak of such a matter to you."

"In other words, she was smuggling valuable jewels into the country—trying to get them through the customs house without our knowing it, so we could tell her to declare them?"

"Smuggling? She is taking zem to her musser—zey have once been purchased in America."

"I don't believe she had any jewels," I asserted bravely. "Merely to say she had—and she hasn't got them now—doesn't prove anything. You must have sense enough to see that for yourself."

His face had darkened again. "You doubt my word? I have se proof, madame, se absolute proof—zat she had ze jewels wis her when she went on board ze steamer; and while on board; and up to a certain date. I can furnish proof zat would be accept in any court—if madame renders it necessary."

His tone carried conviction in spite of myself; also, I knew he was ready to have me put under arrest and furnish his proof in court. For a minute I went limp and sick. But I pulled myself together for another shot at him—"Then you admit she was smuggling jewels into the country?"

He shrugged—I thought to conceal his uneasiness at the way I was taking it. "Ze jewels belong to my wife—a wedding gift from her fazer—if you call it smuggling—"

"But they were not declared—I know that, anyway. Well, then—since they were not declared, they were to all intents and purposes smuggled. We shall now act as though they had been smuggled—we shall at once enlist the services of the government in your behalf. After the jewels are discovered, you can present evidence that they were not subject to duty. Or, of course, you can pay the duty. I suppose they are worth that to you to get them back?"

"What do you mean, madame?" he exclaimed in a tone that to me sounded alarm. "You sink I ask your government to seek for some lost jewels of my daughter? Diable—pardon—and have zem so soon as I find zem?"

"Not you, but I—I will ask the customs house officials to take up the case."

"You? . . . You? . . . Madame, of what are you sinking?"

"I—yes, certainly," I replied firmly, following up my advantage; for he had given it away to me that he didn't wish the customs house to know about this little smuggling of Claire's. "Since you have seen fit to accuse me of a robbery I know nothing about, I shall—I must—do all I can to help Claire get her jewels back in order to prove my own innocence. I will go to the customs house and report the whole matter tomorrow morning."

"You will do nossing of ze sort!" He fairly hissed the words at me. "You will tell nobody zat ze jewels have been stolen—nobody. And you will give me your promise before you leave zis room."

He turned scarlet, and then deathly white, but he got control of himself immediately.

So that was the way the wind blew! My shot had carried home—I felt I had him, a good deal worse than he had me. I gave him another dose of the same ammunition—"I certainly shall—there's nothing else to do. Now, then, what were the jewels Claire was smuggling in?"

He kept back a retort by biting his lip and glared at me.

"What were the jewels?" I repeated. "You must at least tell me that—since you accuse me of taking them. What were they? I know absolutely nothing about them. You may believe me or not as you choose, but it's your own loss if you don't."

My words seemed to shake his conviction for a moment—but only for a moment; what he said next left me no doubt as to the gravity of my situation in the matter.

"And now, madame, we lay all subterfuges and evasions to ze side. Zere are but two persons who could have ze jewels of my daughter—yourself and Madame Delario. I have already questioned her, fully—to be quite frank—I have search ze house—wis her permission I have also search her person by means of a woman detective—and she has convinced me zat she has not ze jewels of my daughter."

"Neither have I," I snapped.

He went on as if I hadn't spoken. "My evidence is positive, and wis Madame Delario's denial of all knowledge—her wish zat I send for you and give you ze opportunity to explain—"

"Where is Mrs. Delario—let me see her immediately," I broke in. "Do you mean to say she accuses me of robbing your child?"

"I do not say she precisely accuses—but she has seen you—and Claire has seen you—wis ze package containing ze jewels in your hand."

I burst out hotly, "That's a lie—every word of it! I never touched her jewelry—or the package containing her jewelry. Never."

He flushed a deep red at the insult, but he was making every effort to control himself—seeing how enraged I was, he probably thought I'd use my hatpin on him next—and I whipped him on, feeling that I had the upper hand.

"Yes, monsieur—I shall make you take this case to court." I went on rapidly. "After that I shall sue you for false arrest—and imprisonment, if I'm imprisoned. But meanwhile, I shall immediately set the customs house officials on the hunt for your daughter's jewels and find out whether they were actually brought into America or not. If the jewels are in the least valuable—as you seem to be trying to make out—there'll be quite a neat little duty to pay, provided they're not confiscated outright—which is more than likely. Monsieur, you have overlooked the fact that I asked Claire—and I heard Mrs. Delario ask her—if she had anything to declare and she told me she had not. So I shall be a witness in the government's case against you."

His expression had changed from anger to cynical contempt, and he sneered: "Very clever, madame—very creditable to madame's nerve—ha, ha! Madame is afraid of nossing but to lose zose so valuable jewels of my daughter—" and with that he stepped so close I thought he was going to lay hold of me.

I stepped back, just out of immediate reach and took a firm grip on my hatpin.

"And now, madame—we—lay—all—subterfuges—and evasions—to—ze—side: Where are ze jewels of my daughter?"

"And now, monsieur," I mocked, "we—lay—all—subterfuges—and—evasion—to—the—side: I don't know."

With a quick dive of his hand into his pocket he whipped out a small revolver.

"Perhaps zis will refresh madame's memory," he leered.

Well, it refreshed madame's something—for want of a better term I'll call it creative genius. I waved the revolver aside with a gesture of contempt and began: "Since monsieur has been at all this trouble to obtain an interview with me, may I ask a few questions? It may be of importance to both of us."

"Proceed."

"Monsieur is, I believe, a stranger in America. Has monsieur ever acquainted himself with New York state laws?"

"To some extent—yes."

"Well—ah—I was merely wondering, you know, if monsieur were aware of the fact that in New York state, kidnaping is a capital offense—that is, punishable with death?"

"But what has kidnaping to do wis our present case?" he asked frowning.

"Oh, only that monsieur is, at the present moment, in the act of kidnaping me."

That hit him, but he held his ground.

"I do not see it, madame. Kidnaping consists in taking ze person by violence and against ze wish."

"Not in New York state. Monsieur forgets that he is not in France or Germany, but in New York. The New York courts hold that forcible detention against the will is kidnaping. You are at this moment, in the eyes of the law, a kidnaper."

"Impossible!" he exclaimed.

"Certainly," I returned. "You have only to look up the cases and convince yourself. In the Halloran case, a year ago, Halloran only locked a girl up and refused to let her out when she asked. He did her no harm and made no threats"—here I looked at the revolver in a significant way—"but he got twenty years. But in the Cominsky case—the man who was electrocuted last week, as you probably read in the papers—Cominsky locked a woman up and threatened her with a revolver. He got the death penalty."

"Perhaps Zis Will Refresh Madame's Memory."

As these fictitious cases dropped off my tongue, monsieur, with a catlike slyness, slipped the revolver back into his pocket, though he made no move to open the door as I had hoped. Still, I saw I had gained ground with him—though the ground I longed for lay outside the house.

"Very good," said he, after some seconds of consideration; "we are not kidnaping madame. Madame has ze jewels—of zat I am positive—either upon her person, or in some place concealed, and until madame decides to return zem, she will make herself comfortable here wisout food or water, but if she wishes to give zem to me now, she may depart at once."

I laughed in his face.

I think this disconcerted him more than anything I'd done.

"How long do you think you can keep me here?" I demanded.

"Zat depends on madame," he returned with a shrug and a significant glance at the shuttered windows.

"You speak as though you supposed nobody knew where I was."

"It is useless for you to call to Madame Delario—she will not come."

"I wasn't thinking of doing it. But my brother will come! He knows that I am here and he is coming for me. He was in my house when your message came. He had come over from Philadelphia with his lawyer and some papers for me to sign. When you told me Mrs. Delario was so ill, I waited for nothing—rushed down here as fast as I could. My brother and his lawyer were to follow me here in an hour and I am to go with them to the notary's to sign the papers. The hour is almost up!"

Monsieur bit his lips. Here was a contingency he hadn't reckoned with—that I had arranged to have some one call for me. Then a bright idea struck him. "Zat matter is simply arranged," said he with a wicked smile. "I tell your dear broser zat you have already gone home to him, and he will not wait."

I tried to laugh again, though I fear I made but a poor attempt at it, for I was beginning to be frightened. But I said: "Don't flatter yourself you could deceive my brother with a tale like that—he knows me too well. I told him I would wait and he knows I would keep my word. He would know the instant you said I had gone—he would know the minute he looked into your face—that something was wrong—here. In five minutes he'd be back with the police and break in the door."

This took the wind out of his sails for a minute. Then he rose to the situation in a masterful way; and I must say for him that he was no mean adversary. Drawing the key from his pocket he unlocked the door, saying, "And now madame will telephone her brozer zat Madame Delario is dying and he is not to come today about se important papers."

I saw my one chance lay in pretending I'd do it and then breaking loose; so I stepped out—he at my heels ready to grab me—and making a feint of going upstairs to the telephone, he followed suit by putting one foot on the lowest step. At that, I gave a loud, wild-western "whoopee!" right in his face, and punched him in the chest as hard as ever I could. He lost his balance, went rolling backward and sat down on the floor. Before he recovered from the shock of my unladylike behavior, I had bolted through the front door and reached the street.

CHAPTER VII.

I See Through the Plot.

There are moments when I fairly thrill at the thought that I am an American citizen. Such a moment came after I had shot through the vestibule door and found myself in the complacent street. I was safe—safe—safe. I was where I could appeal to the first passing man to protect me in the name of American womanhood.

In the jubilation of my freedom and safety I stopped and looked back at the house. The holland shade was drawn downstairs, but as I looked, a finger—I knew it must be monsieur's—pulled an edge of the shade and an eye peeped at me.

I was in the midst of a grin of derision at him when my eye was caught by something at an upper window. It was a hand—a waving hand—a hand that said, "Go away—go away—go away!" as fast as it could, and said it to me.

An instant later I saw a face and recognized Mrs. Delario. Then the face was gone and the hand said, "Go away!" again and disappeared also.

Monsieur, seeing me standing, apparently interested in something happening upstairs, pulled the shade out a little farther. So what I did was deliberately to cross the street and signal him to raise the window.

"Raise the window—I want to speak to you!" I shouted.

The window was raised about six inches and monsieur put his evil, ratty face down to listen.

"Now do your darnedest!" said I. And then I snapped my fingers at him and walked away.

Though it was early I began to feel hungry and I kept on till I reached a French restaurant where I generally lunch when I'm downtown. It was too soon for the music, but my own thoughts were music enough just then and anyway I felt safe.

But by the time the salad came the reaction set in. The world turned drab, mottled with black responsibility and streaked with red indignation. I rot a young girl! Good heavens!—her father must be insane to bring such an accusation against me! I seen with her jewel case in my hands! Preposterous! And poor, poor Mrs. Delario—she, too, had been accused, on top of all her trouble about her diamonds.

I had raised my coffee to my lips but hadn't tasted it, when the words went through my head like a shot: "CLAIRE'S JEWELS ARE MRS. DELARIO'S DIAMONDS!"

Mrs. Delario had sworn to me that they were hers. Had she robbed Claire coming over in the steamer? Impossible! She was too good a woman. But even so, how had monsieur connected me with them? Had she told him? That seemed impossible also; and yet I felt I'd really never shaken his conviction that I had them—and that he meant to get them by fair means or foul.

Marvelous Hair Rope.

One of the most remarkable hair ropes is mentioned by Sir Frederick Treves in his book entitled "The Other Side of the Lantern." He describes it as lying curled up like a gigantic caterpillar within the great Buddhist temple at Kioto. It measures 900 feet in length and three inches in diameter, and is made up of contributions from the heads of many hundreds of thousands of Japanese women. Long ago it was used to drag the timbers to the building and to hoist them into place, and now it is carefully preserved, a sacred relic, within the vast edifice it helped to raise.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Teacher of English Bible in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1919, Western Newspaper Union)

LESSON FOR DECEMBER 21

THE KINGDOM OF THE PRINCE OF PEACE.

LESSON TEXT—Isaiah 11.

GOLDEN TEXT—Thou shalt call his name Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins.—Mat. 1:21.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Wise Men Visit the Baby Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Bringing Gifts to Jesus.

INTERMEDIATE TOPIC—The Reign of the Prince of Peace.

SENIOR AND ADULT TOPIC—Permanent World Peace When the Prince of Peace Shall Reign.

On this Christmas occasion let us take a forward look into the golden age which is ahead of us. It is the time of which the wise of all ages have spoken and the poets have sung. It will not be brought about through improved social conditions or even a League of Nations, but by the personal coming and reign of the Prince of Peace, the Lord Jesus Christ. It is the kingdom which Daniel said the God of heaven should set up (Dan 2:44, 45; 7:13, 14).

I. The Lineage of the King (v. 1).

He is of royal stock, the seed of David. His birth took place nearly 2,000 years ago. This Christmas season is a memorial of it.

II. The Gifts and Power of the King (v. 2).

These result from the resting upon him of the Spirit of the Lord. Because of this endowment he is equipped to administer the affairs of the kingdom. A sixfold characterization of the Spirit's gifts shows the completeness of the equipment.

1. The Spirit of the Lord. This title shows that he is to be qualified for his work by divine inspiration.

2. The spirit of wisdom. He is omniscient. Only a king of such wisdom can rule over the whole earth.

3. The spirit of understanding. This understanding, coupled with wisdom gives discernment and discrimination.

4. The spirit of counsel. This means doubtless, the gift of making decisions.

5. The spirit of might. This means the ability to execute his decisions. Decisions would be of little value without the ability to execute them.

6. The spirit of knowledge. This refers to his reverent attitude toward God.

III. The Nature or Character of the King's Rule (vv. 3-5).

1. A quick understanding in the fear of the Lord. He will have ability quickly to discern Godly fear in the human heart.

2. An unerring judgment. He will not judge after appearances.

3. Ability to render decisions according to the merits of the case. His decisions will not be based on hearsay, nor on plausibility, but on first-hand knowledge.

4. Impartial judgment of the poor. The time is coming when the poor will get justice.

5. Reproof with equity for the meek. Jesus said that the meek shall inherit the earth.

6. He shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth. When he comes the earth will be utterly wicked. Apostasy will be manifest on every hand. His blessed reign will be ushered in by the judgment of the nations (Matt. 25:31-46).

IV. The Harmony and Peace of the Kingdom (vv. 6-9).

This harmony will prevail in the relationship of men and will be extended to the animal kingdom. War will be no more. The cow and the bear will feed together; the lion will eat straw, not flesh. The sucking child will sport with the most deadly serpent. Paradise will indeed be restored. This will be made possible through the personal reign of the Messiah in Jerusalem, (v. 9).

V. How the Kingdom Will Be Set Up (vv. 10-13).

1. The elevation of the King (v. 10). His elevation will be a sign to the nations; to this sign they will respond. The only way to bring unity among the nations is to exalt Jesus Christ.

2. The regathering of Israel (vv. 11, 12). Out from the nations of the earth Israel will be gathered. Israel and Judah will unite under the one king in the city of Jerusalem.

3. Envy will disappear from Ephraim and Judah (v. 13). When they see him and are joined to him the tribal antipathy will disappear.

4. There will be physical changes which will alter the surface of the earth (vv. 15, 16). When redemption will have been completed not only the spirits of men will be in accord, but there will be harmony in the animal world, and changes will be brought about in the earth itself which will make it fit for the conditions under which men will then live.

Blessings.

No man can get a blessing and keep it all to himself without having it like stagnant water in his soul; but if it overflows to others it shall become a perennial spring to himself and to the world.—Wilton Merle-Smith.

Opportunities.

Opportunities approach only those who use them.—Emerson.

A broad hat does not always cover a venerable head.

The Price of Pork Chops and Bacon

Here are reasons why the fine, fresh pork tenderloins and pork chops, or savory ham, or crinkly bacon, which you enjoy for breakfast, cost much more per pound than the market quotation on live hogs which you read in the newspaper:

An average hog weighs 220 pounds.

Of this, only 70 per cent (154 pounds) is meat and lard.

So, when we pay 15¢ a pound for live hogs, we are really paying more than 21¢ a pound for the meat which we will get from these animals, even after taking into account the value of the by-products.

But people show a preference for only one-third of the whole—the pork chops, fancy bacon, and choice cuts from juicy hams.

This means that when we are selling Premium bacon at 43½¢ per pound wholesale and Premium hams at 30¢, there are other parts for which we get as low as 6¢ or 8¢ per pound. The net result is an average profit to us of less than 1¢ a pound.

The choice cuts are higher because of a demand for them.

Another thing: Only 35 pounds of the entire hog—or about 1/6th—is usually marketed at once. The rest must be pickled, cured, or smoked. This takes months, and adds to the costs which must be met.

PLANNING FOR EARTH ROADS

Bearing That Location and Design of Dirt Roads Have on Future Improvement Emphasized.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

In view of the present widespread activity in every form of road building and since nearly all public roads are laid out originally as earth roads, the bureau of public roads emphasizes the bearing that the location and design of dirt roads have on future highway improvement. In locating and designing public roads the following considerations should be borne in mind:

Sharp curves should be avoided because they are a menace to traffic.

The width should be ample for vehicles to pass each other without leaving the traveled way.

If a road ever becomes of any considerable importance, its users probably will demand that all the steeper grades be reduced to the lowest maximum that would conform to the general topography of the region which the road traverses.

Let the road planners remember that aside from the advantages to traffic of a short route, each mile of additional road involves a considerable extra yearly expense for maintenance, and this alone may warrant the extra expense of shortening the route when the road is constructed, provided that the decrease in distance does not materially increase the steepness of the grades.

Land lines should be regarded only in so far as this may be done without decreasing the usefulness of the road or increasing its ultimate cost.

The pleasing features of the route should not be overlooked. Remember that a large part of the travel on most country roads is for pleasure.

Avoid the necessity for subsequent changes in location. Such changes nearly always work hardship on some of those who have built homes along the original highway.

IMPETUS FOR BETTER ROADS

So Many Factors Are Working for Improved Highways That More Money Is Being Spent.

The cause of good roads goes ahead and gathers impetus. Every good road is a challenge to every bad road. In the competition for traffic between roads the better road wins. Travel follows it and property values increase along its course, while the rule is that they decline along the course of the bad road. So many factors are working for good roads that counties and states are spending more money each year for road betterment. Encouraging sums are being set aside for this work in the "bad roads belt," that is, in the South. In Washington's neighbor state of Virginia the highway commissioner reports that road projects to cost $8,105,929 are either under contract or being surveyed, says Washington Star. Figures showing the amount of money being spent on roads in Maryland are not at hand, but in a recent summary of good roads work Maryland was set down in the class with Ohio, Pennsylvania and Georgia, which had lately approved road improvements calling for the expenditure of $1,000,000.

Unimproved Roads Costly.

Each one of the six million one hundred and odd thousand motorcars in this country, when it runs on unimproved roads, pays about twice as much for tires and gasoline as when it runs on hard surfaced roads.

Some Water Is Essential.

Water is as essential to the making of most roads as the road materials themselves, but an excess of it can destroy almost overnight the results of much careful work.

DON'T WHIP!

Stop Lashing Your Bowels with Harsh Cathartics but take "Cascarets."

Everyone must occasionally give the bowels some regular help or else suffer from constipation, bilious attacks, stomach disorders, and sick headache. But do not whip the bowels into activity with harsh cathartics.

What the liver and bowels need is a gentle and natural tonic, one that can constantly be used without harm. The gentlest liver and bowel tonic is "Cascarets." They put the liver to work and cleanse the colon and bowels of all waste, toxins and poisons without griping—they never sicken or inconvenience you like Calomel, Salts, Oil, or Purgatives.

Twenty-five million boxes of Cascarets are sold each year. They work while you sleep. Cascarets cost so little too.—Adv.

The Exception.

"Nephew Lester don't seem to think much of the way I talk, since he got home from college," a trifle ruefully admitted honest Farmer Bentover.

"No, nor the way I dress, either," returned his wife.

"But I'm kinda relieved," went on the ancient agriculturist, "to think that thus far he hasn't shown any symptoms of objecting to my money or your cooking."—Kansas City Star.

When the New Year Came

by May C. Ringwalt

IT had been the most romantic of love matches—and in all the land that last day of the old year, there was no more unhappy little woman than Maggie MacKenzie, the bride of six weeks.

And the gates of escape from the heart-break of it all were tight shut, for as liberal as are Uncle Sam's courts in such matters, the causes of her abject misery could hardly be presented in divorce proceedings -- a Christmas plum-pudding, a cold in the head, and a small sheet of paper covered with a perfectly illegible, snarly scrawl.

The plum pudding—arrived a week late on account of bad roads and a holiday congestion of parcel post mutter—stood on the living-room table just as she had taken it out of its box. A beautifully molded plum pudding of a city confectioner's consummate art, with an adorable, spikey sprig of real holly stuck in the top. A most Christmasy home-y plum pudding that set off all sorts of Christmasy home-y memories and brought such an aching lump to the little bride's throat that she almost cried out in pain.

Yet Christmas itself had not been a bit of a blue day. It was their first Christmas together to begin with, and the joy, the wonder, the triumph of Jamie actually filled her entire thoughts. Right after breakfast they had gone on a jolly tramp. Then there had been dinner to get, the fun of cooking the turkey and the laughter of bumping heads as they both flew to the oven door to "baste the 'baste.'" And after they had eaten, and done up the dishes, they sat before the cheerful blaze of the living-room's big open fire talking in low, intimate voices far into the night.

But now she was cooped up all day long in the house with this wretched cold in the head, the most forlorn and lonesome of beings, with Jamie away for hours at a time, working on the ranch or, when it rained or snowed too heavily to be outside, tinkering everlastingly in the barn.

And as the proverbial last straw in today's mail had come the little sheet of paper with the illegible snarly scrawl—had come all the way from Scotland.

For that was what had made the love match so romantic. Jamie MacKenzie, whom Maggie had not seen since she was a girl of 14, had come back from the States on a three months' visit to his mother, found the child he had played with flowered into a woman, promptly fallen in love and married her the day before his return to Uncle Sam's land.

And she had gone willingly with him, had willingly left them all behind. Dad and mother; Dave and Wallace and Jean, and—yes, even Bobbie. Bobbie, her own bairn, the bonnie 4-year-old little brother whom she always buttoned up in the morning and unbuttoned at night—and counted off "this little pig went to market and this little pig stayed at home" on ten wee upturned toes.

To have given up Bobbie for a mere husband! A husband who no longer loved her, who was so heartless he could stay out there in the barn mending an old plow when his wife needed him so desperately!

The cheery sound of a whistle approached—a man's brisk steps on the porch.

It was Jamie. He was coming into the house. Why couldn't he let her alone, to cry in peace?

"Well, little girl," said a pleasant voice behind her, as she stealthily dabbed away her tears, "any special news from the land of heather?"

"It wasn't a regular letter," she replied coolly. "Just one of Bobbie's love scrawls. Dad had only addressed the envelope."

"Say, I call that a mean trick," said Jamie, "to get up your expectations for nothing."

A little red spot flared on each of Maggie's cheeks and her eyes blazed.

How dared he insinuate that one of Bobbie's precious letters was nothing.

But the anger her eyes shot fell short of their mark—Jamie had spied the plum pudding.

"Hello," he laughed, "so that is what was in the box. I'd just about given it up. It's some pudding, all right, isn't it?" he went on admiringly. "Since we couldn't have it Christmas, let's celebrate tonight—speed the parting guest of the old year and welcome the new, you know. But I came in to tell you I'm going over to Blyly's to take a look at the brooder he wants to sell. So if you'll give me that picture book of Bobbie's, I'll stop at the poor farm as I pass and leave it for the little chap who got there too late for Santa Claus. They say he's terribly lonesome and homesick, poor little kid, and maybe it will cheer him up."

The set line of Maggie's lips twitched.

At the time it had seemed such a simple thing to propose, to give Bobbie's picture book, packed with her own books by mistake, to the new orphan arrived at the farm the beginning of the week; the poor 4-year-old child whose mother had died on Christmas day in a lonely shack up in the mountains.

"You can take the book another time," she evaded, picking up her shuttle and tatting like mad. "I can't bother about it today."

Jamie looked at her, surprised, puzzled.

"Why, I can get it as well as you, dear," he said gently. "It's on the table in our room, isn't it?"

She threw down the tatting and sprang up.

"I'll get it myself," she said fiercely, and shot into the adjoining room.

When she brought him the book, her eyes were rimmed in great red circles, but Jamie, impatient to be off, did not notice, or thought the redness came from her cold.

As the front door banged after him, camphor bottle in hand, Maggie sank back in the nearest armchair and gave herself up to being miserable.

But Jamie was gone over an hour—time for conscience and camphor to work, and thoroughly ashamed of herself, her head much clearer, she greeted his return with rising spirits, which fell precipitously when he nonchalantly informed her he had invited over the Blylys and Joen Thornton and his wife and the Hopkins girl to spend the evening and eat plum pudding with them.

"Oh, Jamie, why did you?" she said despairingly. "I feel like anything but company tonight."

But the guests had been invited and there was nothing to do but make the best of it.

Yet, as gallantly as she tried, the poor, little bride could not shake off her homesick forlornness.

It was five minutes of 12 by the living-room clock when the hot chocolate and the plum pudding in its blaze of glory were brought in, and as the first stroke of midnight fell upon their talk and laughter, with lifted cups, all sprang to their feet and drank to the new year, deep and long.

All, that is, except Maggie MacKenzie.

She took only a hurried sip at her chocolate, then put down her cup and ran and opened the front door.

"Maggie!" cried Jamie. "What are you opening the door for?"

"To let in the New Year, dear," she explained with a forced gaiety. "Don't you remember we always did it at home?" she added tremulously.

"For the land's sake!"

"The love of Mike!"

Excited exclamations went around, shrieks of half make-believe, half real terror, while the little bride stood staring, white-faced, into the night as though she had seen a ghost, a ghost of Bobbie, her own dear bairn for whom her heart had been crying out all day long.

Then out of the darkness into the bright living-room's light stepped a very flesh-and-blood little boy with tousled, just-out-of-bed hair and small garments put on awry that badly needed buttoning up.

"Why, it's the poor farm's new little orphan!" somebody cried in relief. "What in the world are you doing here, son?"

Ignoring the others, the child walked straight up to Maggie MacKenzie.

"I'm looking for my mother," he said, a catch in his breath.

And with her sad face now radiant, a shining light in her eyes, the homesick little bride gathered him up in her arms and hugged him close.

"If you can't find her, won't I do instead, darling?" she whispered between kisses.

Many People Poisoned

Scores of people meet death each year by a slow process of poisoning that is going on within our bodies This poisoning is caused by the liver and kidneys failing to perform their proper function. Poisonous matter accumulates within the body and health declines. The unsightly liver splotches, billiousness, headache and dizziness, bad taste in the mouth, coated tongue, a pain in the back or under the shoulder blade, a tired or achy feeling are some of the most common symptoms of this poisoning. If this poisoning it not expelled and the cause removed the resisting power is finally gone and life pays the penalty. Are you of the heedless class or are you safeguarding your health? If you want health you must keep the liver, kidneys and bowels active. Glando Tonic is what you need to restore this activity and expell the poisons Keep on the safe side and use a reliable remedy. Glando Tonic is put up in a treatment form and guaranteed to do the work. Ask your druggist for a large $1 treatment. Take it as directed and you will be surprised to know how much poison was stored up within your body. When the liver is inactive a mucus or slime collects within the stomach and bowels which hinders digestion and the assimilation of food. This is called catarrh of the stomach or bowels. Glando Tonic cuts this slime and mucus and removes it A nauceated feeling is sometimes experienced when this mucus is breaking loose but as soon as it is removed from the bowels, you will feel fine, the complexion clear, the appetite return and you will want to tell others of your wonderful cure.

Glando Tonic is sold by druggists or may be secured by sending direct to the Gland-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Indiana.

Obituary

Mrs. Virgie Bowen, wife of J. C. Bowen, died at her home in Pontiac, Michigan, on the 11th. day of December 1919, of blood poison from an abcess. She was 34 years, 3 months and 2 days old, leaving four children, Herbert, Murlin, Violet and Victor Bowen. She will be remembered as the daughter of Freeman and Ella Abel, formerly of this place. She was a kind, loving wife and mother and was ready to go and meet her God. She had many friends who remembered her by sending an abundance of flowers. The I. O. O. F. of Pontiac had charge and she was buried in their cemetery at that place.

Will Peatus and family moved from a farm west of town into the John Betts property, recently vacated by Roy Kinsey and family.

The Ohio Legislature has passed an amendment to the automobile license tax which very greatly increases the amount heretofore fixed which has been $6.00 per year. The new statute provides for a graduated tax which will run from $6.00 per auto up, calculated on the horse power of the autos. Automobile clubs will contest the law in the courts on the ground that it accomplishes double taxation and is therefore unconstitutional. Very likely however the tax law will stand the test in the courts.

The News to Stick to It. Paper Will Continue.

There are times when even the editors must take back what they say, and that is what we have done regarding the discontinuing of our publication, owing to the desires of a number of our merchants and citizens. Already a number of merchants have contracted yearly space and we hope before another week that all will have taken advantage of the contract opportunity.

The editor did not do this because of any leverage that he might use to force our local merchants and patrons to this increase of business but simply because we were compelled to do something owing to our market conditions.

The subscription price of The News will remain $1.25 per year payable on or before February 1, 1920, after said date the price will be $1.50 per year.

To Our Friends And Customers.

This is ending of our year's business for which we thank you for helping in making it a year of success. And as we desire to close up our books we ask you who are owing us to please call and make settlement by cash or note.

Wishing you all a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year. E. R. Kinsey.

LOCAL HAPPENINGS

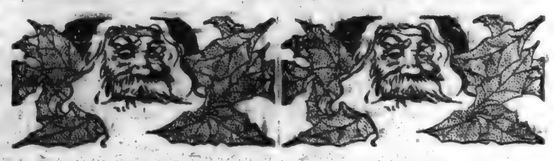
The Tri-Township Institute will be held at St. Joe on Friday and Saturday, January 30-31. Friday will be home day and on Saturday the state speakers will be here. The inetitute this year promises some valuable things in the way of community tests that are now in progress.



A Merry Chrisfmas!

The holidays are with us—Christmas, the day of good cheer; New Year's, the day of good resolutions. We wish our patrons in particular and the community in general "A Merry Christmas." This wish comes from the warmest corner of our hearts as we fully realize that our efforts to please our rapidly increasing patrons has been fully appreciated. Would it not be a Christian act for you to suggest this to any of your friends in whom you feel an interest? Come to the bank with them and help to start them on the road to prosperity before the New Year begins.

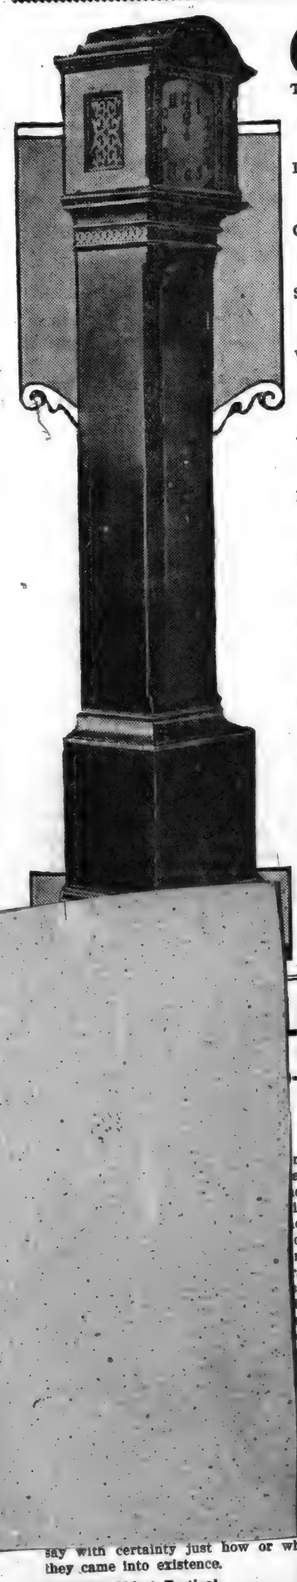
UPON THE THRESHOLD



ONCE more we stand with half-reluctant feet
Upon the threshold of another year;
That line where Past and Present seem to meet
In stronger contrast than they do elsewhere.

Look back a moment. Does the prospect please,
Or does the weary heart but sigh regret?
Can Recollection smile, or, ill at ease
With what is past, wish only to forget?

Say, canst thou smile when Memory's lingering gaze
Once more recalls the dying year to sight?
Wouldst thou live o'er again those changing days,
Or bid them fade forever into night?

A solemn question, and the faltering heart
Scarce dare say "Yes," yet will not quite say "No";
For joy and sadness both have played their part
In making up the tale of "long ago."

Here Memory sees the golden sunlight gleam
Across the path of life and shine awhile;
And now the picture changes like a dream,
And sorrow dims the eyes and kills the smile.

So—it has gone—where all has gone before;
The moaning wind has sung the dead year's dirge,
Time's waves roll on against the crumbling shore,
And sinks the worn-out bark beneath the surge.

Here ends the checkered page of prose and verse,
Of shapely words and lines writ all awry,
There they must stand for better or for worse;
So shut the book and bid the year good-by!

say with certainty just how or why they came into existence.

Probably Oldest Festival.

For the New Year's festival is as much older than the Christian holiday which precedes it as the inborn human instinct to worship something is older than the religion of the Carpenter of Nazareth. Christianity has merely adopted the New Year's festival.

The ancient Romans made of it a general holiday, with sacrifices to Janus of the Two-Faces, and gifts and visits. The gift custom seems to be universal and is observed to some extent today.

The old Persians had a custom which would have been much appreciated just now. They gave their friends eggs. Presumably, for the custom was widespread among all classes, the price of those was much lower in ancient Iran than in modern America.

In France the custom of New Year's gifts has survived longer than in any other European nation. The druids of Britain presented their friends with branches of sacred mistletoe.

Frowned On at First.

The early Christian church rather frowned on New Year's observances, probably because of the ancient Roman rites connected with it and with the saturnalia which preceded it. Its first mention as a feast in Christian literature is in Canon 17 of a council which met in Tours in 567. Later it became a recognized festival in the Catholic and Episcopal churches.

In England and Scotland the festival has been observed to an extent equaled in few other countries. It was called "Hogmanay" in Scotland and was the great national holiday. It was formerly attended by a celebration which an old writer says "bears in the license and boisterous merriment a most unmistakable resemblance to its ancient pagan namesake. The epithet of the 'Daft' (mad) days applied to the season of the New Year indicates very expressively the uproarious jovi ality which characterized the perio in question."

What Does Hogmanay Mean?

Just what the term "Hogmanay" means is uncertain. It is said to be a corruption of "Homme est ne" (a man is born)' referring to the birth o Christ. More plausible theories are first: that is is derived from the old Scandinavian word "Hoggu-nott" applied to the night before the Feast o Yule, and second, that it is from "Au gui menes" (to the mistletoe go), referring to the druidical ceremony o gathering the plant.

One of the oldest, most picturesque and certainly the best known custom was the "Wassail. This phrase, which is supposed to come from the Saxon expression "to your health," is familiar to modern carol singers.

Spiced Ale a Feature.

The head of the household, just before midnight, assembled his family around a bowl of spiced ale from which, as the clock struck 12, he drank the health of each. He then passed it to the rest, who drank in turn—not a custom which would recommend itself to the board of health during the influenza troubles.

A general handshaking followed the drinking of the toasts, after which all sang gravely:

Weel may we a' be.
Ill may we never see.
Here's to the king
And the gude companie.

The whole family then started out well provided with ale, buns, bread and cheese to visit their neighbors. If they met another party on a similar errand they exchanged drinks from their ale kettles. Reaching the house of a neighbor, they entered with shouted good wishes. If they were the first to enter since midnight they had the "first footing" and as such must give cakes or cheese and ale to every person in the visited house.

AND HE COULDN'T REACH HIM!

The Victim—What's that?
The Kid—I jest wished you a happy New Year!

And Keep It Up.

Start the cheering up process for the new year.

NEVER AGAIN

By R. Ray Baker

"THAT settles it. Never again."

Hubert Blacklock jerked open a drawer of the decrepit, wabbly, wooden structure that served as his desk and took from it a packet of letters bound with a piece of string. He ran them over casually, somewhat despondently, with a thumb, and gazed abstractedly through a small space in the window-pane that had, through some neglect, escaped the coat of grease with which the remainder of the glass was burdened.

A forest of white met his eyes—a pretty picture from a purely scenic standpoint, but not inspiring to one who had been living in the midst of it for two months and faced three more before seeing civilization again.

"Happy New Year," said Al Stuart, looking up from his drawing-board, T-square and compass, and scratching his ear with a right-triangle.

Hubert favored him with a glare, rose to his feet and administered two kicks, one of which closed the desk drawer, while the other sent the chair beneath the desk.

A few steps took him to a box stove that was glowing and crackling. He clanged open the door, balanced the letters in his hand, as though weighing the justice of his deed, and hurled the packet into the blaze that reached for it.

"Never again," he reiterated, as he directed one more kick and closed the stove.

"Lovely evening," observed Al, as he laid aside the tools and lighted a pipe. "What's all this 'never-againing' I hear? Are you making a New Year's resolution?"

"You've hit it," was Hubert's response, as he borrowed some tobacco and a match from his friend and proceeded to co-operate in the process of smudging the room.

Pipes make men closer friends and tend to pry open the covers that hide the secrets of their hearts, especially when there is a sorrow connected with the secret and the troubled one feels the need of consolation. Moreover, the two months spent in each other's society had welded a chain of friendship between these two men that was firm, and already they had exchanged some confidences.

"It's an alluring future," said Hubert. "Believe me, when we get this old railroad mapped out—which probably will take about three months more—you can see me shaking the dust—I mean the snow—of the Washington woods from my feet and beating it for—well, I dunno, but I guess I'll make it Hongkong."

"So she turned you down," was Al's comment as he watched a ring of smoke soar ceilingward. "After all these months she has gone back on you. And how loyal you have been to her! Never once have you looked at another woman. Of course, there haven't been any around to look at, but just the same, you haven't. Well, unbosom yourself."

"There isn't much to it," Hubert told him. "I wrote her, asking if she'd marry me when I got out of here. I told her if she couldn't accept me she needn't answer at all. Well, it's been a month, and I haven't heard, so that's my answer. And she's had my letter three weeks. It only takes a few days to get mail to St. Paul."

"Sure you mailed it?" inquired Al.

"No question about it. I remember distinctly reading her address on the letter when I dropped it in the box at the Sheffield post office after walking the necessary two miles for the express purpose of satisfying myself there was no hitch in the proceeding of proposing by mail. I had two letters to mail, the other one being that poem I wrote for the Forest Trail Magazine. I forgot the letter containing the poem and gave it to you to mail the next day. Remember?"

Gazed Abstractedly Out of the Window.

Al gave a slight start at this, opened his mouth to speak, bit his lip and remained silent for a moment.

"And so you swore off?" he finally said. "Why can't you wait until midnight tomorrow, when we can usher in the new year? And what did you swear off, if I may ask again?"

Hubert borrowed another match and relighted his pipe, on which he had neglected to draw.

"I swore off on ever associating with or writing to any girl any more in my whole life—and I'm going to stick to it," he said firmly.

Al burst out laughing.

"It can't be done," he asserted. "I have five dollars in my pocket that says you'll break that resolution within a week."

"I'll take you. I'm against gambling but this is a sure thing. I tell you 'never again.'"

Hubert retired early and was tossing and tumbling among the blankets when Al stole softly from the shack and made his way to a shed where the engineers' supplies and surveying implements were stored.

Lighting a lantern he seated himself on a box of groceries, and then grinning somewhat ruefully, produced a letter from a pocket of his coat.

"Can you beat it?" he mused. "I clean forgot to mail that poem, and I never would have thought of it again if he hadn't mentioned it. Wonder if the Forest Trail Magazine suffered for want of it? I guess not, though, for Hub is always sending out such stuff and getting it back. But I wonder—I wonder—"

He looked curiously at the address on the envelope.

"Editorial Department, Forest Trail Magazine, New York," he read. "That's the address all right, but this is rather bulky for a poem."

He brought a clasp knife from his trousers and opened it.

"Maybe this isn't just right," he said, "but something tells me all is not as it should be."

He hesitated only a moment, then slit the envelope, disclosing several close-

"Can You Beat It?" He Mused.

ly written sheets of paper, one of which started out with "Dear Jean."

"That's enough," he said, as he blew out the light and left the shed. "I'm not reading my pal's love letters. It's a bad blunder, but my forgetfulness has saved the situation. It would have been a scream if the editor of Forest Trail had received this manuscript. And I wonder how Jean liked the poem."

He walked back toward the shack.

"I'll give it to 'Hub' in the morning," he thought, but after he had gone to bed he got to turning it over in his mind, with the result that early the next day he hiked to Sheffield. Entering the railroad station, which also served as a telegraph office, he busied himself with a yellow blank. After spoiling two blanks, he handed one to the operator.

The message he had written was addressed to Jean Penbrook, at a certain address in St. Paul, and it said:

"Will you marry me in May? Must know before the new year starts. Don't answer if you refuse. Hubert."

"I'm a meddler as well as a forger," thought Al as he retraced his steps toward camp after loading up with tobacco.

Shortly after the engineers had finished supper a knock sounded on the door and when Hubert opened it a man flourished a telegram in his face. Hubert signed for it, opened it and read while Al got very busy with the T-squares and the compass and the triangles.

Not a word was said about the telegram during the entire evening. Both men busied themselves with their drafting for an hour or two, then got out books and read, waiting for the new year to dawn.

The only timepiece in the shack was an alarm clock, and this had been set to ring out the old year.

Shortly before the hour approached, Hubert seated himself at his desk and became active with writing materials.

Al kept one of his eyes on his book and chuckled softly, while the other surreptitiously watched Hubert.

Presently the clock jangled the midnight hour.

"Happy New Year, Hub," called Al. "How are you starting it?"

Hubert continued scratching with the pen.

"None of your confounded business!" he growled, without looking up.

Al laughed aloud.

"I'll hand you that five tomorrow," announced Hubert, as he started on the eleventh page.

"Never again," mimicked Al.

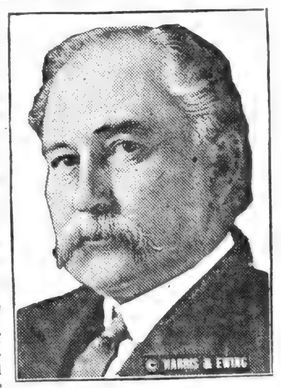
FALL'S CHARGES AGAINST CARRANZA



A resolution requesting President Wilson to withdraw recognition of Carranza and sever diplomatic relations with Mexico has been introduced by Senator Fall (Rep.), New Mexico, chairman of the senate committee charged with an investigation of the Mexican situation.

"I charge," said Senator Fall, "that the Mexican embassy, the consulate general in New York and the consulate general in San Francisco have been actively engaged in the distribution of bolshevik propaganda and that this has been done with the knowledge and consent of Venustiano Carranza."

Senator Fall's resolution follows:

"Resolved by the senate, the house of representatives concurring, That the action taken by the department of state in reference to the pending controversy between this government and the government of Mexico should be approved, and further, that the president of the United States be, and he is hereby requested to withdraw from Venustiano Carranza the recognition heretofore accorded him by the United States as president of the republic of Mexico, and to sever all diplomatic relations now existing between this government and the pretended government of Carranza."

J. W. ALEXANDER TO SUCCEED REDFIELD

Joshua Willis Alexander of Gallatin, Mo., who succeeds William C. Redfield as secretary of commerce, has to resign his seat in congress to take the position. He was born in Cincinnati January 22, 1852. In 1872 he was graduated from Christian college, Missouri. In 1872 he moved to Gallatin and in 1875 he was admitted to the bar. Almost immediately he entered public life, serving as public administrator, member of the board of education, mayor and state legislator. He resigned as judge of the Seventh Missouri district to take his seat in the Sixtieth congress.

He was named by President Wilson as house member of the United States commission to the international conference on safety of life at sea, and was selected by the commission to be chairman. The conference was in session in London from November, 1913, to February, 1914. He married the daughter of the late Judge Samuel A. Richardson in February, 1876, and his wife and seven children—four sons and three daughters—are living. He was elected to the Sixty-first, Sixty-second, Sixty-third, Sixty-fourth, Sixty-fifth and Sixty-sixth congresses.

SENATOR M'CORMICK'S BUDGET PLAN

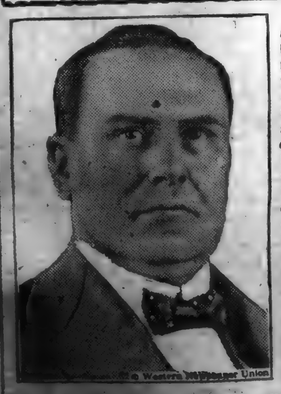
Senator McCormick of Illinois will introduce a budget bill at this session of congress. He attacks the Good bill as faulty. He says his bill differs from that of Mr. Good, chiefly, in placing the budget bureau under the secretary of the treasury, who is made strictly a financial officer and divested of extraneous functions, such as administration of public buildings and public health service, and in empowering the budget bureau to reduce departmental appropriation estimates.

"My bill," said Senator McCormick, "is not the handiwork of one man. Its actual text comes from the hands of two trained draftsmen; it embodies in principle the ideas of students of public administration and finance like Secretary Glass, President Nicholas Murray Butler, Governor Lowden, and ex-Congressman Fitzgerald.

"It will not further divide responsibility for the financial policy of the government as the Good bill must if it should become law. My bill seeks to make the secretary of the treasury a true finance officer, surveying the field of expenditure as well as that of revenue. The Good bill would make the president, already the most overburdened executive in the world, his own finance officer."

The senator says the Good bill, which places the bureau of the budget in the office of the president, merely transfers the existing and amorphous functions of the treasury in assembling the estimates to this budget bureau, of which the vitality will depend upon the energy, the financial skill and the personal attention of the president.

HARRIS: CONSUL GENERAL IN RUSSIA



E. I. Harris of Rock Island, Ill., consul general for the United States in Russia, is having lots of experiences these days, according to reports from the Land of Chaos. But then he's been having such experiences for the last twenty years in Uncle Sam's consular service. He was appointed to his present post in 1918. Living on a train, he has traveled all over Siberia since then. He arrived in Omsk November 19 of last year and witnessed the accession of the present Kolchak government to control of Siberian affairs. His "district" is bigger than the United States. He has a staff of consuls and vice consuls scattered over many thousands of miles.

Mr. Harris' duties have sent him into many lively places. He was five years in Turkey, witnessing the revolutions which kept that country in violent turmoil. He was sent to investigate the massacres of Armenians by Turks at Adana. He has served in all the Balkan states and in Greece. For five and one-half years he was at Stockholm. Then he joined the staff of a New York bank and went to Russia in 1917, reaching Petrograd when the revolution was on.

Consul General Harris is an American college graduate, who finished his education with five years at Heidelberg.

"MYSTERIOUS ROBBERY OF WELL-KNOWN AUTHORESS."

Synopsis.—While in the little Swiss town of Vevay, where the "staid, proper spinster" who tells the story is spending a vacation, she is asked to allow a young girl, Claire de Ravenol, to be her companion back to the United States. Although forming an attachment to the girl, the heroine takes a dislike to Monsieur de Ravenol, Claire's father, and declines. On the boat she finds Claire in the care of a casual acquaintance, Mrs. Delario, whom she had met while each was purchasing a pair of slippers, exactly alike, which figure largely in subsequent events. When they reach New York, where Claire was to have been met by her mother, the latter does not appear, and Claire perforce goes to Mrs. Delario's home. In the confusion at the custom house, the spinster carries off one of Mrs. Delario's slippers. Through that happening she learns later that someone unknown to her has been in her flat. Calling on Mrs. Delario, that lady shows her some remarkable gems, believing them to be rubies, but which are really blood-red diamonds, and easily worth a million dollars. Mrs. Delario admits the gems were smuggled, but offers no explanation. While they are talking, a pounding on the door throws them into consternation. The caller asserts he is an officer of the law, with a warrant for the arrest of Mrs. Delario's son on a charge of stealing the diamonds. She outwits him and persuades the spinster to take the gems to her home for safe keeping. Next morning, realizing the responsibility in her possession of the diamonds, the spinster takes them back to Mrs. Delario, but while there she learns that that lady's son has been kidnaped, supposedly on account of the gems, and agrees to keep them in a bunch of hyacinths and has the lock of her door changed and a chain-bolt added. Over the telephone De Ravenol informs her Mrs. Delario has met with an accident and urges her to call at once. Hastening to her friend, and leaving the gems, the heroine is met by De Ravenol, who claims the diamonds are his, stolen from Claire on the boat. He accuses Mrs. Delario or our friend the spinster of the theft, and demands their return. She defies De Ravenol, who threatens her with a revolver, and escapes.

Clammy sweat broke out all over me as I thought of what he might do. He might have twenty accomplices—he evidently had money enough to play the game to a finish. Where could I go tonight? To a hotel? I didn't have any luggage. To a friend's house? I should have to explain—and I couldn't. I might go over to Philadelphia to my brother's but I didn't have money enough in my purse to pay my fare. And could I go off and leave the diamonds in my flat? Or could I take them with me, and perhaps be kidnaped, robbed and then murdered to keep my mouth shut! After what I'd seen of him I now felt him capable of anything.

With these thoughts I staggered out into the street. I noticed the clock as I passed—five minutes to eight, and I had come in at a quarter to six. I saw spies everywhere. I was afraid to go home and I didn't know what else to do. I knew I ought to communicate with Mrs. Delario, but I didn't dare—even to try to reach her on the telephone might make it the worse for her.

In this frame of mind I reached Broadway—here at least I felt temporarily safe—and staggered right into the arms of—Billy Rivers!

"Billy!" I cried, as soon as I saw who it was. "My rescuer!" For next to having a thick policeman to take care of me I'd rather have a thin reporter. Billy might not be able to save my life now, but he and his paper would at least avenge my death. "Billy, where are you going?"

"Just come. Left the mater at Clifton Springs this morning. Meeting you now is what you might call—"

"Finding your aunt from home," I suggested.

"Much better than any aunt I ever had," returned Billy gallantly; which didn't mean much, since all he had in the world was an only mother. He added: "Say—I was just thinking of you, too. I was coming up to see you and get some really, truly advice. While I was over there in Paris I sort of got the idea that I'd try my hand at the literary game."

"Don't!" I cut him short. "Stick to the daily news and live things—" I was at the moment thinking of the things I was living. Also that I was living so much I was afraid to go home! "Billy, take me to a show tonight—any old show."

He swung me into a hotel—I haven't the remotest idea which, for I had lost all sense of place—and was back in five minutes with tickets, and we went.

It was a musical show, and of all things in the world I detest a musical show about the most. Billy, however, seemed to find it to his liking, and commented on it freely—I remember his speaking of a miss at one end of the sextette as a "sweet bunch of petticoats" and I wondered what his mother would say to that. But the thing dragged along in its meaningless changes, and I sat there trying to find some coherence in its plot—or at least some gleam of real humor besides horseplay, and all the while there kept runing through my head the words, "Your flat is being robbed—robbed—robbed!"

Billy and I came home on a local that dumped its passengers at One Hundred and Thirty-seventh, and I said, "Let's walk up," and pulled him out of the station and then into a side street and around a block until we were out of earshot of other pedestrians; then I said: "Billy, I've got a hunch that I've been robbed while we were at that show. You've got to come up with me."

"Aw, now—don't go worrying," he began soothingly. "Lots of people have hunches that never come to anything. But of course I'll go up with you—call the police afterward, too, if you want."

"Don't joke," I begged. "I've got five hundred dollars in the house—it would be just my luck." This was as good an explanation as any, and it was true. I didn't dare to tell him about the diamonds and my afternoon's adventure.

Billy whistled. "Good chance for me—if you haven't been burgled already. Three months in Paris for yours truly."

"Billy, listen," I begged, ignoring his attempt to be funny and cheer me up. "If George has gone off the elevator, all right—we walk up; but if George is still on—now listen, Billy, and play your part, for if I've been robbed George mustn't know it: if George is on I'll tell him you're from the office and have come up for some papers."

George has his virtues and the defects of his virtues—he keeps tab on everybody in the house, who their friends are, how often they call and how late they stay. For me—who never did such a thing—to bring an apple-cheeked young man to my flat after midnight would be nothing short of an adventure in George's eyes—a thing to be told through the house for a month of Sundays afterward. So I got out a quarter—to be ready with my thanks, in case he'd stayed on, waiting for me, as he often did; and there he was, smiling.

I slipped the quarter into his palm and told him how glad I was that I didn't have to walk up—and this gentleman, too, who "had come up from the office to get some papers"—I didn't say what office.

The car slid up—my heart slid down: monsieur was in that flat waiting for me and I knew it. Don't ask me to explain how I knew it—I knew it—and I knew that he was in the kitchen—or would be in the kitchen, when the car stopped at the sixth; that he meant to let me come in, close the door on myself, and then appear; that he had the kitchen window open ready to retreat by the fire-escape if I should happen not to come alone.

I say I knew this. At the same time I knew that I must give him the chance to get away—I must let him know I was not alone.

The car stopped. George asked if he should wait, and I replied, in a rather loud voice, that it might take some little time to find the papers for Mr. Rivers; better go down again, for the front door was still open and somebody might slip in. I fumbled with my key to let the car descend, and when the noise had grown faint, so that monsieur could hear every word I said, I opened the door a crack and held it while I drew out the key, saying, so the words would carry through the hall, "Billy, have you got a match? Won't you strike it before we go in—the flat is dark."

Billy struck a match and the kitchen door slammed as I opened the front door. I knew by that that the kitchen window was open.

The hall, by the outside gas jet, showed nothing out of the way—that had been rearranged to let me get inside and shut the door without suspicion. As to the rest of the flat!—words fail me! It was literally turned inside out and upside down. Drawers had been emptied out on the floor, then piled up and refilled with other things to get them out of the way. Even the bookcases had been moved and searched behind and hundreds of books were heaped on the floor, helter-skelter. Pictures had been taken from the walls and pillow cushions cut open; actually, the breakfast food in boxes, the butter and food in the refrigerator had been searched.

And in the midst of the disorder one thing alone had apparently not been touched—the bunch of hyacinths! I saw it the moment I got the dining-room light turned on. There it stood on the table, just as I had left it when I had crowded the diamonds down among the stems. But were the diamonds there!

I was in the act of making a dash to find out, when I remembered Billy—Billy mustn't know.

He had ejaculated, "Love and potatoes! You did have a hunch!"

I pulled off my gloves—I must see if the diamonds were safe—just a touch with the end of my fingers and I'd know—

"I didn't do it with a hunch, Billy," said I, and I stooped to pick up a table drawer and slide it into place, for there was a considerable barricade between me and the hyacinths that were now out of my reach.

"I didn't suppose you did," Billy was generous enough to admit.

"I did it with a piece of unmitigated folly—"

"Say—where did you leave the cash?" he questioned quickly, and I remembered the five hundred dollars that I'd forgotten for the moment.

I forgot the diamonds and sank into the nearest chair. I stammered, "Billy, I must know the worst, and I'm afraid to g-go to my bedroom and s-see if it's gone. It was in the b-bureau drawer."

Billy struck a match and went down the hall. Then I saw the electric light illuminate the doorway and heard Billy:

"Love and pumpkins! Come here—quick!"

I rushed after him, without waiting to see if the diamonds were safe. He pointed to the bed: "Will you look at that!"

All the bed covers had been thrown off and on the mattress lay the five hundred dollars, spread out in rows of tens and fives!

The sight fairly caved me in. It was a great deal worse than if the money had been stolen. The thought that instantly struck me, and Billy too, for Billy said it, was, "That fellow certainly had plenty of time, and what's more, I bet he was waiting for you."

"He was," said I with conviction, catching at the foot of the bed for support.

Billy gathered up and counted the money. It was all there, five hundred dollars.

"Now what—do you make—of that?" he meditated.

I knew what I made of it, but for Mrs. Delario's sake I did not tell Billy. He handed the bills to me.

"There's more to this," he observed. "Some mystery. I must search the other rooms."

"Listen!" I said.

We listened but heard nothing. Then he opened the bathroom door—nobody there. And with that he marched straight to the kitchen door and back to me in a flash.

"You open the front door and get ready to yell bloody murder if anything happens," he commanded.

"No, Billy," I returned, coming to my senses and pulling out my hatpin, that had already once done duty that day. "I'll get ready to do bloody murder."

He flung open the kitchen door and we went in together.

Our mysterious burglar had vanished.

"Flew the coop," said Billy sadly. "And I might have caught him if I'd been a minute sooner. Just my luck." He pointed to the open window as he spoke.

To me that open window meant I had missed death because of Billy.

I swayed. He grabbed my arm and steered me to the dining room and berthed me in the chair I'd just left.

"Get me a glass of water, Billy."

"Say, this is NEWS!" he chuckled, while I drank. "Mysterious robbery of well-known authoress—oh, I say, this is NEWS!"

He took the glass to the kitchen and came back with a notebook in his hand. I stumbled to my feet and got him by the shoulders.

"Billy Rivers, this is not news! It's life and death. Not a living soul must know of this till I tell it. Do you understand?"

"Well, but," he began, "a robbery like this—and of you—"

"It wasn't a robbery."

"Wasn't a robbery?" He cast a glance over the wreckage strewn all over. "What was it, then?"

"A search."

"Gee whiz! I believe you're right," he cried, looking about again, with a new light in his eyes.

"I say—the plot thickens! This is a real mystery!"

"Don't you see why it mustn't be known?"

"And do you know who searched and what he searched for?"

"I think so."

Billy stared at me for some seconds before he brought out, "I believe you know more about this than you're telling me. You're concealing something. Well—tell me this—did he get it?"

"I don't know."

Billy whistled and stared. "Say—this begins to be romantic."

"Romantic!" I snorted. "You don't know what romantic is!"

I managed to stop there. However much I respected Billy in general, I hadn't much confidence in his discretion.

"Billy, do you remember the time your mother put on your brand-new Fauntleroy suit and told you not to go to the swimming hole and you went?" I asked desperately, trying to get at him somehow and bind him to a promise to keep this to himself. "And you went—and the boys threw you in, sash and curls and all? And I found you and took you home and ironed you and curled you up fresh and saved you from—"

"I'm in a Lot of Trouble."

"A lickin'—and a good one," he finished for me. "Those were the mater's lickin' days—before she lost the girls. And it wasn't the only lickin' you saved me from," he added, in the grateful way I'd always loved him for, even when I just couldn't love him, he was so bad.

"Billy, dear," I said, pressing my hands on his shoulders, "it's your turn now. Do you understand?—and you've got to forget that you're a reporter and remember only that you're my friend and that I need one; for I'm in a lot of trouble and I simply can't explain."

"Don't say any more," said Billy with a fine air, taking up his hat. I remembered then that he had come for papers—George would be looking for some evidence of my truthfulness—and I snatched up the first sizable book I saw—my German dictionary, though I didn't notice what it was—and a bunch of odd papers and thrust them into Billy's hand and got him out and George up in spite of protests that I ought not to stay alone after that.

I closed the door and put up the chain-bolt, and seeing my clothes all in a heap, went in and hung them up and threw the blankets on the bed. I turned out all the lights but one. And throughout all these operations I kept asking myself, "Did he get the diamonds?"

Did the mysterious burglar get the diamonds?

Arabian Physician.

Then there is the Kitab-al-Mansuri of Ali Razi, the most eminent of the Arabian physicians, the Rhazes of European writers, of whom it is said that when in his old age he suffered from cataract and was asked to have his blindness removed by an operation, he replied:

"I have seen so much of the world that I am wearied of it."

Of whom also it is said that when called upon to select a site for a hospital in Bagdad, he caused pieces of meat to be suspended in various localities, and chose that one in which, after a given time, the meat showed least putrefaction, thus anticipating the knowledge of microbial infection. To him it is said that we owe the oldest account extant of smallpox and measles.—Asia Magazine.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

LESSON FOR DECEMBER 28

REVIEW: THE TRAINING OF PETER AND JOHN.

GOLDEN TEXT—Ye shall be my witnesses.—Acts 1:8.

SELECTION FOR READING—I John 1:1-9.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Two Strong Friends of Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Witnesses for Jesus.

INTERMEDIATE TOPIC—Steps in the Training of Peter and John.

SENIOR AND ADULT TOPIC—Qualified to Serve.

A good way to review the lessons of the six months' course of study in the lives of Peter and John will be to arrange them under three heads, as follows: I. Their Call; II. Their Training; III. Their Service. The first half of the studies, the part we have now completed, have had to do with the calling and training of Peter and John. The last half, the lessons for the first quarter of 1920, will have to do with their service.

I. Their Call.

1. To be disciples (Lesson 1) John 1:29-42.

Before Christ trains for service he calls to salvation.

2. To be fishers of men (Lesson 2) Mark 1:14-20.

It would seem that after their conversion the disciples had gone back to their trade of fishing. Those who are called by Christ unto salvation should go back to their ordinary callings in life, if they be honorable, until he definitely calls them into special service.

II. Their Training.

1. Jesus in Peter's home (Lesson 3) Mark 1:29-39.

Christ's entry into Peter's home and the healing of his wife's mother showed to his disciples that he was a sympathizing Saviour.

2. A lesson in trust (Lesson 4) Matt. 14:22-33.

The pressing and abiding need of the disciples in their ministry was to trust the Lord.

3. Peter's great confession (Lesson 6) Matt. 16:13-24.

The Lord had been revealing himself in various ways to the disciples. He now examined them to see what they knew about himself. Peter, as spokesman for the rest of the disciples, confessed both the Messiahship and Deity of Christ.

4. Witnesses of Christ's glory (Lesson 7) Luke 9:28-36.

The disciples were offended at the revelation of the cross; their hopes were shattered because they could not see beyond the cross. The transfiguration convinced them not only of his essential glory, but gave them a foregleam of his triumph in his coming kingdom (II Peter 1:16-18).

5. Jesus corrects John's narrowness (Lesson 8) Luke 9:46-56.

The disciples needed to know that all who are really doing the Lord's work, casting out devils, and casting them out in Christ's name, should be received into fellowship and bidden Godspeed. Religious intolerance is displeasing to Jesus.

6. Jesus teaches true greatness (Lesson 9) John 13:1-16.

The truly great are those who take the lowest place in service for others.

7. Peter and John asleep in Gethsemane (Lesson 10) Mark 14:32-42.

Though Christ was suffering the awful agony in the garden, his disciples were asleep. Because they did not watch and pray, they failed in the hour of temptation.

8. At the trial crucifixion and resurrection of Jesus (Lesson 11) John 18:15-18; 19:25-27; 20:1-10; 21:15-19. Peter's presumptuous self-confidence kept him from heeding the Lord's warning. He played the coward and even indulged in oaths. Note the steps in Peter's downfall: (1) Self-confidence (Mark 14:29). Jesus had just told them that all of them should be offended, but Peter was determined to show the Lord that he was mistaken in him. (2) Failure to watch (Mark 14:37). Self-confidence is always followed by unwatchfulness. One who thinks himself strong will go to sleep. (3) Failure to pray (Mark 14:38). It is the one who realizes his weakness who always seeks the communion of God in prayer. (4) Zeal without knowledge (Mark 14:47). Peter thought now to make up for his lack of watchfulness and prayer by outward acts. Many today are equally foolish. (5) Following afar off (Mark 14:54). Christ's rebuke of Peter for his ignorant zeal cut him to the quick. He was not ready to forsake him, but followed afar off, no doubt wondering what would be the outcome. (6) Warming himself at the enemies' fire (Mark 14:54). (7) Open denial (Mark 14:66-72).

DECEMBER

STANDING BY THE SHIP

The Editor of the Publishers' Auxilliary, the most thoroughly read newspaper publication in this country, sent the following wire to sixty-eight paper jobbing houses in the United States recently:

"Responding to inquiries from many country publishers, all states, the Publishers' Auxilliary will publish analysis print paper market conditions. Please telegraph me, collect, your present price ton lots, f. o. b., your city, and say if you have sufficient stock of paper on hand for normal demand."

HIGH LIGHTS IN JOBBERS' REPLIES

Out of 68 replies 46 paper houses quoted price on news in sheets.

Average price covering 22 states 7¾ cents.

Out of 68 jobbers reporting 26 are entirely out of stock.

Twenty-one jobbers out of 68 report stocks of sheet print sufficient for normal demand of CUSTOMERS ONLY. None will take on new business. Some of these limit their care of regular customers to from 48 hours to three weeks.

Two of the 68 houses report current mill quotations equal to the average jobbers' wholesale price for 22 states.

One house in pulp territory paying from 9 to 10¼ f. o. b. mills.

Three houses report all prices withdrawn, but are accepting orders subject to mill's acceptance at price based on mill cost.

Three houses which were former print dealers report having withdrawn from the market.

This explains the general situation of the white paper market. The very life of thousands of weekly newspapers in this country is in danger.

THE VALUE OF THE WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

The Auxilliary in another article gives voice to the following:

"The weekly newspaper was the first public voice to be raised in the wilderness that is now America. That voice has always been heard upon the side of high patriotism, good citizenship, and public and private morals.

It remains today the most potent weapon the republic wields against the forces of evil, and the most powerful moulder of public opinion.

The country newspaper represents the heart of America. Not from the cosmopolitan crowds of the city streets, but from the green fields, blue skies and clean living of the open, comes that elusive, though real, something that has come to be known as "American Ideals."

As teacher, leader, counselor and friend, the country newspaper has broken trail for one hundred years for the most thrilling example of empire building the world has ever witnessed.

Throughout the world war the country press was wholeheartedly with the government, regardless of its political faith, inspiring its following of patriotic citizens to greater and greater effort, and giving of its own slender resources to the cause.

Not in the fields of the country press did we find the serpent of disloyalty.

Arthur Balfour, of England, recently remarked to an American newspaper man:

"Upon the rural press of America rests the fate of civilization."

The country newspaper is, to be sure, a business enterprise, but we believe it more nearly approximates an unselfish public utility than any other American business.

And now the very existence of this most dependable of our influences for good is threatened by the high costs of labor and paper. The publication of country newspapers has become unprofitable.

When the country newspapers are no longer possible, the country merchant and village life, steadying influences in our national being, will pass. A tendency toward centralization is already known to be a basic factor in our high cost of living and general unrest."

THE INEVITABLE

This newspaper has been caught in the tide that leads to destruction. The paper we use has advanced 150% in cost and only our long connection with one of the largest jobbers of sheets news print in this country insures our supply at any price.

We are forced to increase prices or suspend publication and turn our attention to other lines. It is up to you, readers and advertisers, whether or not this town is to have a newspaper in the future. We are not subjects of charity, but no business can live long and sell its stock in trade at less than cost.

To Our Supporters.

The Spencerville Basket Ball Association desires to take this method of apologising to our supporters for the imitation basket ball game given them last Saturday night when the locals easily defeated the Wayne A. C's. by the score 81-12.

The Spencerville Team is made up of a list of stars and are striving to bring the best teams in the country here for your approval. It is to be regretted that the management of the visitors did not take into consideration the fact that the local quintet is one of the best in northern Indiana and worthy of recognition as such. It seems that our nearby metropolis athletes consider that the small towns cannot produce the goods and are just easy money for them.

Manager Blauvelt of the Wayne A. C's. represented his team as a strictly professional team and guaranteed a lineup made up of the Hamilton and Plummer brothers, Pratt and Priser, all well known basket ball players for a contract price of $25. However, upon taking the floor the above mentioned players were conspicious by their absence but we were assured by the manager that these men were worthy representatives of their club, but from the first moment it was easily seen that only the kindness on the part of the locals would grant them a score. Although Manager Blauvelt completely broke his contract and was not therefore entitled to pay, the local management knew that refusing to do so would cause this organization to represent the locals as thieves and thus hurt all small towns for the season. Consequently we paid the contract price.

Now, that we may also play fair with our fans and supporters we wish to inform them that we are going to strive to repay them the price of last Saturday night's game. As our limited funds will not permit us to bring a strong team here and give an exhibition attraction, we are planning to reduce our admission for next Saturday night's game from 30 to 20 cents, and shall continue this method until we have refunded the 30 cents admission price.

Next Saturday night the locals have secured the Zanesville Athletics for the evening attraction. Manager Jacobs has guaranteed us that besides himself, Keplinger and Hoopingartner will be in their line-up. As Zanesville is one of our small towns and consequently made of men who are proud of their little city, we are certain that the game will be the best of the season.

New Auto Numbers.

Automobile license plates for 1920 will be put in the mails December 26, for thousands of auto owners throughout the state.

This will be the first day of the mailing. Although the plates have been in the office of the secretary of state for some time they were held here to avoid contributing to the holiday overflow of mails.

Twenty thousand applications were on hand today (Dec. 22) and just as rapidly as these can be cared for the auto registration department will turn its attention toward the tens of thousands of others that will come in before the last of January. It is estimated there will be a total of 275,000 licenses issued for next year. There were almost this many for 1919 and more than 50,000 plates were obtained for 1920 in excess of 1918.

The 1920 plates have a buff background and olive green numerals. The word "truck" is stamped perpendicularly on the left side of those plates designed for truck license.

Receipts of license fees for this year now total $1,558,000 and for next year the amount is expected to be considerably increased.

Shipping Association.

The Tri-Township Shipping Association since December 5 to December 11, 1919 have shipped 8 loads of live stock. The gross receipts of which was $15,524.86. Gross weight 128,320 pounds. Number of live stock shipped in the 8 loads was 370 hogs, 14 cattle, 10 veal and 240 sheep.

At the meeting of the directors of the association on last Friday evening it was found that the membership of the association was up to the limit of the association it being chartered for two hundred members. It was decided to increase the membership to five hundred and ask for a new charter.

RIGHT WORKING OF GRA DING SYSTEM GIVES SATISFACTION TO ALL PERSONS CONCERNED

With This Equipment Grain Dealers Can Make All Tests Necessary to Determine the Proper Grade of Grain. From Right to Left Are Moisture Tester, Scales, Sieves, and Weight-Per-Bushel Apparatus.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

There may be no such thing as a sixth sense, but in many lines of work there are certain kinds of knowledge that appear remarkable to others who have different occupations.

For instance, there is the art of opening safes by listening to the lock tumblers passing each other; the ability to guess within a few pounds of the weight of man or beast; and, of course, the fellows who can "spot" an automobile in the distance and tell you its name and model.

No less remarkable than some of these things is the way in which many a country grain buyer can tell his customer's team of horses as far as he can see them. Not only that, but he learns to know his customer's grain at the beginning of each crop season and does not need to run tests on every load hauled. A test of the first load or two of a farmer's crop is usually enough to form a correct idea of the quality and condition of that farmer's grain. Of course, every load is closely examined to see if it is uniform with previous loads.

With all this superknowledge, however, the country grain buyer often overlooks the need for a better knowledge of federal grain grades, according to the bureau of markets, and this is said to explain certain criticisms leveled at federal grain grades as applied at country points. Wherever federal grades are used by country buyers who understand how to apply them, reports show that such country buyers are holding their trade and that the farmers seem better satisfied than to have a buyer make a price without any definite standard as a basis.

When No. 1 Is Not No. 1.

Unless federal grades are applied by country buyers somewhere along the way to the consumer there is sure to be dissatisfaction. Some buyers are afraid to buy on grades, and so start a lot of trouble for themselves and others from whom they buy their grain.

Some line elevators complain that they lose on wheat bought in the country by the elevator managers. The wheat is often graded lower at the terminal market than the grade given to the farmer by the buyer.

Checking Up the Grader.

It is a mistake for the farmer to insist that his wheat shall be graded No. 1 in cases where the grain is not entitled to that grade. The country buyer who overgrades in order to please his customers, and then underweighs or assesses more dockage than justified, is unfair both to the farmer and to the company for whom he is buying. Then, too, it is a mistake for the country buyer not to grade wheat No. 1 when it is of a No. 1 grade. Nowadays the farmer can check this grading, for he can send a representative sample to any licensed inspector, and receive an official sample certificate.

Buyers who know how to apply federal grades may easily test the first load a farmer brings in, and keep the sample as a type sample of that farmer's wheat or corn or oats, while the remaining loads are marketed. It is not unusual in some localities for a farmer to bring a sample of his wheat to the buyer soon after thrashing, and offer to sell his crop on the basis of a price made on the sample, with the understanding that the wheat when hauled shall be equal to the sample. That gives the buyer plenty of time to apply all the tests necessary to establish accurately the correct grade of the grain.

RESULT OF ANALYSIS OF A FARM BUSINESS

Farmers Usually Have Details Sufficiently in Mind.

With Knowledge of Costs and Previous Income Man Is Better Equipped to Market Produce Profitably—Analysis Is Essential.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Farmers have sometimes been unjustly criticized for knowing little about the business side of their work. The fact is that they usually have the details sufficiently in mind, but they are not always ready to summarize and bring them together into a concrete statement. With knowledge of what his costs and previous income have been the farmer is better equipped to market his produce profitably and to determine what future expenditures are advisable.

In the work of the office of farm management several thousand farms have been studied to analyze their operations from a business standpoint and learn of the most important reasons for their success or failure. Experience shows that it is not possible to distinguish profitable farms by casual observation. Where a farmer is operating a large business, even a low rate of interest without any wages for himself would bring in sufficient funds to give a prosperous appearance to the farm. But a farm cannot properly be called successful unless it pays a fair rate of interest on the investment, returns fair wages for the farmer's labor, and maintains at the same time the fertility of the soil. A better realization of the fact that the farm is a complex business, subject to certain economic laws, is one of the benefits to be derived from a systematic study of production, marketing, and so on, as it should be carried on by the up-to-date farmer.

Farmers know that the gain from a big business should be more than from a small one, that good cows are more profitable than poor ones, and that good crops are more desirable than those which do not pay for harvesting. The real difficulty is that the farmer has had no convenient way of measuring just how good or how poor his business really was or is; that is, he has had no way of measuring its efficiency.

One of the first essentials is a proper analysis of farm activities, such as is recommended by the United States department of agriculture. With the facts that are made available by such an analysis, the farmer can more readily find the strong and the weak points in his system of management and thus make improvements with some confidence in the results. A farmer may not know off-hand what his total farm income is, but he does know with considerably accuracy the facts necessary to determine this income. The final result of the analysis of a farm business is determined mainly by a few large items which the farmer does know quite accurately. The first requisite, therefore, is to assemble and classify properly the items, large and small, that go to make up the yearly totals.

IMMENSE LOSS BY RODENTS

Estimated $300,000,000 Lost to Farmers by Work of Different Little Creatures.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

There are scores of different kinds of rodents to be found in the United States, causing loss in food and feed crops estimated at $300,000,000. For the community interested in making the most out of its agriculture this fact emphasizes the importance of persistent concerted campaigning against these creatures.

Some New Paris Ideas in Gowns

Premet Model Represents All That Is Original and Novel In World of Dress.

CANES AND GAUNTLET GLOVES

Added Features of Louis XV Outfit Are Said to Be Practical, Except for Formal Events or Evening Wear.

Here are two sketches of a costume which may truthfully be called "the newest of the new," writes a leading Paris fashion correspondent. It is a Premet model and it represents all that is original and novel in the Paris world of dress. Here you have the true Louis XV outline. A robe made of taffetas in two shades of peacock blue, mounted over a black lace underdress and finished with a plain, tight-fitting corsage.

This corsage fastens, almost invisibly, down the back and it is important to observe that the neck opening is quite unexpected. In front it is cut round while at the back there is a peak, ending in a small bow. This is one of Premet's new ideas and this particular model has had a great success. It will be copied widely and in many different materials.

You will see that the skirt is made in two parts, one side in pale blue silk and the other in a darker shade. The corsage is in the light color, with cuffs of darker blue. Absolutely no trimming is introduced on the corsage. This is an idea which is generally followed by the leading dressmakers of the Rue de la Paix. Nowadays one rarely sees an elaborately trimmed bodice, and many of the more expensive models are plain, as indicated in the sketch.

It is very important to realize that these fitted corsages are worn over what may be called "a natural corset;" that is to say, there is no indication of a small waist, the outline is intentionally boyish and for this reason it is youthful. If you have seen the jackets worn by French fencing masters you will realize at once the effect which our great dressmakers wish to obtain.

Stiffened at the Sides.

The Premet model was slightly stiffened at the sides, right on the hips, and the silken material was gathered at the waist. The corsage was separate, though it looked as though it were attached to the skirt.

These fitted bodices are going to be immensely fashionable. They need to be perfectly cut and fitted, otherwise they are far from becoming. I have seen them in silk jersey-cloth, worn over skirts of silk or fine serge and the combination was highly successful.

With the new Louis XV dresses long, very thin canes will be carried and gauntlet gloves worn. This is going to be a picturesque winter, but in reality the new styles are quite practical, except for evening gowns, and those of the more ceremonious order; we do not find many pannier dresses shown in the Rue de la Paris; the Louis XIV and Louis XV outlines are much in evidence, but now that we have settled down a little the ultra-sensational models seem to have disappeared.

The new Louis XV bodices can be fastened at the back, at one side or directly in front. In each case the fastening is made as invisible as possible, unless a close row of small buttons be introduced. Premet is using a great deal of taffetas, plain and shot; but indeed the same thing may be said of all the other famous dressmakers of Paris. It is the year of taffetas.

Chez Redfern recently saw a wonderful wrap made of moleskin-picked skins—which was lined with rose Dubarry brocade and finished with an enormous collar of mink. The combination of fur was unexpected but very successful. Mink is to the fore for every possible purpose. It is indeed the fur of the year.

Mink barrel-wraps are in great demand, and the linings are always an important point. The loveliest brocades are used for this purpose, and also shot taffetas with irregular designs worked in fine silks, or striped taffetas with hand-embroideries running down certain of the lines. Linings are once more of vital importance. It is now so much the fashion to wear handsome wraps at restaurant teas or afternoon dances, throwing them off carelessly over the back of a chair, that it is really necessary to give close consideration to the linings.

Musquash is more fashionable than ever and it is often combined with mink—in collar form—or with kolinsky. For young girls an entire wrap of musquash is considered more correct than one trimmed with another fur, and, as a matter of fact, a big, loose wrap or circular cape made entirely of musquash is a particularly youthful garment.

I have seen wonderful capes which were arranged entirely in graduated flounces and made of astrakhan or moleskin. It is easy to understand that such mantles need to be most carefully cut and fitted; otherwise they would look very heavy. One model, created for the Paris stage, was made of broadtail with a narrow border of squirrel at the edge of each shaped flounce; the cape was circular and the lining was gray satin, finely hand-painted in Japanese style.

Short Barrel Wraps for Girls.

Our girls will wear short barrel wraps when going to dance teas or long cape wraps if a specially dainty frock is to be worn. Now that afternoon entertainments are so fashionable it is most convenient to have smart wraps which are so warm that they can be worn, comfortably, over crepe de chine or chiffon dresses.

Fichu-capes in fur are novel and practical. I have seen them in squirrel—one of the most fashionable short-haired furs of the year—and also in musquash and ermine. One model, worn by Robinne at an afternoon concert, was made of the latter fur. There were no tails and the fichu ends were finished with broad black moire ribbons, tied in a big loose bow at the back.

The fichu was crossed in front and it boasted a high Medici collar, which made an ideal frame for Robinne's lovely face. Short, straight ties—very wide and supple—are fastened in front with laced ribbons. Other models are fastened with big fur buttons and silken loops. Cecile Sorel has introduced a short shawl in ermine, which gave a curiously old world aspect to its wearer.

This shawl was only long enough to cover the hips, and it was worn quite carelessly, thrown open in front and gathered up over the arms, just as our great-grandmothers used to wear their cashmere shawls.

Hand-Painted Flowers on Hats.

I have seen a great many hand-painted flowers on the new millinery; there is a special preparation which makes them comparatively rainproof and the colors are very lovely. Kid is used for all sorts of unexpected purposes: for painted and embroidered handbags, for waistcoats, cuffs, hat crowns, collars on tailored suits and so on. Embroidered kid waistcoats are shown in some of the very best ateliers.

Back View of the Popular Blue Taffeta Model.

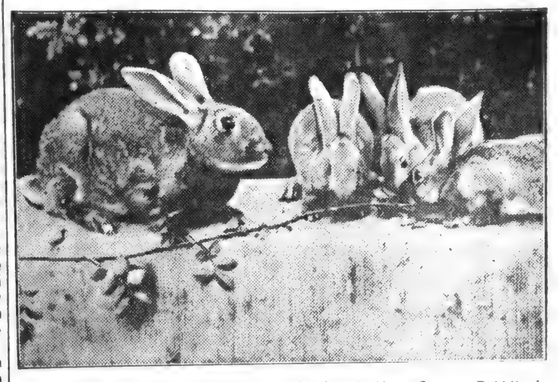
Waistcoats with elaborate buttons are demanding constant attention. It is the moment of waistcoats and never have I seen more lovely buttons than those shown at the present moment. One of the successful novelties takes the form of triangular buttons made of ivory and inset with tiny steel facets, and flat ivory buttons rimmed in jet. A valuable set of six buttons is considered an ideal present for a bride or for a favorite niece on her birthday.

INCREASING DEMAND FOR RABBIT MEAT OFFERS OPPORTUNITY TO HELP INCOME



A Family of Belgian Hares—The Flesh of Home-Grown Rabbit Is Practically Indistinguishable by Taste From Chicken

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

For many years rabbits have been raised in this country as pets and as fancy stock for competitive exhibitions, but now it has become profitable for many living in the country, and even city dwellers, to raise these animals for the food market. Until war and postwar prices set everyone to thinking about the food problem, there had been no real incentive to breed rabbits for practical ends, as they were not actually needed for food, and better fur than theirs could be had for little money. However, the great change in economic conditions has materially changed their status.

The general introduction of any kind of a food product is dependent upon the public's familiarity with that product. American people in general have learned something of the value of rabbit meat through the rather general use of wild rabbits, which were hunted and trapped by farmers and sportsmen and others in almost all parts of the country. Home-grown rabbits do not have the gamy flavor of wild rabbits, their flesh being practically indistinguishable by taste from that of chicken.

Because of the well-remembered Belgian hare boom which took place some years ago, there is considerable disinclination on the part of many to undertake rabbit raising for profit. Experiments along this line in the past should not be confused with rabbit raising as now advocated by the New Zealand Red.

United States department of agriculture. The Belgian hare boom spread rapidly for a time and continued as long as there was a demand for breeding stock, but when this demand was changed to a meat basis the boom collapsed, as there was then no real need for a new source of meat.

Demand for Rabbit Meat.

Experience in more recent years has proved, however, that rabbit raising for the purpose of supplying the meat trade is profitable. City and suburban dwellers are raising rabbits in backyards. Although the total production is as yet comparatively small, it is steadily increasing. In such scattered sections of the country as California, Washington, Colorado, Kansas, Missouri, the domesticated rabbit is recognized as a regular meat animal. Rabbits are shipped alive to market in crates or are neatly dressed ready for cooking and are packed in a sanitary manner for transportation.

There are numerous instances of profitable rabbit raising. A resident in Kansas City, Kans., has raised 300 to 400 pounds of rabbit meat for use on his own table, at a cost of about half the present meat prices. A large institution in Nebraska has raised rabbits instead of poultry and reports the meat more satisfactory than chicken, and also a most profitable product. On a county farm in Washington, rabbits were grown to provide for the county hospitals, furnishing a substitute for chickens.

Europeans Eat Many Rabbits.

Further evidence of the marketing possibilities in rabbit raising are to be found in the experience of France and Belgium and other European countries. In the greater part of Europe, except the most northerly portions, rabbit breeding was an industry of considerable importance before the war. About 100,000,000 rabbits were marketed annually in France, approximately 2,000,000 were raised in Belgium per year for home consumption and export. The value of rabbits annually exported from Ostend to England exceeded $1,000,000, while, including wild hares raised in English preserves, England itself was producing from 30,000,000 to 40,000,000 rabbits. The consumption in one year before the war in London amounted to half a million pounds daily and in Paris to 200,000 pounds. What has been done in the way of developing a market for rabbit meat in these countries indicates clearly the large possibilities for progressive growers in the United States. The shortage of meat furnishes an opportunity which should be made highly profitable to the rabbit grower.

Another economic phase of the question is indicated by the fact that meat produced at or near home saves freight and several profits. The example of Europeans and the experience of breeders in America alike indicate that the utility rabbit, particularly if grown near the market, can be made a large factor in solving the meat problem, to the mutual profit of consumers as well as producers. There are seven breeds of rabbit which come under the designation of utility animals. They are comprised in three types, represented by the so-called Giants, the Belgian hares, and the New Zealand red rabbits.

Feeding Problem Simple.

The problem of feeding the rabbits is relatively simple. In every garden there is feed that is apt to be wasted unless it is given to the rabbits. Dandelions are a pest in lawns, but they are excellent to feed, with alfalfa and clover and oats or other grain, as also leaves of the burdock, yellow dock, and other weeds and prunings from apple and cherry trees. The construction of proper housing for these animals is relatively simple. The United States department of agriculture is prepared to furnish advice on the breeding and marketing of rabbits and to offer practical suggestions regarding their feeding and housing.

DISEASED CARCASSES DANGEROUS AS FOOD

Numerous Instances Where Hogs Contracted Tuberculosis.

Live Stock Owners Urged to Have Careful Autopsy Made on Animals Dying Because of Sickness—Feeding Offal Is Bad.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Warning against the feeding of diseased cattle carcasses to hogs is sounded by the United States department of agriculture. A conference of state and federal officials, to deal with matters of tuberculosis eradication, brought to light numerous instances where hogs contracted tuberculosis after feeding on carcasses of tuberculous cattle. In one case nearly an entire drove of hogs showed lesions of tuberculosis which at first the owner could not account for. Later he admitted to the veterinarian investigating the case that several months before he had fed to the hogs the carcass of a cow that "never did very well."

The bureau of animal industry urges live-stock owners to have a careful autopsy made on animals dying on the farm or killed because of sickness, in order that the definite cause of trouble may be learned. Carcasses that show lesions of infectious diseases should not be fed. Instead, such carcasses should be cared for so that no part can be eaten by hogs. Thorough destruction of the carcass by burning, or by deep burial under a liberal application of quicklime, is the proper procedure in such cases. Attention is called also to the danger of feeding offal from slaughtered animals to swine, as such a practice is another source of infection.

DECEMBER

INDIANA NEWS

Terre Haute.—Production of coal in the Indiana fields is rapidly increasing, according to reports received at the headquarters in this city of the Indiana Bituminous Coal Operators' association. The north field, in this vicinity, produced 34,225 tons one day the past week, the latest figures available, while the south field, comprising the Greene and Sullivan counties' mines, produced 24,054 tons, making a total of 58,279 tons. Practically all mines are at work with the exception of two in the Clinton field, where the men refuse to accept the terms of the agreement which ended the nation-wide strike. The men at the Fayette mine in Fayette township, who refused to work recently because their working clothes had not been properly dried, have returned to work.

Indianapolis.—Harry B. Smith, adjutant-general of Indiana, recently put in the mails 500 checks for Indiana soldiers who at the beginning of the war bought their own clothing or parts of equipment and who had not been reimbursed by the government. The last legislature appropriated $52,000 for the purpose of reimbursing and the federal government, it is expected, later will reimburse the state. The state department is having trouble finding the soldiers, who made the expenditures of from $10 to $12 each. Two-thirds of the soldiers never have petitioned for reimbursements.

Indianapolis.—The wheat planted this fall by Indiana farmers is 82 per cent less than the amount planted last fall and approximates a reduction of 922,000 acres, according to a report issued by the co-operative crop reporting service for Indiana. The early sown wheat is full of Hessian fly and some of the late sown is in poor condition, while that sown between the fly-free dates and November 1 is in good condition. The rye acreage has been reduced 10 per cent, as compared with last year. It amounts to 38,000 acres. The condition is about average for this time of the year.

Evansville.—The Methodist Episcopal church will build three social centers in Evansville at a total cost of $250,000, it was announced, following the Methodists centennial celebration here. Part of the cost will be met by the national centenary fund. The proposed buildings will have all the features of the Young Men's Christian association and the Young Women's Christian association and will serve as social centers for Methodist boys and girls of the city.

Bluffton.—Wells county farmers will build a large stock pavilion here at a cost of $30,000. Those most actively engaged in the campaign for such an improvement are the purebred livestock breeders in the county. This pavilion will be used for salesrooms and display of stock, especially during the Bluffton street fair.

South Bend.—The decision of Judge Pence in the Madison circuit court at Anderson, that the county unit road tax law is valid will not prevent the St. Joseph county case of a similar nature being carried through to the state supreme court, Stuart MacKibbin, attorney for the St. Joseph county commissioners, announced.

Newcastle.—The city council has passed an ordinance compelling motor bus drivers to come to a stop before crossing railway tracks. The ordinance follows close on an accident, when a motorbus and a passenger train were in collision, resulting in the fatal injury of one person.

South Bend.—South Bend is no place for loafers. Following orders from Peter Kline, chief of police, patrolmen are rounding up idle men and bringing them before Frank Gilmore, judge, in the city court, where they receive heavy sentences under the vagrancy act.

Aurora.—Wheat sowed early has taken root and stooled well, which gives it good prospect to stand the freezing and thaws this winter and next spring. The autumn weather was not favorable, consequently not a large acreage was sowed.

Logansport.—James A. West, city judge, has ruled that the city ordinance recently passed prohibiting the playing of cards in public places is invalid. He said that the city has no power to pass such an ordinance.

Portland.—John Current, county treasurer, has reported that taxes collected for Jay county amounted to $268,716.80, and the total of the delinquent tax list is $19,151.70.

Monticello.—An organization to be known as the Monticello District Breeders' association has been formed by Hereford breeders of this community.

Gary.—The Gary Country club was organized and has contracted for 110 acres of ground five miles south of Gary on which will be erected before spring a $150,000 club house. The club will have golf links, tennis courts and swimming pool.

South Bend.—F. R. Carson, mayor, and the board of works have prepared to hold up plans of various railroads entering the city whereby the south part of South Bend would be covered with a network of switches and sidings. The railroads have indicated their plans in a series of condemnation suits against property.

Indianapolis.—Ele Stansbury, attorney general, in an opinion to the state board of tax commissioners on a school city's constitutional debt limit and warrants issued in anticipation of a succeeding year's revenue rules, says: "Where a tax levy has been made in 1919 by a school city with which to conduct its schools and the levy has been anticipated by the issuance of warrants payable in 1920 out of money raised by the levy, such warrants are not evidences of indebtedness required to be considered in determining whether the indebtedness of the school city exceeds the 2 per cent constitutional limitation provision of the state constitution."

Indianapolis.—A bill to be presented at the special session of the legislature authorizing the city of Indianapolis, Marion county and the state to co-operate in the purchase of a site and in the construction of a building or buildings as a memorial to the soldiers and sailors of the world war, and to be used as the American Legion national headquarters, will be drafted by four attorneys, it was decided at a conference between Mayor Jewett and the committee of six which has charge of plans for the headquarters.

Washington, D. C.—A pension of $12 has been granted Sarah A. Wyss of Berne, and a pension of $17 has been granted John H. Grigsby of Princeton. Pensions of $25 have been granted Susan B. Brown, Terre Haute; Elizabeth Kyle, Bruceville; Jennie Myerhoff, Evansville; Mary E. Shirley, Lebanon; Ida May Ashby, Frankton; Rachael Orminger, Jonesboro; Catharine Goodby, Kirklin; Mary A. Adams, New Albany; Rebecca Edwinson, Elkhart; Mary J. Farnsley, Medaryville; A. Gray, Cloverdale; Sarah House, Elwood; Sarah M. Montgomery, Bryant; Emily C. Thomas, Fairmount; Alice N. Roble, Richmond, and Alice A. Tower, Rockport.

Washington, D. C.—What the government is doing for soldiers who were crippled or who contracted disease in the war is perhaps no better illustrated than by the list of former Indiana soldiers who are now taking vocational education work of various kinds at the expense of the government. The list for Indiana on October 4 contained 201 names and since that time a number of others have been added. Before that, some men received vocational instruction of various kinds and completed or dropped out of their courses.

Indianapolis.—Indiana farmers are opposed to government ownership of railroads and to strike methods of settling industrial disputes, according to a telegram sent by John G. Brown, president of the Indiana Feedration of Farmers' Associations to J. R. Howard, president of the American Farm Bureau association. Mr. Howard, in a telegram to the Indiana federation, had asked whether Indiana farmers favor continuance of the present federal operation of railroads, and whether they would support a government tribunal to settle labor disputes.

Indianapolis.—The supreme court, in reversing a decision by the Lake county superior court, held that a person or firm providing materials for construction of a building by a contractor cannot assert a lien against the property of the owner, if he has provided in his contract a covenant with the contractor that no mechanic's lien be filed against the property. The court held that this rule holds good whether the person providing the building matrials knew of the provision in the contract against the mechanic's lien or not.

Evansville. — Funkhouser Post, American Legion, of this city, has passed resolutions against corporations that are alleged to have refused to hold open jobs for men who volunteered during the world war. A committee was appointed to investigate. The members of the post demand that all former service men who are not inefficient be reinstated to positions held before they entered the service. The resolutions ask that service men be placed in all political offices as deputies and clerks after January 1.

Seymour.—Despite the high cost of building materials, the improvement record for December has set a new high mark in this city. Much building and remodeling is in progress in the business district and new houses are being erected in all parts of the city. Persons who intended to build in the spring have difficulty in finding contractors who will accept the work.

Crawfordsville.—Salary increases of 30 per cent and more were granted to the members of the faculty of Wabash college by the board of trustees at the semiannual meeting of the board. All full professors will receive a maximum salary of $3,000, which is an increase from the former maximum at $2,400 of about $600.

Bremen.—The Bremen Fair association, which for the last thirty years has conducted one of the best country expositions in Indiana, will be disbanded, the stockholders by a vote of 77 to 7 having decided to dispose of the fair grounds and to pay off the indebtedness.

Indianapolis.—A committee of the Indiana Scool Men's club has submitted to Governor Goodrich proposed amendments to the 1919 tax law with the request that if he calls a special session of the legislature the proposed amendments be placed before it for consideration. The amendments provide for modifying the authority of the state board of tax commissioners so that the board would have only appellate power in the determination of tax levies other than state levies, or in the issuance of bonds by a municipality, and that the appellate power be subject to referendum.

ROAD BUILDING

ORDER ALL MATERIAL EARLY

United Action Urged to Overcome Deficiency in Open-Top Cars—Much Work Ahead.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

While the expenditures during 1919 for hard-surface highways, according to estimates of the bureau of public roads of the United States department of agriculture, will set a new record with a total of $138,000,000, this figure is small in comparison with the computed available total for 1920 or $633,000,000, the spending of which promises to be dependent chiefly on the quality of materials the present limited railway facilities can transport.

The items entering into next year's estimate are: Brought forward from unfinished work, 1919 contracts, $165,000,000; funds available from state and county taxes and federal aid, $273,000,000; one-fifth state and county bond issues not before available, $50,000,000; one-third unexpended balance of state and county bond issues previously available, $45,000,000; available from new bond issues to be voted on in the fall of 1919 and spring of 1920, $100,000,000.

Unless the available open-top cars, many of which normally lie idle in the late winter, are utilized in that slack season the work which can be done will necessarily be curtailed for lack of materials. The total for 1920 is more than four times the amount that has been expended during any previous year for like purposes. Therefore there must be a tremendous increase not only in the material supplies and shipping facilities, but also in the labor supply, and an enlargement of contractors' organizations. First of all, according to Thomas H. MacDonald, chief of the bureau of public roads, the attention of all state, county and city road-building interests should be directed toward overcoming this car shortage.

It has been customary to wait until contractors' organizations were ready to begin work before starting the shipment of material. Under these conditions many thousands of open-top cars lie idle during the latter part of February, all of March, and the earlier part of April. During the past spring the number of open-top cars that were idle totaled more than 250,000. This, of course, was partly unavoidable, owing to the late date at which work got under way, following the signing of the armistice. By awarding contracts as early as possible, contractors will be able to ascertain their material requirements at different points, and so will be in position to place orders dependent on rail transportation a considerable time in advance.

While the placing of material in storage, which may result from such a course, involves some expense, it will be small compared to the loss that will result if contractors are not in a position to go ahead with the work because of lack of materials. In view of the experience of 1919 and the greatly increased program for next year, it seems probable, according to the bureau of public roads, that contracts which are not awarded during the winter months will have little opportunity for being supplied with materials which require transportation.

CEMENT RAIL FOR HIGHWAYS

Invention of Texas Man Relates More Particularly to Safety Road Making Means.

The Scientific American, in illustrating and describing a cement rail for highways and roads, the invention of J. F. O'Rourke of El Paso, Tex., says:

This invention relates generally to roads and highways for vehicular traffic, and more particularly to safety road making means in the form of spaced parallel rails, which may be

PROMOTE GOOD EARTH ROADS

For Most Soils Light Grader and One-Horse Drag Will Prove Most Beneficial.

For most of our road soils, the use of a light grader once or twice a year and the systematic use of a light, one-horse drag to smooth and compact the road after every rain, will do more toward promoting good earth roads than any other method.

TAKE TIME TO SMILE

Learning a Dangerous Lesson.

"Make hay while the sun shines," quoted the joyous philosopher.

"It sounds like good advice," replied Farmer Corntossel; "but scarcity, they tell me, is the cause of high prices. Did it ever occur to you that the more hay you make the lower the price you're liable to get for it?"

Autocratic Inference.

"I guess we'll cut out that line of my speech," said Senator Sorghum, "about my being a public servant."

"It is a good old phrase."

"Yes, but it has had its day. As household relationships go just now, claiming to be a servant sounds just a trifle bossy."

NO DISLOYALTY ALLOWED.

"Is Grace jealous of her husband?"

"Jealous? Why, on their wedding trip she wouldn't even let him admire the scenery."

Aversions.

Of all the kids I've known, I'll state,
These cause most discontent—
The ones that try to imitate
The comic supplement.

Queer Action.

"Is Maude color blind?"

"No; why do you ask?"

"Because when she wanted to find the Green family, she looked in the Blue Book."

Tact.

"I suppose this bread of mine is not to your liking."

"It makes me pity father when he had to eat the kind mother used to make."

Beyond Him.

"What a wonderful linguist that man is! Is there any tongue he hasn't mastered?"

"Yes; his wife's."

His Drawback.

"This new writer has a certain rude strength."

"Then how could he expect to succeed in polite literature?"

Quite Enough.

"The cook says she wants some more crash in the kitchen."

"I must say I don't, since I heard her washing the dishes out there."

He Knew.

"Don't you realize how much your life means to me?"

"Sure; if I die you get my insurance."

Cheap Sympathy.

"Closeman lets his friends' misfortunes touch him deeply, doesn't he?"

"Yes; without letting his friends do the same thing, however."

Lost Experiences.

"I wonder what cotton gin could have tasted like?"

"I guess it was the kind that left the woolly taste in your mouth."

Sympathetic.

Mr. Smart—I give my voice for a permanent standing army.

Mrs. Dull—Why don't you want the poor things to sit down?

Quite Right.

"Ma, I am going to give Mr. Smith his conge."

"Of course, you give it to him. You hadn't any business to take it from him in the first place."

Still at His Trade.

Jack Tar—Hello, Jinks! What are you doing nowadays?

Landlubber—Carpentering.

Jack Tar—What are you building?

Landlubber—Air castles.

Sure Thing.

"It was a silk umbrella," said the hotel boarder, "and it had a long rosewood handle that was hooked in the end."

"That's nothing," said the hotel clerk. "I had an umbrella with a gold handle once, and it was hooked in the end, too."

Naturally.

"There is no use in splitting hairs in that argument."

"Why not?"

"Because it is over bald facts."

A Misunderstanding.

"My back is to the wall."

"When you scratch it don't mar the wallpaper."

"Tying the Knot."

A priest at a wedding in old Babylonia used to take a thread from the garment of the bride and another from that of the bridegroom. These he tied together into a knot, and presented to the bride as a symbol of the binding nature of the union between her and her husband. Hence the expression, "tying the knot."

Paper Saving Urged.

Save the paper, says the American Forestry Magazine of Washington, which urges a paper-saving campaign in the schools and that business write the carbon of replies on the back of the letter received wherever possible, thus cutting filing and paper bills. Why Your Watch Is Fast.

Continual alteration of the regulator of your watch will not insure regular time-keeping unless you avoid jolting. Very often a watch gains time simply because the wearer unconsciously jumps or jerks while walking. This results in an extra coil of the hair-spring getting between the two pins of the regulator. It replaces itself by another sudden movement of the body and returns to normal timekeeping.

GREEN'S AUGUST FLOWER.
Constipation invites other troubles which come speedily unless quickly checked and overcome by Green's August Flower which is a gentle laxative, regulates digestion both in stomach and intestines, cleans and sweetens the stomach and alimentary canal, stimulates the liver to secrete the bile and impurities from the blood. It is a sovereign remedy used in many thousands of households all over the civilized world for more than half a century by those who have suffered with indigestion, nervous dyspepsia, sluggish liver, coming up of food, palpitation, constipation and other intestinal troubles. Sold by druggists and dealers everywhere. Try a bottle, take no substitute.—Adv.

THAT CHANGE IN WOMAN'S LIFE

Mrs. Godden Tells How It May be Passed in Safety and Comfort.

Fremont, O.—"I was passing through the critical period of life, being forty-six years of age and had all the symptoms incident to that change—heat flashes, nervousness, and was in a general run down condition, so it was hard for me to do my work. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was recommended to me as the best remedy for my troubles, which it surely proved to be. I feel better and stronger in every way since taking it, and the annoying symptoms have disappeared." — Mrs. M. GODDEN, 925 Napoleon St., Fremont, Ohio.

Such annoying symptoms as heat flashes, nervousness, backache, headache, irritability and "the blues," may be speedily overcome and the system restored to normal conditions by this famous root and herb remedy Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If any complications present themselves write the Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., for suggestions how to overcome them. The result of forty years experience is at your service and your letter held in strict confidence.

BAD BREATH
Often Caused by
Acid-Stomach

How can anyone with a sour, gassy stomach, who is constantly belching, has heartburn and suffers from indigestion have anything but a bad breath? All of these stomach disorders mean just one thing—Acid-Stomach.

EATONIC, the wonderful new stomach remedy in pleasant tasting tablet form that you eat like a bit of candy, brings quick relief from these stomach miseries. EATONIC sweetens the breath because it makes the stomach sweet, cool and comfortable. Try it for that nasty taste, congested throat and "heady feeling" after too much smoking.

If neglected, Acid-Stomach may cause you a lot of serious trouble. It leads to nervousness, headaches, insomnia, melancholia, rheumatism, sciatica, heart trouble, ulcer and cancer of the stomach. It makes its millions of victims weak and miserable, listless, lacking in energy, all tired out. It often brings about chronic invalidism, premature old age, a shortening of one's days.

You need the help that EATONIC can give you if you are not feeling as strong and well as you should. You will be surprised to see how much better you will feel just as soon as you begin taking this wonderful stomach remedy. Get a big 50 cent box from your druggist today. WORLD'S BIGGEST NITRATE PLANT

Mammoth Explosives Factory in Alabama Built in Eight Months.

ALL SPEED RECORDS BROKEN

Could Supply 13 Per Cent of Allies' Needs Had War Continued.

By GARRET SMITH.

Lifting the ban of war secrecy has just now brought to light for the first time one of the most stupendous feats of construction in history—the planning and building in less than one year of the largest ammonium nitrate plant in the world and of a city around it for the housing of its 25,000 workmen and their families. At the same time is revealed one of the chief reasons why Germany suddenly surrendered a year ago. The German high command knew that the United States was ready at Muscle Shoals, Alabama, to manufacture 13 per cent of all the high explosives needed by all the Allied armies on all fronts in the expected drive of the following spring.

The first person on construction work reached Muscle Shoals on November 26, 1917. On February 16, 1918, ground was first broken for a permanent plant building. On October 26, 1918, eight months and eight days later, the manufacturing plant had begun the production of ammonium nitrate.

When America entered the world war in April, 1917, she had no means of producing the enormous quantities of high explosives necessary to provide the huge army she planned to raise. The very fact that our industries were already worked to capacity providing ammunition to the allies seemed to make further production for our own use impossible.

Fertilizer Process Turned to War Use.

At this juncture the Ordnance Department turned to cyanamid, a commercial fertilizer, which had for some years been produced successfully at Niagara Falls, by a process the American rights of which were obtained in 1907 from Germany by Frank Sherman Washburn, head of the American Cyanamid Company.

By this process cyanamid was produced by extracting nitrogen from the air and combining it with calcium obtained from limestone rock and carbon from coke. By putting cyanamid through three more processes both ammonia and nitric acid can be extracted from it and combined into the explosive, ammonium nitrate. Mr. Washburn was invited to present plans and estimates for the construction in the shortest possible time of an ammonium nitrate plant at Muscle Shoals, Alabama, and a contract between his company and the United States was entered into under date of November 16, 1917.

To have general supervision of planning and carrying out the work an organization known as the Air Nitrates Corporation was formed to act as agent of the Ordnance Department. This corporation provided the general designs, supervised all the work and operated the camp, the town and the plant. It also installed all equipment in the chemical plant. The various other sections of the work were sublet to organizations that were specialists in the directions in which they were asked to help.

New City Built From the Ground.

It was necessary to build a new town to house the laborers. For this Job Westinghouse Church Kerr Company was called in as contractor. This company also built the buildings of the chemical plant. Within four months 12,000 workmen had been assembled and a city capable of accommodating 25,000 inhabitants had been completed, with lodging, restaurants, stores, offices, police headquarters, schools, fire departments, hospitals, motion picture theaters, electric light and sewerage systems.

The construction of the plant proper was begun on February 16, 1918. Just eight months and eight days later the big plant began a steady output of ammonium nitrate. The plant contains 118 permanent buildings, with a roof area of over 36 acres.

To provide the electric current it was necessary to build a steam power electric plant, for it would have taken three years or more to complete the dam and hydro-electric station now under way. This plant, built by the J. G. White Corporation, is one of the largest steam plants for developing electrical energy in the world.

The output of the plant is 300 tons of ammonium nitrate a day, and this can be produced at Muscle Shoals at a cost less than one-half the standard fixed price paid by the Government for ammonium nitrate produced by other methods and one-fourth to one-fifth the cost of other high explosives of equal strength. Compared with the older process of making ammonium nitrate, the savings made by this plant would have paid the $60,000,000 cost of the entire plant in about one and one-half years of operation.

As a military weapon it is one of the wisest and most economical expenditures that the Ordnance Department has undertaken. As an agent in stopping the war and as a future protection to the country its value is incalculable.

JUST WANTED TO TELL HIM

Tompkins Really Had Information of More or Less Value to Impart to Firm's Head.

Tomkins was of a nervous disposition; he was somewhat slow and hesitating in times of emergency.

When he entered an office one day and found a stranger there, instead of the man he wanted, he somewhat lost himself.

"Oh, I beg your pardon!" he began, "but—but are you Mr. Brown, the head of this firm?"

"No; I regret to say I am not."

"I'm sorry, very sorry indeed," went on Tomkins; "I had something I rather wanted to tell him. Do you think he'll be in soon?"

"I'm afraid not. Is there anything I can do for you?"

"Er—yes, perhaps—er, perhaps you'll do as well as Mr. Brown. May I ask your name?"

"Certainly." And the stranger gave it.

"Delighted to meet you," said Tomkins.

"And now, what can I do for you, sir?" asked the new-found friend.

"Oh, it's a very small matter—not of the slightest consequence—er, that is, I came to tell the head of the firm that the building is on fire!"—London Tit-Bits.

MORE THAN HE COULD STAND

Negro Soldier Frankly Outspoken When Fellow Doughboy Sprang an Unusually "Tall" Yarn.

Two negro soldiers of the Ninety-second (Buffalo division) were discussing life in the United States before the war, as they waited for the mess bugle.

"Now, when I was a lion tamer in a circus," began one.

"A lion tamer!" demanded the other incredulously.

"I sure was!"

"What is a lion tamer? I never heard of that trade before."

"A lion tamer is a guy who goes into a lion's cage. He locks the door after him and puts the key in his pocket. Then he goes over to the lion and opens his mouth. Then he takes hold of the lion's tongue and wags it. Then he goes to the door of the cage, unlocks it, and walks out."

"Well, man," ejaculated the other, "You never was a lion tamer, youse just a lyin' fool, dats what you is."

The Small Town Hotel.

Nothing appeals to the visitor to a great city like a comfortable hotel. The stranger likes to visit an inn where he can get a cozy room and a well cooked meal. Nothing hurts a town like poor hotel facilities, or the entire lack of them Strangers "knock" rather than "boost," as they think of discomforts or the time spent in searching for a boarding house. Transient visitors recall how hard it was to get a meal.

It is due St. Joe that its citizens and business men get together and place our hotel on the map once more. We have the location and the building, and it seems to us that it is somebod's "move."

Many People Poisoned

Scores of people meet death each year by a slow process of poisoning that is going on within our bodies. This poisoning is caused by the liver and kidneys failing to perform their proper function. Poisonous matter accumulates within the body and health declines. The unsightly liver splotches, biliousness, headache and dizziness, bad taste in the mouth, coated tongue, a pain in the back or under the shoulder blade, a tired or achy feeling are some of the most common symptoms of this poisoning. If this poisoning it not expelled and the cause removed the resisting power is finally gone and life pays the penalty. Are you of the heedless class or are you safeguarding your health? If you want health you must keep the liver, kidneys and bowels active. Glando Tonic is what you need to restore this activity and expell the poisons Keep on the safe side and use a reliable remedy. Glando Tonic is put up in a treatment form and guaranteed to do the work. Ask your druggist for a large $1 treatment. Take it as directed and you will be surprised to know how much poison was stored up within your body. When the liver is inactive a mucus or slime collects within the stomach and bowels which hinders digestion and the assimilation of food. This is called catarrh of the stomach or bowels. Glando Tonic cuts this slime and mucus and removes it. A nauseated feeling is sometimes experienced when this mucus is beeling loose but as soon as it is removed from the bowels, you will feel fine, the complexion clear, the appet ite return and you will want to tell others of your wonderful cure.

Glando Tonic is sold by druggists or may be secured by sending direct to the Gland-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Indiana.

Pulmotor Saved Pigs.

Penn Yan, N. Y.—When Jacob brook overflowed, two pigs owned by Dr. H. J. McNaughton were swept away and to all appearances drowned. The physician recalled that when he was president of the village he had purchased a pulmotor to be used by the fire fighters, so he sent in a hurry call for the life-saving apparatus. Thinking human lives were at stake the village smoke eaters made a record run to the doctor's home. Twenty minutes after the pulmotor was put in action the patients were able to sit up and take nourishment.

New Year Suggestions

THE NEW YEAR

What will you do in the New Year?
What have you done in the Old?
Shall it come like a benediction,
Shall it leave you callous and cold?
Shall it leave the solemn tolling
Of a gruesome funeral knell?
Or, it comes like the joyous chiming
Of a merry marriage bell.

Have you lifted a load of trouble
By a kindly word or smile
From the shoulder of someone stumbling
O'er the shards of life's long mile?
Will you whisper a word of comfort,
Will you laugh a tear away
And gladden the heart of a brother
Forever and a day?

We stand on a towering mountain,
Far below us sings the sea,
Straight down o'er the crags and bowlders
Lies the path for you and me.
Straight down through the thorns and briers,
And the way is hard and long;
Come, give me your hand, my brother,
Let us seek the sea's soft song.

Let us find the surf's low crooning,
And rest when the journey's done;
Let us dream of the tempting trials
And smile at the victries won.
There, down o'er the crags and bowlders,
Lies our rough and thorny way;
Come, let us depart rejoicing
On the blessed New Year's Day!

One of the fastest games ever witnessed on the local floor was played last Saturday night when the locals defeated a team, representing Zanesville, Ind. The team consisted of Keplinger and Weaver of the Huntington Athletes; Hamilton, Zanesville Indpts.; Plummer and Fryback, Ossian. Keplinger started the scoring with a short throw from center but Baker quickly tied the score. Again the visitors forged ahead by two excellent throws by Hamilton. The locals repeatedly tied the score only to be passed again by the visitors until at the close of the first half the contest stood 20-18 in favor of Zanesville. Coming back strong in the second half, the locals put up a strong defensive barrier and by some flashy passing placed themselves in a six point lead which they maintained throughout the rest of the period. In the last minutes play a couple well placed shots by Vanzile widened the margin to nine points. Spencerville team play the Auburn Y M C A at Auburn, Friday night, and Payne, Ohio, at Spencerville, Saturday night.

Skirt Length Is Topic of Season

There's a new war on! Hostilities are being waged between the moderately short skirt advocated by American designers and the excessively abbreviated frocks insisted upon by the French couturiers, writes a prominent creator of fashions.

The short skirt reaching barely below the knees made its appearance in Paris last year and many stories came across to us concerning the display of silken hosiery observed at the leading French hotels where the fashionable Parisiennes gather for luncheon, tea and evening parties. This fashion of displaying French calves with a frankness that outfranked even the French was not confined to bizarre extremists, but was adopted by the upper classes, the descendants of the old regime, who still constitute the aristocracy of France that dwells in the neigborhood of St. Germain.

When the races at Auteuille and Long Champs corroborated the evidence that the short skirt was an established fact, American designers hesitated and waited to hear the death knell of this fashion vibrate across the Atlantic. Instead of dying young, it continued to grow in favor.

The short skirt on this side of the ocean, which came into prominence several years ago, when a certain theatrical manager dressed his far famed beauty chorus in the short-long skirts reaching eight or ten inches from the floor, had been carried to such vulgar excess by any women lacking both in artistic taste and good breeding, that an attempt to feature the long graceful afternoon gown was made with a large measure of success.

Last season I made my street and afternoon gowns quite long. This year I concede nothing to the French fashion and continue to advocate the long or moderately long skirt. Few women have sufficiently well-shaped legs and ankles to display them in this manner. That is the aesthetic argument against the short skirt. Into the moral question I enter not. The American woman of good taste is capable of judging that for herself. You all know how many actually bow-legged women the short skirt has brought to notice. The woman with such unfortunate physical defects should certainly avoid the short skirt. The older woman who has put on weight looks her worst in short skirts. Youth should possess attractive, slender ankles, yet many young girls show a thickness in their ankles which is far from symmetrically lovely, and very unattractive in a short skirt.

The well modeled physique of the American woman is similar to the Greek ideal. It shows a gradual increase in the fullness of the leg beginning at the ankle and rounding into the calf. The French woman possesses a higher placed calf. Her legs are more like those of the professional dancer, which shows the biceps muscle rising more abruptly from the long slenderness of the ankle. The thinness of French legs makes the women of that country more adapted to wear the excessive short skirt than her American sister.

For these various reasons I am not making my gowns too short. My street dresses and tailored suits are eight inches from the floor and my afternoon gowns are this length and longer, depending upon the line of the drapery. Some are even floor length, which gives charming grace to the full-figured woman. Long draperies of black charmeuse satin, meteor or velvet take off pounds and pounds from the effect of the stout figure. How I wish every woman would realize this!

Gown of Gray Charmeuse Satin Combined With Gray Chiffon.

Dance frocks of net and other sheer materials designed for debutantes and the younger matrons are about eight inches from the floor, and they may be even a trifle shorter. The draped brocades and velvets are invariably much more graceful when given a long sweep of line that accents the height. Crepe chiffon also lends itself more effectively to long, graceful drapery.

Before adopting the short skirt a woman should remember that what may appear chic in Paris, a city of extremists in style, may look ridiculous in a small American city. Even things that are moderately striking where the eye grows accustomed to clothes that are startling and "near freakish," may look quite absurd on the main street of a less cosmopolitan city than New York.

A variety of gowns show the grace of the moderately long skirt. They are offered as an argument against the adoption of the exaggerated skirt by the woman who values the effect of the "tout ensemble" as opposed to the unthinking woman who wants to be in style at any price, even unto sacrificing the grace of her figure. Many figures appear quite charming in the longer lines which would be displayed to a disadvantage in an excessively short skirt.

The gown of black crepe meteor gives slenderness and grace to the full-figured woman and is also becoming to the slender build. The skirt is draped in beautiful lines that cross in front and produce the effect of a bias tunic in the back. The kimono blouse is cut with short sleeves and the opening in the front is filled in with a surplice of silver lace and flesh chiffon that shows a delightful smack of color in "binds" or folds of red, violet and hyacinth blue taffeta. The girdle of black charmeuse displays a new sash treatment that appears to be a continuation of the lines of the skirt drapery. These sash ends emerge from the side front and are carried toward the back, where they are thrown one over the other below the waistline.

Worn with a broad black velvet hat trimmed with graceful sweeps of black paradise, this gown is an expression of grace and gives to almost any woman a distinguished silhouette. Would you choose a skirt a few inches below your knees in preference to the long lines of this model?

The evening gown of geranium and silver brocade casts another vote for the long skirt. This gown is apparently unsupported over the shoulders except by the unusual straps, apparently oblivious of their object in life. In reality two straps of flesh-colored satin follow the lines of the brocade straps and are attached to the back of the gown on either side of the center back.

A gown of gray charmeuse satin combined with gray chiffon falls in Greek-like lines which in the perfection of their drapery cry out against the short skirt. The front of this gown is interesting and shows a closing flattering to the figure. It runs crosswise and fastens down one side where it continues into the bias of the skirt drapery. The one-piece effect of this gown is broken by the belt that defines the waistline on one side and disappears under the bound buttonhole so as to leave the side closing in one continuous line. Gray chiffon folds are an interesting trimming on this gown.

In another evening gown that argues for the long skirt jade-green chiffon pleads eloquently and is ably aided by its unusual trimming, pendants of small jade-green beads strung on a thread.

SEASONABLE GOOD THINGS.

The dessert adds the finishing touch to the meal. It should be appropriate, that is, following a heavy meal be light and dainty, or a meal less substantial may have a more filling dessert. The dessert is valued for its decorative effect as well as for its food value.

Date Pudding.—Boil together ten minutes two cupfuls of water three-fourths of a cupful of brown sugar, and three tablespoonfuls of cornstarch. Add one cupful of sliced dates. Mold in sherbet cups. Garnish with whipped cream and chopped nuts, or pieces of cherry or dates.

Apple Snow.—Pare, core and cut about four apples into quarters. Cover with boiling water and cook slowly until the apples are soft and the water has almost evaporated. Cool, put through a vegetable sieve. Add powdered sugar to taste and fold in as much whipped cream as you have apple pulp. Chill and serve.

Peach Cup.—Take eight canned peaches, two eggs, one-half cupful of milk, one and one-half cupfuls of flour, three teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one-half teaspoonful of salt, and one teaspoonful of butter. Mash two of the peaches and add the well-beaten yolks of eggs. Add the milk and the dry ingredients sifted together. Add butter melted. Beat the mixture in a buttered custard cup, add half a peach, cover with batter, sprinkle the top with sugar and bake in a moderate oven twenty minutes. Serve with whipped cream or a hard sauce.

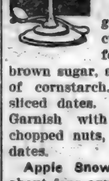
Apricot Ice.—Take four cupfuls of dried apricots, four cupfuls of water, the juice of three lemons, one-half cupful of sugar and the whites of three eggs. Soak the apricots until soft; cook until tender. Press through a potato ricer to remove the skins. Add sugar to the pulp, then water and cook ten minutes. Remove from the fire, cool, add lemon juice and freeze. When the mixture is partly frozen, remove the cover and add the beaten whites of eggs. Cover and finish freezing.

Apricot Whip.—Take two cupfuls of apricots, one-half cupful of sugar, one teaspoonful of lemon juice and the whites of two eggs. Wash and soak the apricots. Cook in the same water until soft. Remove stones and rub through a sieve. Add sugar and cook five minutes. Beat the whites of the eggs until stiff and fold them into the apricot pulp when it is cold. Add lemon juice. Bake in a buttered baking dish for twenty minutes. Serve with cream or custard sauce.

"Go forth this day with the smallest expectations, but with the largest patience, with a keen relish for and appreciation of everything beautiful, great and good, but with a temper so genial that the friction of the world shall not bear upon your sensibilities."

TABLE DAINTIES.

For a cake out of the ordinary, try one made from the following recipe:



Lightning Cake.—Cream a half cupful of shortening, gradually, with half a cupful of sugar, four beaten egg yolks, three tablespoonfuls of milk and one cupful of sifted flour, with a teaspoonful of baking powder. Spread the mixture in a shallow pan and over it spread the frosting whose recipe is given below; dredge with sugar and cinnamon, and bake thirty minutes. For serving, cut in strips about two inches long and one inch wide.

Frosting for Lightning Cake.—Beat four egg whites very light, gradually add three-fourths of a cupful of sugar and a half cupful of blanched and shredded almonds. Spread on the uncooked cake dough and sprinkle with one tablespoonful of sugar mixed with half a teaspoonful of cinnamon.

Rhubarb and Raisin Jelly.—Cook three dozen large, choice raisins in boiling water to cover, until tender. Add more water if needed. Cook until tender two cupfuls of rhubarb cut in small bits, with one cupful of sugar; shake the pan to keep the pieces unbroken. Soften two tablespoonfuls of gelatine in half a cupful of cold water, then add the raisins and hot liquid to dissolve the gelatine; add rhubarb and turn into a mold. When cold and firm, serve unmolded with whipped cream. There should be a scant quart of material, counting the water in which the gelatine was softened.

Baked Ham.—Take a slice of ham two inches thick, parboil in water to nearly cover. Remove the ham to a baking pan, spread with brown sugar and mustard, using a teaspoonful of mustard to two tablespoonfuls of sugar. Add the water from the pan, and baste occasionally. Bake until well browned.

There's folks that chide their neighbors,
An' there's folks that pass you by;
There's folks that hold their troubles
Till you nearly want to cry.
There's folks to crush the weaklings
And there's folks to curb the strong,
An' now an' then there's folks that likes
To jolly folks along.

NUTRITIOUS DISHES.

With eggs at the price they are it does not seem economy to use them in any quantity, but with food combinations two or three eggs will supply the protein needed, yet make an inexpensive main dish.

Eggs and Dried Beef Scrambled.—Chop fine half a cupful of dried beef. Melt two tablespoonfuls of sweet fat in an omelet pan. Add the chopped meat, three-fourths of a cupful of tomato, a teaspoonful of scraped onion or a bit of juice, half a teaspoonful of salt and a few grains of paprika; stir until hot, then add three beaten eggs and cook until the eggs are creamy throughout. Serve on squares of buttered toast or with baked potatoes.

Meat Loaf.—Put through a food chopper one pound of veal steak, half a pound of beef from the top of the round and one-fourth of a pound of cooked ham. Mix well, add two eggs beaten light, a teaspoonful of salt, a dash of paprika, two tablespoonfuls of chicken fat, two milk crackers rolled fine, onion juice, chopped parsley or Worcestershire sauce; shape into a loaf. Make a depression in the center and set in end for end two hard cooked eggs, removed from the shell. Cover the eggs in the loaf and place in a baking pan. Baste with hot fat and bake two hours. Serve hot or cold with a saucer made in the pan.

Codfish Balls.—Put hot boiled potatoes through a ricer, enough to make two cupfuls. Have ready one cupful of salt codfish, picked very fine, covered with cold water; beat slowly until the water is milky; then drain and dry in cloth. Mix the potato, fish, a tablespoonful of butter, paprika and a teaspoonful of onion juice. Beat with a wooden spoon until light and fluffy. Shape in balls, roll in egg, mixed with three tablespoonfuls of cold water, then in soft sifted crumbs. Fry in deep fat. If the balls are made the day before and left uncovered they will cook better.

Do you know what it means to be losing the fight?
When a lift just in time might make everything right?
Do you know what it means, just a clasp of the hand,
When a woman has stood just all she can stand?
Were you sister of hers when the time came of need?
Did you offer to help her? Or didn't you heed?

SOMETHING GOOD TO EAT.

If one wishes a little ice cream for three or four sherbet cups, it may be made in a pound baking powder can. Any kind without acid may be used; fill the can two-thirds full, put on the cover and set into a deep jar filled one-third salt and two-thirds ice, let it stand until chilled, then turn the can in the mixture, occasionally removing the top and scraping down the sides. It will not take long to freeze and this saves using a large freezer when a small amount is needed.

One of the Thousand Isle Dressings.—Take half a cupful each of olive oil and lemon juice, one tablespoonful of grated onion, half a cupful of orange juice, three teaspoonfuls of minced parsley, eight olives chopped fine, eight cooked chestnuts also chopped, one-fourth teaspoonful of salt, one teaspoonful of Worcestershire sauce, a dash of paprika and one-fourth teaspoonful of mustard. Shake in a mason jar until well blended.

Combination Salad.—Cut a small tomato into quarters or eighths leaving the sections together at the stem end. Arrange on lettuce and heap over this a tablespoonful of chopped celery, a quarter of a thinly sliced pear and the tapering end of a banana, which may be placed in the center of the salad. Mix with boiled dressing and heap the minced and sliced mixture around the center. Shake a bit of paprika on the point of the banana and serve. A few grapes, skinned and seeded, may take the place of the pear or both may be added. The combination of flavor is especially pleasing with a mild salad dressing, enriched with whipped cream.

Beans and Bacon.—Take one can of tender string beans, drain and season well. Cut up two slices of bacon in small bits and fry until brown. Remove the bacon to the dish of beans and fry one small chopped onion in the hot fat; when the onion is well cooked, add the beans and when well mixed with the fat, add enough sharp hot vinegar to season well. Serve hot with frankfurter sausage.

BEEF SCRAPS AND FISH MEAL FOR FOWLS ARE ESSENTIAL FOR PRODUCTION OF EGGS

Chickens Are Not Strict Vegetarians—They Thrive on Meat and Fish.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

On the average farm where poultry are kept as a side line, meat meal and fish scraps are usually little used in the ration because, as a rule, they are extremely expensive compared with the other nutrients commonly furnished the fowls. Many farmers make up for this deficiency of protein in the ration by the liberal feeding of skim milk. Others maintain their hens on farm-grown grain without the essential supplementary protein, and as a consequence suffer a pronounced loss in the yield of eggs. It is economy for the general farmer to utilize such high-priced feed as beef scraps and fish meal, as generally he feeds only a small amount of this material while its influence on the egg yield is markedly perceptible and decidedly profitable to the producer. Unless the farmer can supply plenty of protein in the form of rabbits, horse meat, wild game, fish or skim milk, it is advisable that he, by all means, purchase and feed meat meal or fish meal regularly to his flock.

Beef scraps, fish meal, or other poultry nutrients which are rich in protein are essential to produce a regular and dependable supply of eggs. However, in some sections of the country these materials are rarely available on account of the high transportation costs and the distance from production centers. Poultry raisers in these localities have to utilize substitutes. In many districts of the Southwest jackrabbits are used as a valuable poultry feed. Rabbits of this type are not desirable as a human food during certain seasons of the year and, to many persons, they are always objectionable. As a consequence, their use as a food for hens is economic and efficient, as otherwise the meat is usually wasted.

It is desirable to remove the skin from the jackrabbit and suspend the body by means of a cord or wire in the poultry house. Of course, feeding in this manner is advisable only during the period of cold weather when the meat will keep well, or during the summer season when there are enough fowls in the house to consume the rabbit in a short time before the meat begins to decompose.

Good Use for Waste Rabbits.

Jackrabbits are so objectionable in some of the Southwestern farming country that huge drives are organized for the extermination of the pests. Hundreds of ranchers, farmers and hunters will form a compact line and traverse a rabbit-infested territory, killing or driving away all the rabbits which come in their path. If the rabbit drive occurs during cold weather a considerable number of the rabbits may be frozen and kept in this condition for the use of the flock throughout the winter season. The carcasses can then be thawed out and suspended in the poultry house as suggested above, without cleaning, or if desired, the meat can be cooked and fed in this form to the hens and pullets. This is a valuable use of rabbit meat, as ordinarily the hundreds of thousands of carcasses are wasted and allowed to decay on the plains and cultivated fields where the animals were killed.

Horse meat, also, makes a good chicken feed. In some sections where the sanitary laws do not prohibit the feeding of horse meat to fowls, extensive poultry raisers buy old, worn-out dobbins and slaughter them and feed their meat to the poultry. This is done on a large scale in parts of California. Operators report increased egg yields by the hens as a consequence of the liberal use of meat in the ration. Several Arizona poultry farmers formerly made a practice of feeding wild burro meat to their hens with as attractive and interesting results as come from the feeding of horse meat. These ranchers used to pay the Indians bounties for rounding up the wild burros in the mountainous country and killing and transporting the carcasses to the poultry plants.

Fish Make Good Feed.

Practically any kind of wild game or varieties of fish which are not valuable for human food purposes are highly satisfactory in the poultry dietary. Where fish are abundant it ordinarily is the custom for the fishermen to throw back into the water or else throw away any fish which are not highly desirable for eating. The use of these fish as feed for hens would be quite ideal and, apparently, there is splendid opportunity for some poultrymen to locate commercial plants near popular public fishing grounds. Some of the Long Island duck farmers, who turn off as many as 100,000 ducklings a year, make an annual practice of employing fishermen especially to catch fish to feed to the ducks. The fish usually are boiled and supplied to the ducks in a cooked condition, being highly relished and a particularly fattening food.

Rations for Layers.

In order to obtain an abundance of eggs it is necessary to have healthy, vigorous stock, properly fed.

The following are good grain mixtures for laying stock, the proportions being by weight:

Ration 1.	Ration 2.
Equal parts of: Cracked corn, wheat, Oats.	2 parts cracked corn 2 parts oats. 1 part wheat.

Ration 3.
2 parts cracked corn
1 part oats.

A choice of any one of these rations should be scattered in the litter twice daily, morning and evening.

Either of the following suggested dry-mash mixtures should be fed in a dry-mash hopper, allowing the fowls to have access to it at all times.

Mash No. 1.	Mash No. 2.
2 parts cornmeal. 1 part bran. 1 part middlings.	1 part beef scrap 2 parts cornmeal. 1 part beef scrap.

When fowls do not have access to natural green feed, sprouted oats, cabbage, mangels, cut clover, etc., should be fed.

When wet mashes are fed, be sure that they are crumbly and not sticky. Plenty of exercise increases the egg yield.

Fresh, clean drinking water should be always provided. Charcoal, grit and oyster shell should be placed before the fowls so that they can have access to them at all times.

STATE NEWS

Indianapolis.—During the last six weeks there has been a noticeable tendency on the part of contractors to decline to bid on large jobs for next year, according to reports from prominent architects. The bids coming in, they declare, are so far above the estimates that the owners hesitate to award contracts. The principal trouble with contractors seems to be the uncertainty surrounding next year's labor prices. With few exceptions contracts in the building trades expire March 31. Work that can be finished before that time is being bid upon, but it is small work. Many of the largest contractors in the state absolutely refuse to bid on big work that will extend into fall of next year.

Indianapolis.—Although the automobile department of the secretary of state's office has issued 50,097 more automobile licenses this year than in 1918, the number of motorcycle licenses is 117 fewer than last year. No explanation of this was offered by the automobile licensing department. Licenses issued to chauffeurs, showed an increase of 2,169 over last year, and for dealers' licenses the increase was 303. License receipts totaled $1,558,740 and exceeded by $263,612 the license receipts of last year. After deductions of approximately $80,000 a year for department operation are made the net receipts go to the counties.

Sullivan.—Frank M. Daniels, county auditor, has been notified by the state board of tax commissioners that the board has reduced assessments in Sullivan county, $180,036, through action on four applications submitted to the board from Sullivan county asking review and reassessment. The action of the state board came after the books and tax duplicates had been completed by the auditor. It will not be possible to change the books which have been balanced, and it will be necessary to issue refund orders to persons and corporations affected.

Indianapolis.—Tax revenues in Marion county will fall approximately $65,000 below former estimates because of the reductions by the state board of tax commissioners at its fourth session of a number of appealed tax assessments, it is estimated at the board's office. The board put $54,830 on the total valuation and took off $4,625,430, so that the net reduction was $4,570,600, using approximate figures. The total net reduction for the entire state is estimated at approximately $10,000,000.

Jeffersonville.—Farmers of Utica township, who regard themselves among the most progressive in the country, are now doubting whether they have been making any money on their dairy cows and they propose to find out. This was the result of a meeting at which stereopticon pictures illustrating the work of cow testing associations were shown. The farmers will form another cow testing association and get at the facts about their herds, they said.

Indianapolis.—The state conservation commission has rejected a number of offers for the purchase of land adjoining the state forest near Henryville, in Clark county. Richard Lieber, director of the conservation department, said that the prices asked for land were out of proportion to the prevailing land prices in that section of the state.
...ty meetings during the past year.

Elwood.—Building improvements in this city next year will be more expensive than at the present time. On top of the increased cost of lumber and other material, the carpenters' union has announced that its scale of wages, beginning January 1, will be 75 cents an hour instead of 62½ cents.

South Bend.—As the result of an effort started by the police and assisted by the city judge, to clear South Bend of loafers, idle persons have disappeared from the streets of the city. Severe sentences to the Indiana state farm, which were promised by Judge Gilmer to all vagrants brought before him, had the desired effect.

Wabash.—Following the receipt of many complaints the last few days concerning husbands who refuse to work and support their families, and a steady demand for more day laborers, the police department has issued a "work or jail" order.

Evansville. — Local millers report they are receiving an unprecedented number of orders for barreled flour, and construe this as an indication that flour is being hoarded. Flour prices are advancing.

Wabash.—Wheat in Wabash county has been damaged to such an extent by the Hessian fly, according to reports received at the county agent's office, that the 1920 wheat yield will be the smallest in years. Fields in which grass has started to grow will not be touched until spring, but those in which the wheat has been killed and which are barren will be plowed.

Goshen.—Elkhart county farmers met here and formed a federation to affiliate with the Indiana Federation of Farmers. Frank Cast of Osceola township was elected chairman. Each of the 16 townships of Elkhart county has been organized.

Indianapolis.—The establishment of two new divisions of the state board of health, one division to fight tuberculosis and the other to aid children, is expected to take place January 6, when the board is to hold a conference with Governor Goodrich. Each division is to be maintained by a $10,000 appropriation.

Lafayette.—W. H. Baker, a Greene county farmer and member of the house of representatives in the last legislature, is the 1919 king of Indiana corn growers, winning the right to this title by producing 118.2 bushels to the acre on his five-acre plat with which he competed in the annual state five-acre corn-growing contest, conducted by the Indiana Corn Growers' association and agricultural extension department of Purdue university. This figure was announced by R. S. Thomas of Purdue, who had charge of the contest. Fred W. Hartine of Farmers' Retreat, Dearborn county, was second, with 115.4 bushels to the acre, and Logan Holmes of Bloomfield, Greene county, was third, with 110.5 bushels to the acre. Twenty-four men, several times as many as in former years, won gold medals this year for growing more than 100 bushels of corn to the acre.

Indianapolis.—Work already under way for the reconstruction of the State Reformatory, Jegersonville, which was partly destroyed by fire in the spring of 1918, now will proceed in earnest. Governor Goodrich, Superintendent George A. H. Shideler and the legislative visiting committee got together on a reproduction program and agreed to build a new dining hall to cost $64,000; rebuild the ruins of Cellhouse B, so as to make two dormitories out of it at a cost of $29,000, and make the present dining room into a chair factory at a cost of $12,600. Other expenditures may raise the total to $125,000.

Indianapolis.—In an effort to reduce the price of meats and insure a fairer return to the producer a meeting of Indiana live stock farmers will be held here January 5, according to Louis Taylor, secretary of the Indiana Federation of Farmers' associations. The meeting was called by the federation to devise means to reduce the cost of handling the live stock from the producer to the packing house. Representatives from each of the 81 county farmers' associations will attend the meeting. An attendance of more than 250 is expected.

Indianapolis.—L. L. Miller, acting state food and drug commissioner, has received a number of samples of dirty sugar, which, it is reported to the division, is becoming a common article in Hoosier markets. Mr. Miller pointed out that persons who pay present-day fancy prices for sugar are entitled to clean, pure sugar and that they are being imposed on when they must pay for a quantity of dirt at sugar prices. The state chemists believe the sugar has been only partly refined.

Goshen.—Charles H. Crowell, Republican, serving as city treasurer of Goshen, at $900 a year, has been notified that he must vacate his office January 5, as a result of Goshen being advanced from a fifth to a fourth class city. Through the change William H. Charnley, mayor, will draw $2,000 a year instead of $300, and the salaries of many other officials will be increased.

Indianapolis.—Trailers drawn by automobiles as well as by motortrucks must be licensed, Ele Stansbury, attorney general, has declared. The 1919 license law provided that the secretary of state shall issue licenses for trailers to trucks, and a question arose as to what should be done about trailers drawn by touring cars or roadsters. The attorney general held that the law applies to both.

Indianapolis.—Scarlet fever continued to be the most prevalent disease in Indiana in November as in the month before, a state board of health report shows. Births in the state averaged 19.7 of each 1,000 of population and deaths averaged 10.5. Muncie, with a death rate of 10 to each 1,000, topped the record of other Hoosier cities.

Muncie.—Every person arraigned in city court here on a charge of intoxication must explain where he obtained the liquor with which he became intoxicated or receive the maximum penalty. This ruling was made by the city judge. He will receive support from the prosecuting attorney and federal officers who are here investigating liquor cases.

Indianapolis.—With 21 new charters granted in the last few days, the Indiana department of the American Legion now has on its rolls an estimated membership of nearly 30,000, according to announcement by L. Russell Newgent, state secretary. The paid-up membership is 18,000, but many posts have not reported in several weeks.

Indianapolis.—L. N. Hines, state superintendent of public instruction, is making plans for a five-day conference on rural education, to be held at Indiana university, beginning July 12, 1920. The meeting will be the culmination of the rural school movement in Indiana which has been developed through a series of district and county.

Indianapolis.—The state board of tax commissioners approved the following bond issues: Lafontaine, water works, $5,000; Auburn, water works and light plant, $40,000; Portland, power plant, $120,000; South Bend, extension of water system, $400,000.

Gary.—East Gary, a town seven miles southeast of this city, wishes to be annexed to Gary. East Gary has a population of 2,500.

Warsaw.—Dredging and cleaning the Tippecanoe river from Warsaw west to the Marshall county line is proposed in a drainage petition heard in the Kosciusko circuit court by S. N. Stevens of Plymouth, special judge. The proposed drainage would cost $150,000 or more and benefits would be assessed against thousands of land owners in Kosciusko county and against many in Whitley county. A remonstrance has been filed.

LESSON FOR JANUARY 4

PETER PREACHES AT PENTECOST

LESSON TEXT—Acts 2:1-42.

GOLDEN TEXT—Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved.—Acts 2:21.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL—Joel 2:28-32; John 16:7-15; Acts 1:1-26.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Peter telling about Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Story of Pentecost.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Three Thousand Won in a Day.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S AND ADULT TOPIC—The Permanent Meaning of Pentecost.

I. The Day of Pentecost Fully Come (vv. 1-13).

1. Significance of the day. Pentecost means "fifty." It was the feast held fifty days after the wave-sheaf offering (Lev. 23:16). The wave sheaf typified the resurrection of Christ (I Cor. 15:20-23).

2. The gift (vv. 2-4). On this day the Holy Spirit came upon the disciples in a new way, and from that time forward he has worked on a new basis, having the crucified, risen and ascended Christ to present to the world.

3. Upon whom the Spirit came (v. 1, cf. 1:13-15)—the twelve and others, both men and women to the number of one hundred and twenty, showing that the gift of the Holy Spirit was for all believers. It was for this "promise of the Father" that the disciples were to tarry at Jerusalem (Luke 24:49).

4. The marks of the Spirit (vv. 2-4). The sound of a mighty wind (v. 2). This is suggestive of the mysterious, all-persuasive and powerful energy of the Spirit. Tongues of flame (v. 3). Tongues show the practical purpose of the Spirit's gift—witnessing; and the fire indicates his purifying energy burning up the dross, making effective witnessing for Christ. (c) Speaking in foreign tongues (v. 4). This was a temporary endowment for this special purpose.

5. The effects (vv. 5-13). (1) The multitude were filled with amazement and wonder, for these common men were transformed into men of power and influence. (2) Some mocked and foolishly accused the disciples of being intoxicated.

II. Peter's Sermon (vv. 14-47).

His analysis is perfect. He begins with a brief defense and scriptural explanation of the phenomena of tongues (vv. 14-21), and by a threefold argument proves the Messiahship of Jesus (vv. 22-36).

1. The introduction (vv. 14-21). (1) Defense of the disciples against the charge of being drunk (v. 15). This he does by citing Jewish customs, showing that they would not be drunk at such an early hour of the day. (2) A scriptural explanation. He shows that it was a partial fulfillment of that which Joel predicted (vv. 16-21, cf. Joel 2:28-32) would come to pass before the Messianic judgment, namely, an outpouring of the Holy Spirit and the salvation of all who call upon the name of the Lord.

2. The argument (vv. 22-36). It is threefold: (1) From Christ's works (v. 22). He was approved of God among the Jews by his miracles, wonders and signs which God did by him in their midst, with which they were familiar. (2) From his resurrection (vv. 23-32). The Old Testament scriptures had foretold the death and resurrection of Christ (Psalms 16:8-10). The disciples were living witnesses of Christ's resurrection, for they had seen and talked with him, and handled him since his resurrection (v. 32). (3) From his ascension to be at the right hand of God (v. 32). The proof that he had ascended on high was the wonderful miracle of the Spirit's operation in their midst; for he had said that upon his ascension into heaven he would send forth the Spirit. The conclusion is that Jesus of Nazareth is both Lord and Christ, the one of whom Joel prophesied (v. 36), and that the Jews are guilty of an awful crime in crucifying him.

4. The effect of the sermon (vv. 37-42). Many people were convicted of their sins, some 3,000 of whom repented and were baptised. The daily life of these believers was a proof of the Spirit's gift. The evidence that the coming of the Spirit was real is that (1) they continued steadfastly in the apostolic teaching (v. 42), that is, they were learning about Jesus Christ, being taught by the apostles instead of the scribes; they turned away from their blind guides and followed new ones. (2) They continued in fellowship with the apostles (v. 42). This fellowship was in the spirit, around Christ as the head; the one body being illustrated by the one loaf. (3) They continued in prayer (v. 42).

A Prayer.

Almighty and living God, we beseech thee to look with love and mercy on us. Keep us in thy faith and fear. Give us grace to resist the devil, and to renounce all his works and temptations. Guard us from the lusts and sins of the flesh. Shield us from the corruption of the world. Make us diligent and faithful in our appointed work. Keep us patient under trial. In anxiety and worry, help us to find trust and peace in thee. All of which we ask through Jesus Christ our Lord and Savior. Amen.

In the Hospital.

"The girl patient over yonder is light-headed, doctor. Will she die?"

"She's dyed already to get it that color, nurse."

"Cascarets" for Liver and Bowels bring back Smiles

Turn the "kill-joys" out—the headache, biliousness, indigestion, the sick, sour stomach and misery-making gases—turn them out tonight and keep them out with Cascarets.

Millions of men and women take a Cascaret now and then and never know the misery caused by a lazy liver, clogged bowels, or an upset stomach.

Don't put in another day of distress. Let Cascarets cleanse your stomach; remove the sour, fermenting food; take the excess bile from your liver and carry out all the constipated waste matter and poison in the bowels. Then you will feel great.

A Cascaret tonight straightens you out by morning. They work while you sleep.—Adv.

ARE RULED BY SUPERSTITION

Almost Every Act of a Roumanian, From the Cradle to the Grave, Is Thus Guided.

Roumania is one of the favorite homes of superstition, where superstitions accompany life literally from the cradle to the grave. Before a child is christened it must undergo the important ceremony of its first bath, given in a huge wooden bowl, which also serves as its cradle, at the home of its godmother. If it is a boy there must be poured into the bath a symbolical mixture of corn, wine and honey; if a girl the bath must contain feathers from the wings of a dove and petals of a rose to serve as a prayer to the Three Spinners, believed to be weaving the child's destiny, that her footsteps through life may be as soft as a dove and her face as fair as a flower. A book, a loaf of bread and a rod are offered a boy. If he chooses the book he will be a scholar; if the bread, he will be a thrifty, practical, successful man of affairs; if the rod, which is laid on his back, he will be a ne'er do well, is the belief.

When a man dies there must be placed in his coffin a comb, a bit of soap and a coin to pay the fee due Charon, to ferry him over the River Styx.

SECRETARY GOT HIS CIGARS

Good Work to Credit of Knights of Columbus Commissioner in the British Isles.

Edward A. Ryan, Knights of Columbus secretary, who returned from England recently, tells of receiving two boxes of cigars, sent by Sergt. C. M. Summers of Auburn, Ind., with no address other than a snapshot of Mr. Ryan in a group of soldiers. The cigars and snapshot were sent to Edgar Sharp, Knights of Columbus commissioner in the British isles, and the soldier asked Mr. Sharp to give the cigars to the man in the picture around whose photograph he had drawn a line. Mr. Sharp recognized Mr. Ryan and sent the cigars to him. The picture was taken when Mr. Ryan was helping the soldiers see London. Summers wrote that he desired "to give the cigars to the K. of C. man who had taken him sightseeing around England when he was clean broke."

Another Letter From W. E. Peterson

Layton, Pa.
Dec. 21, 1919

Dear Fred:

This is Sunday and the shortest day in the year of 1919, and where we are, it is now only three o'clock, and the mountains south and west of us have hid the face of the sun from us here in Layton. We don't see the sun in the morning till about nine o'clock, when he shows his face over the tops of the hills. Being in a valley here, at this time of the year, the smoke from the coke ovens and the rail roads seems to settle and often the sun is not visible when there are no clouds. I witnessed one of their mountain storms last week, and if you will recall the cold Saturday with its terrible blizzard two years ago, you may have some idea of what one of these mountain storms is like. Of course, it was not so cold, but as the storm sweeps down from the mountains and up through the valley, you cannot see across the road. I went up on the mountain the other day in an auto with Mrs. Peterson's brother-in-low to deliver some goods up there, and for a mile it was about 45 degrees up but the little Ford truck went "rambling right along," and coming down, it coasted all the way, chains on all four wheels and going to beat the band, round this curve then back around another curve the opposite way. Not being used to such hills and such swift riding, it fairly made my hair stand on end, but it is only pleasure for those living here. In order to show you how they enjoy these hills in the winter, boys and girls will haul a sled (not bobs) about twelve feet long up these hills just for the pleasure of a swift ride down the hill, and, oh boy, how they do come, with perhaps 12 to 15 on the sleigh. They steer the sleigh with a sort of a helm like they have on boats.

One of the most interesting sights I have seen here is an old grist mill now almost ready to tumble down. It was built by George Washington during the revolutionary times to grind corn for his army, then located here. They have tried to preserve it, but it is ready to tumble down from dry rot. I was fortunate enough to secure a piece of the old water-wheel, a part of which I sent to a friend of mine at Washington, D. C., with its history the other piece I am going to bring home with me. The piece I sent to Washington, I requested my friend to have a gavel made of it, and give it to the House of Representatives as a relic.

The storms have been so bad and so cold that I have not as yet visited the coal mines, and another reason is because the mines here are union mines and they were all on the strike and did not go to work till Wednesday of last week. I don't want to go into them till are in full working order, when I can see the "whole show" and operations, with the cable incline running. I could hardly walk into the mines and it is hard enough for me to walk very far there upon it, as my building of "letting the air" down and there last under the top of the ground. I would like to visit the "Pittsburg" mine, the coal dustling coal being owned by Senator A. Coulson, and they are talking with and that is owned some miles from the mouth of the mine. Think of it! Suppose any of the St. Joeites should go in a tunnel three hundred feet under ground and go as far as St. Joe is from Hicksville, but perhaps the road would not be as muddy as they were when we left St Joe. I will give you a full description of the Lowber mines in my next letter. The contract for the coal at these mines consisting of three hundred and ninety acres, was closed in August 1918, the company paying $2,600.50 per coal acre for the coal only, the owner retaining the top (his farm) They now have all the machinery, tipple, tracks etc., and are taking out thousands of tons daily, they have, 250 miners and helpers working and have had the mine working during the past eight months.

Well Fred Mrs. Peterson joins me in wishing you and the Mrs. a Merry Christmas and a Prosperous New Year and the same to all our friends in Old St. Joe.

Yours truly,
W. E. Peterson.

MARKED NEW YEAR

Egyptians Watched for Rising of Sirius and the Sun.

Day on Which They Made Their Appearance Simultaneously Was Heralded by Them as the Beginning of the Calendar.

If a group of people were shipwrecked or otherwise cast upon their own resources, and were to lose track of the date, they would have no easy means of finding it again. Our year is an artificial one, and so must be made by careful study in well-equipped observatories. Without precise instruments it would be difficult to fix the day when the new year begins.

The ancient Egyptians experienced no such difficulty. Their year, from which ours is derived, had a perfectly natural beginning. It always commenced on the day when Sirius and the sun rose together.

The temples of Egypt were really observatories, built to face this or that star as it rose. They were more or less elaborate, but all had as their fundamental plan a long, narrow passage down which the star's rays came, and a dark chamber at the far end where the priest made the observation.

The beginning of the new year was an important event. We can picture the scene as the priests, followed by the scribes, lawyers, merchants, and the curious crowd, wind their way up to the temple in the first streaks of dawn, and take their appointed places. As daylight comes on the interest of everyone is centered on two groups.

Temple in Ancient Egypt, Built So the Rising of Sirius, at the Beginning of the Year, Sent a Ray of Light to the Inner Chamber.

The priests on the roof are straining their eyes for the first glimpse of the coming sun, while those down in the dark chamber are watching for Sirius. Soldiers are stationed around the temple to keep the crowd silent and to prevent stragglers from crossing the path of the star's rays in front of the temple door at the critical moment.

A shout bursts from those on the roof as the sun tops the horizon. The observers below watch their water clocks carefully now as the minutes are told off, and strain their eyes at the narrow opening where Sirius itself flashes into view, and the new year has begun.

The Egyptians discovered that the year has an extra quarter of a day in it. They did it by noting that on some years Sirius and the sun rose almost together, while on others there was an appreciable difference in time, and that these changes repeated themselves every five years. They found the length of the year to within 11 minutes of its true value, which was a remarkable thing to do with the primitive appliances they had at hand.

The Rural Housewives club entertained their husbands and children Friday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Laney Cee. An interesting program was given of recitations by the children and solos were rendered by Miss Jessie Moffett of Auburn and Mrs. Jesse Klopfenstine of Fort Wayne. A puzzle chart illustrating titles of familiar songs was one of the features of the evening. As the titles were guessed a verse was sung. Each one present was asked to give the first recitation they could remember giving, to which nearly all responded. After this Santa Claus came with reindeer and sled and presented each one with a present and a package of popcorn and home made candy. The guests present besides the husbands and children were Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Klopfenstine of Wayne, Miss Moffett of Auburn and George Hart.

Xmas. Services in the Churches.

Christmas services at the churches in St. Joe were all held on Christmas eve. The services at the Lutheran Church were of a miscellaneous nature and the treat was confined to the primary classes. The Methodist Sunday School gave quite an extensive program of an educational nature and an offering was taken for college work amounting to $6.15. A large Christmas tree adorned one side of the stage, beautifully decorated and laden with presents for young and old. Following the program the entire congregation was given a treat of ice cream, cake and coffee. A fine attendance was had and everyone enjoyed the work of the children and young people. The Christian Sunday School gave a miscellaneous program also and the children were greeted with a fine Christmas tree beautifully decorated and bearing presents for them. A treat was given the children.

A most pleasing entertainment was given at Concord church on Wednesday evening. A cantata entitled "A Real Santa Claus" furnished the principle part of the program. The young people of the Sunday school went at the work with their usual vigor. Program was in charge of Mrs. Janette Provines with Mrs. Ina Wyatt at the piano. A pleasing part of the program was the boys orchestra. A large Christmas tree also furnished its appropriate share of the evenings interest, most of those who were present receiving some gift appropriate to the season.

Many People Poisoned

Scores of people meet death each year by a slow process of poisoning that is going on within our bodies. This poisoning is caused by the liver and kidneys failing to perform their proper function. Poisonous matter accumulates within the body and health declines. The unsightly liver splotches, biliousness, headache and dizziness, bad taste in the mouth, coated tongue, a pain in the back or under the shoulder blade, a tired or achy feeling are some of the most common symptoms of this poisoning. If this poisoning it not expelled and the cause removed the resisting power is finally gone and life pays the penalty. Are you of the heedless class or are you safeguarding your health? If you want health you must keep the liver, kidneys and bowels active. Glando Tonic is what you need to restore this activity and expell the poisons. Keep on the safe side and use a reliable remedy. Glando Tonic is put up in a treatment form and guaranteed to do the work. Ask your druggist for a large $1 treatment. Take it as directed and you will be surprised to know how much poison was stored up within your body. When the liver is inactive a mucus or slime collects within the stomach and bowels which hinders digestion and the assimilation of food. This is called catarrh of the stomach or bowels. Glando Tonic cuts this slime and mucus and removes it. A nauseated feeling is sometimes experienced when this mucus is breaking loose but as soon as it is removed from the bowels, you will feel fine, the complexion clear, the appet to return and you will want to tell others of your wonderful cure.

Glando Tonic is sold by druggists or may be secured by sending direct to the Glando-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Indiana.

A real game on Saturday evening between Alumni and K. of P's.

ST. JOE NEWS.

VOL. XXXIV ST. JOE DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA. THURSDAY JAN. 8 1920 NO. 2

Do not be taken in by all the "Reduced-Price" signs you may see and all of the "Fake" sales you read about in the papers.

A merchant must make a profit on his goods or he soon "Goes Broke." The reason why many merchants fail is this: They ask so much for their goods in season that they don't do much business.

Our plan is to treat you right the whole year around and to always give you one hundred cent worth for your dollar all the time.

Don't you want to deal with our sort of a store?

A Real Patriot

That's our good friend Curtis Wankler, on route No. 1.

He believes in The News and what it means to our community more than any one of our subscribers up to this time. He called us up Wednesday morning and ordered the paper sent to the following addresses:

Curtis Wankler, St. Joe.
John Wankler, Butler.
Cleve & Donald Wankler, Butler.
Lewis Wankler, Butler.
Mrs. Stella Reinhart, Butler.
Adrian Wankler, St. Joe.
Mrs. Ida Keller, St. Joe.

Say, but that sure makes the editor feel like putting out a paper. We appreciate the many kindnesses shown us by our growing list of readers and we shall strive to give the people the news of our community at all times. We solicit your assistance. Just call us up and tell us any news.

Poultry Association.

There seems to be some interest in the organization of a poultry club at St. Joe. Grover Ward and Dick Monroe are the main enthusiasts in the project and it is one that could be made a profitable organization to its members in many ways. Any person that would be interested in entering the organization will please notify either of these men and when arrangements are made for a meeting we shall be glad to make it public. The editor has a few chicks and we will be the third guy to enter. Next year at the Farmers' Institute we can put on a show.

About to Locate.

Ray Farver of Jackson township was in St. Joe last Saturday looking up a location for a canning factory. He started up at his home last fall to do work for himself and as the word was sent out from one to another he soon became swamped with work and was not able to meet his patrons half way. He contemplates locating at St. Joe or Spencerville this winter with his outfit and he is there to do business more extensive. St. Joe was able to put up two excellent locations for his business with his residence at hand. Mr. Farver is also contemplating installing a vulcanizing plant which will keep him busy after the canning season is over. We need just such an industry here and the locality would afford a large patronage.

No Decision Given Yet.

No verdict has been rendered by the Public Service Commission in the matter of increase rates for phone service as asked by the St. Joe Telephone Co. The Commission wrote back to the Town Board asking for more information that the protest which they filed might be acted on justly to the Company and the subscribers of the phone. This matter is being attended to by the proper ones and no doubt a decision will be rendered soon.

New Subscribers.

A. Hover and Ray Koch are now receiving The News, each week. Better subscribe this month while the price remains $1.50.

Caught In Rip Saw.

Ray Brouwer is a mighty lucky fellow in spite of his bad luck. Monday, he was working at the saw mill sawing out some lumber for crating and he got his right hand into the saw and his first finger was about one-half sawed off. Ray does not know how it really happened as he said he was taking precaution at the time, he thought. The stub evidently jumped quickly throwing his hand in reach of the saw. Dr. Sheffer fixed the wound up and about all Ray can do now is to loaf.

SPORTING GOSSIP

The three evenings last week St. Joe had basket ball games as follows: Thursday the K. of P team played the Alumni winning with a score of 24-22. Friday evening St. Joe High against Hicksville High, the score being in favor of St. Joe 19-13. The same evening Hicksville second team played St. Joe winning by 27-8. Saturday evening the local K. of P. team played the Fort Wayne Moose locals winning by a score of 15-14. This game closed the week's activities in the realms of the basket ballers and St. Joe was in for a complete victory. The Moose team were some players and were treated so fine by the boys that they at once closed a contract for a return date. It will be announced later when they come back. The K. of P boys are making rapid progress in their team work and Manager Wm. Stuman is feeling mighty good over his chains in securing engagements. Good crowds attended all the games of the week.

HEARD AROUND THE CORNER

Claude Moore is engaged in hauling logs from the James Hamilton farm and Monday he stated that he had not handled better logs in the past five years. He had on a load of three fine, straight red oak logs.

Isaac Moore received a fine black silk handkerchief on Monday of this week, purchased by Daniel Diehl of Butler a short time before his death, which occurred some 2 months ago. There four of the old veterans living that were in Co. H. 88th., Ind., and Mr. Diehl remembered each of them in this way.

Among the New Year activities of the past week in the Sunday School class circles was the Philathea class of the M. P. Sunday School being entertained at the home of Mrs. Wm. Corle, their teacher. The young ladies enjoyed the evening. A number of the young married ladies who were formerly members of the class, were present also. The Live Wire class, Mrs. Fred B. Leighty, teacher, was entertained at her home for six o'clock dinner and eleven were present. After the dinner they were entertained with contests and plans were also laid for the coming months activities.

Notice.

All persons knowing themselves indebted to Allie Goldsmith for services rendered as music teacher, will please make settlement promptly with Miss Marie Goldsmith, St. Joe.

WHO IS WHO NOW

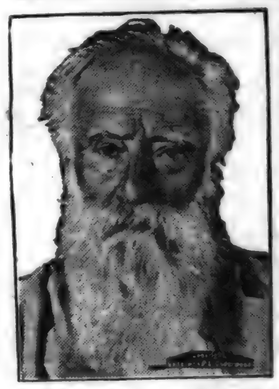
JOHNSON'S CASTOR IS IN THE RING

Senator Hiram Johnson of California, running mate of Theodore Roosevelt on the Progressive ticket in 1912, has formally announced himself a candidate for the Republican nomination for president in the 1920 campaign.

His friends let it be known that considerable work on behalf of the Johnson candidacy has been going on quietly in the far West for a long time, and they predicted he would be able to go into the Republican convention at Chicago next June with a formidable army of delegates.

Senator Johnson's statement announcing his candidacy fairly bristled with defiance of the Republican organization. He made it clear he is going into the campaign for the nomination free and independent of all so-called "organization aid" and that he is determined to carry the fight into every state where his name can be brought before the voters in a direct primary. Among the senator's platform planks will be unalterable and unequivocal opposition to the entire treaty of peace, withdrawal of the American troops from Siberia and other remote corners of the earth, maintenance of the right of free speech, a general reassertion of the principles of the Progressive platform in 1912, and a declaration of Roosevelitian Americanism with no foreign entanglements.

BURROUGHS: OLD-TIME NATURALIST

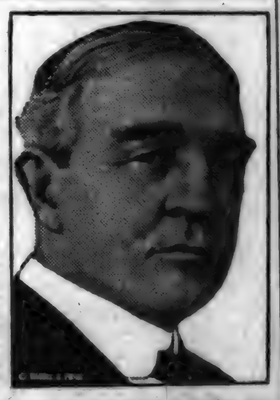


Old John Burroughs—his beard is long and white these days—migrated across the country the other day from Slabsides to Pasadena. Of course he had to change trains at Chicago, and a large group of his admirers met him at a dinner in a North Shore hotel—the dinner being spread in a sunken garden, surrounded by a wood and warmed by a log fire.

And what do you think? The old fellow boasted that he had never drank coffee or smoked. Now a good many good people believe that the man who has never drank strong, black, hot coffee right off the campfire has missed something. He may live six months or a year longer, but it isn't worth the price. And the man who can't light up a fine, ripe, Missouri meerschaum in the woods and find it the crowning touch of the wilderness feats—why, there's something the matter with him. But that's John Burroughs' way: If it doesn't happen at Slabsides he's inclined to think there ain't no such animile.

Really it is too bad that John Burroughs didn't stay longer and give a lecture. He has many admirers even in smoky, noisy, dirty, commercial Chicago. Then, too, he's one of those rare authors whose personality corresponds to his books. There are many nature lovers who prefer the "reason" school to Mr. Burroughs' "instinct" school, but even they have a fondness for Burroughs the man.

WE MUST GROW INTO SHIP HABIT



John Barton Payne, chairman of the United States shipping board, in a statement to the Southern Commercial congress, said in part:

My conclusion is, it is not possible to have a successful American merchant marine until the country grows into the ship habit. The American newspapers and magazines must arouse the thinking men among manufacturers, investment bankers, farmers, and labor to the necessity for a merchant marine.

The congress is giving the matter close attention, and besides the Greene bill should pass a mortgage bill substantially like the one now before the merchant marine and fisheries committee, to guarantee investors a lien for the purchase price of the ships which will, in financial circles, have as much value as a railroad mortgage, and investment bankers and the public may freely invest in ship securities.

American insurance is essential that we be not dependent on foreign companies for ship insurance, as we are now.

To accomplish this great task all Americans of all classes must pull together. The tales of the sea must become the gossip of the nursery and of the fireside.

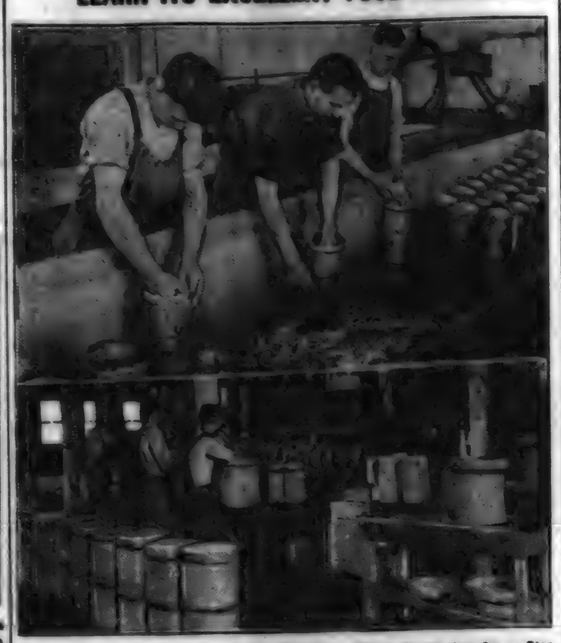
GARFIELD AND THE COAL SITUATION

The circumstances of the resignation of Dr. Harry A. Garfield, fuel administrator, are likely to keep him in the public eye for some time for the reason that he is understood to believe that the work of the commission authorized under the settlement, to be made up of one coal mine operator, a coal miner and a third person named to represent the public, will result in an increase in the price of coal to the consuming public.

To this form of settlement Doctor Garfield has been unalterably opposed. It has been learned on good authority that he took no part in the negotiation with the mine workers' union chief, and that though informed and consulted after their initiation the terms laid out as finally accepted contravene his conception of the main principle involved.

It was recalled in connection with the resignation that in suggesting a 14 per cent wage increase as fair for the miners and possible to be paid from present profits of mine owners, Doctor Garfield suggested a commission representative of the industry to review the findings, but expressed the conviction that such a body should not have power to fix prices. His belief is said to be that with this power granted a combination of the employer and employee in the industry to mulct the public by price raises is certain to result.

MARKET FOR CHEESE TO GROW AS PEOPLE LEARN ITS EXCELLENT FOOD PROPERTIES



Above—Putting Curd in Hoops for Pressing. These Hoops Are for a Size of Cheese Known as "Young America." Below—Paraffining and Boxing Cheeses.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Thanks largely to the traditions of Boston and vicinity, the people of the United States have come to know beans—their food value and all that—but there remain other opportunities, notably those to be found in popularizing cheese, to win fame by the food-products route. Attention is called to cheese particularly, because Americans have long neglected it in spite of its excellent food properties, and only recently have signs of growing interest in this product appeared. Dairy interests, as well as dietists, would like to see the day when the United States will be known as one of the greatest cheese-eating nations of the world.

Small Per Capita Consumption.

Visitors at the national dairy show in Chicago were surprised to learn from a government exhibit what a very small amount of cheese (one eighth of an ounce) each person of this country eats daily. Cheese makers, and dealers are just beginning to realize that the cheese demand can be increased tremendously if the merits of this food are properly brought to the attention of the public.

Eight countries have learned to know cheese better than we have. Denmark leads with a per capita consumption of [illegible] pounds; the United Kingdom, according to the latest figures available, comes next with 11.3 pounds per capita. Then France, Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, Italy, and Australia are listed in the order named—all ahead of the United States, which has a per capita consumption of only 3.5 pounds a year. Three-fourths of a century ago the people of this country seemed in a fair way of learning the value of cheese, and by 1880 their per capita consumption had risen to four pounds and 12 ounces, but this figure has never been reached since. The cheese consumed in this country has been principally American Cheddar, although foreign varieties have been increasingly popular, and furnished in 1918 practically one-fifth of the cheese consumed in this country.

Greater Variety of Uses Urged.

Attempts to develop a larger market for cheese should take into account the fact that practically all the cheese now consumed is eaten as purchased. A very large proportion of it is used with bread or as a filling for sandwiches. Cottage cheese in some form is consumed in large quantities. Dietists have no criticism of America's manner of eating cheese, save that they urge its use in a greater variety of ways, and more regularly.

Everyone interested in enlarging the market for cheese should understand clearly its food value. It contains over 25 per cent more protein than the same weight of an average cut of beef as purchased. So far as its composition is concerned cheese is comparable with meat. There are a great variety of ways of using cheese in the same way as meat, and these can usually be readily learned by consulting the average cook book. In planning menus in which cheese is given an important place, the housewife should bear in mind that, being rich in both protein and fat, cheese may replace such foods as fish and eggs, as well as meat, rather than cereal foods characterized by a large amount of starch, or succulent foods such as vegetables and fruits.

How to Increase Demand.

Every interest concerned in enlarging the market for cheese should join in preaching the gospel of "more cheese in the daily menu," say dairy specialists. There are many ways in which this education campaign can be carried on. Advertising is one effective medium. Attractive displays of cheese and cheese dishes, with well-worded placards, in grocery and delicatessen stores help materially.

NEW PARTS FOR IMPLEMENTS

Careful and Systematic Inspection Should Be Made for Purpose of Making Repairs.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A careful and systematic inspection of each implement should be made for the purpose of making or ordering repairs. Plows, listers, harrows, rollers, drags, seeders, drills, planters, cultivators, mowers, binders, headers, hay rakes, hay loaders, stackers, engines, racks, engines and horsepower or belt-driven machines such as separators, silo cutters and feed grinders are the implements in most common use. It is suggested that each implement be inspected for badly worn or broken parts to determine what parts should be repaired and these that must be replaced with new ones.

As a reminder for ordering new parts and in overhauling the machine, make a list for each implement of the parts to be repaired or the new parts to be bought; also any special tools necessary in making these repairs. Put down the name of manufacturer, year bought, and the number of the machine, if it is known. If orders are sent to the factory, be sure to specify the catalogue, pattern, or casting number of the part. Order repair parts early, as the dealer may not have them in stock.

STOCKS OF CORN DECREASED

Estimate of November 1 Placed at 72,500,000 Bushels—2.5 Per Cent Less Than in 1918.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The stock of old corn on farms November 1 is estimated at 72,500,000 bushels, which is 2.5 per cent of the 1918 crop. The corresponding figure a year ago was 114,078,000 bushels, and the average of the preceding five years was 97,277,000 bushels.

PIT SILOS BECOME POPULAR

Wyoming Farmers Are Constructing Large Number of Contraptions—County Agent Aids.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Members of the Hoboken County (Wyo.) Farm Bureau are constructing a large number of pit silos. Several successful demonstrations have been held by the county agent. Previous to one of the demonstrations the owner of one silo had been constructed and the pit dug several feet.

The farmers were shown how to plumb the walls by means of a "reamer," how to mix cement and apply the same to the walls, and how to make a hoist. A second silo was then started, the collar being laid out, the pit dug and the collar poured. In this manner all the steps in putting down a pit silo were demonstrated, much to the satisfaction of the farm bureau members present.

THE GENERAL FARM NOTES

Tips and tids don't die on vines, but there and cure applied to farm tasks pay any time.

• • •

The horse, stable and stock should have convenient arrangements for saving the manure.

• • •

Alfalfa believes in a square deal. It gives back to the soil in nitrogen more than enough to pay for the hoop.

Shortage in corn-appointment, and is the cheapest form in which the corn crop can be placed in the feed manger.

• • •

Farming is a business requiring for an overall thought about cost, neither and accountability as any other line man enterprise.

PARIS CLINGS TO MODE THAT SUITS

Lines of Gowns Straight Instead of Puffed Out, According to Edict.

TAFFETA GROWING IN FAVOR

Popularity of Fabric Indicates That It Will Be Favorite for Spring Wear; Guaranteed to Give Reasonable Service.

The latest fashion in Paris—to which the eyes of persons interested in dress persist in turning in spite of what America now has to offer of its own—include many useful hints to the woman who has still to think of winter clothes, states a leading fashion correspondent. In the first place, Paris fashions are apt to indicate what our fashions will be a season or two hence, and, in these days of the high cost of everything, if one must buy a frock now, it is only good sense to see that it is the sort of thing that is to be instead of what has been or is ceasing to be.

One important assertion from a Paris fashion authority is that the lines of the gowns that the Parisians have accepted for the winter are straight instead of being puffed out in places. The further the season advances, she states, the more evident it becomes that the pannier silhouette is not so popular, at least in Paris, as it was expected it might be. For an astonishing number of seasons that have trailed into years the straight silhouette has been the thing in Paris, and it looks as though the French woman is determined to hang on to a mode which so well becomes her.

Keeping Clear of Extremes.

The Parisian, too, in her dressing is keeping clear of any extremes in fashion. She has always done this more or less, and she is still holding to the rule that her style once discovered must be clung to rather than changed merely for change's sake. The straight silhouette seems to suit the majority of them. They all love it and keep on wearing it. We in this country are taking up the style more and more as time goes on. Within its limitations there are many variations possible. An infinite variety of the gowns can be designed without depending upon the idea of straightness.

Sleeves in Paris are still short—very short, in fact—there being no disposition to halfway measures. If they are not very short, they are long and tight and reach over the hands, fitting snugly all the way down. Skirts, too, are as short as they were at the fall openings, which means not almost knee length, as they were in the summer, but a good 11 or 12 inches from the ground to hem.

Coats are medium length and are trimmed sparingly with fur. Sometimes the fur is used to give a slightly exaggerated hip line as it finishes the lower edge of a coat. Then again it is employed only for a tiny collar fitting the neck snugly.

Dress of Black Taffeta and Monkey Fur From Madeleine et Madeleine.

Trimming in Moderation.

The trimmings on the Parisian mid-winter frocks are gorgeous and beautiful, but rather sparingly used. Little strips of gilded trimming edge necks and sleeves in clever fashion, and sometimes these edges are repeated on pocket flaps or on the edges of long slit pockets. Fringe is almost extinct, but there are bits of it seen on the ends of flapping panels or to trim the abbreviated evening skirt of an otherwise tightly fitting gown. Embroidery is more fashionable than ever, though when the French do it they lean, especially just now, to rather inconspicuous strips rather than to large and heavy building.

Taffeta is fast growing in favor, and every day from the couturiers come new models made of this material. This would seem to indicate the popularity of taffeta for spring wear in our own country. Taffetas now are soft and pliable, and they are guaranteed, too, to wear reasonably well, so that the purchase of them does not mean the taking of any very desperate chances.

One of the very latest of taffeta models is from Madeleine et Madeleine, a house which is the recent rage of Paris. The color is black and the stripes across the front are little tucks run in by fine hand stitches. Then there is a plaited frill of the taffeta about the neck, tied with a ribbon woven in bright green and gold threads. The overskirt, low in front and high at back, is edged with a deep fringe of monkey fur. The sleeves in this model are short and puffed.

The Parisian Waist Line.

The basque on this frock is one of the new decrees of Paris. It does not reach as low a line as basques of the past few months have done.

Street Frock of Black Velours. Skirt and Bodice Piped in Faille.

It drops just an inch or two below the normal waist line and fits rather snugly into the waist where it wrinkles slightly at the sides. All the Paris reports received in the last few weeks state that this is growing to be the waist line more and more accepted by Parisians themselves.

Another new French taffeta gown is made in shades of taupe, dark and light. The foundation skirt, a little bit fuller at the sides than it is at the back and front, is made of the darker shades and so are the little, tight, short sleeves. Then there is one of those basque waists that have just been described. This is made of the lighter shade, as are also the straight panels which fall over the skirt at back and front. There is an embroidered medallion on the front of the bodice at the waistline and one on each of the lower ends of the panels, this being done in threads of the darker shade of taupe with some gold threads intermingled.

Plaited taffetas and satins and serges continue to be created and worn to a large extent in Paris. There are plaited skirts with plain basques, and there are whole plaited dresses in taffeta with only a fold of the dress's material at the neck to finish the thing off.

Modest Evening Dresses.

Evening dresses in Paris are, according to reports, taming their ways very materially. Recently at a huge reception where all of the smart people in Paris were gathered the evening gowns were of the simplest and most unradical type. In spite of all that has been heard of the low back or nothing at all in the back mode, the necks were only moderately low. The skirts were only moderately short.

Sashes of all sorts and descriptions are important parts of the later season evening gowns. They are used by the French literally to make a gown, for on the lines of the sash, the color and the manner of arrangement depends the effect of the finished creation. On a black charmeuse evening gown, interestingly draped to follow the line of the figure, a wide sash made of cloth of gold is wound about the low waist line, tied in a huge knot at the left side back and its ends lined with golden chiffon and tipped by weighty gold tassels hanging almost to the hem of the garment. Indeed, one end hangs below the hem.

Charming French Hats.

French hats for the mid-season are as plain as ever and so charming that it is hard to tell just why. For one reason they manage to fit the wearer most astonishingly. They are shaped as an adjunct to her features and as an accent to the other parts of her attire. The little, draped turbans that turn away from the face and slouch over the ears are the popular favorites.

One of the draped velvet hats peculiarly French in the way it carries out the lines of the face is in dark blue and has for its trimming two bunches of a few coque feathers each, and they stream out over each ear in the most unstudied and careless fashion. Draped oriental turbans made of the most gorgeous of old and new brocades are much in demand.

DIAMOND CUT DIAMOND

THE MAN WAS MONSIEUR DE RAVENOL.

Synopsis.—While in the little Swiss town of Vevay, where the "staid, proper spinster" who tells the story is spending a vacation, she is asked to allow a young girl, Claire de Ravenol, to be her companion back to the United States. Although forming an attachment to the girl, the heroine takes a dislike to Monsieur de Ravenol, Claire's father, and declines. On the boat she finds Claire in the care of a casual acquaintance, Mrs. Delario, whom she had met in subsequent events. When they reach New York, where Claire was to have been met by her mother, the latter does not appear, and Claire perforce goes to Mrs. Delario's home. In the confusion at the custom house, the spinster carries off one of Mrs. Delario's slippers. Through that happening she learns later that someone unknown to her has been in her flat. Calling on Mrs. Delario, that lady shows some remarkable gems, believing them to be rubies, but which are really blood-red diamonds, and easily worth a million dollars. Mrs. Delario admits the gems were smuggled, but offers no explanation. While they are talking, a pounding on the door throws them into consternation. The caller asserts he is an officer of the law, with a warrant for the arrest of Mrs. Delario's son on a charge of stealing the diamonds. She outwits him and persuades the spinster to take the gems to her home for safe keeping. Next morning, realizing the responsibility in her possession of the diamonds, the spinster takes them back to Mrs. Delario, but while there she learns that the lady's son has been kidnaped, supposedly on account of the gems, and agrees to keep them for a while. She hides them in a bunch of hyacinths and has the lock of her door changed and a chain-bolt added. Over the telephone De Ravenol informs her Mrs. Delario has met with an accident and urges her to call at once. Hastening to her friend, and leaving the gems, the heroine is met by De Ravenol, who claims the diamonds are his, stolen from Claire on the boat. He accuses Mrs. Delario or our friend the spinster of the theft, and demands their return. She defies De Ravenol, who threatens her with a revolver, and escapes. Alarmed for her personal safety, and almost believing De Ravenol, the heroine fears to return to her flat, and while uncertain what to do meets an old-time friend, Billy Rivers, newspaper reporter. They spend the evening at a theater, and Rivers accompanies her home. There they find the flat has been thoroughly searched but nothing taken. She does not confide in Rivers. Next morning Mrs. Jimmson, washwoman and general caretaker, comes to do the weekly cleaning. The spinster has not dared to look if the diamonds are safe, and Mrs. Jimmson throws the faded bunch of hyacinths away. They are rescued in time, but before the spinster can look to see whether the diamonds are safe a telegram comes from her brother asking her to come to Philadelphia.

The third queer thing was that there was no business of mine he could be needing to see me about, and if it were business of his, he'd ask it as a favor. It was then that my eye slid up to the date and I saw it had been sent from New York. Well, if he were in New York, why hadn't he telephoned me or come up to the house?

I wish I could say it flashed over me instantly that this was a decoy designed to get me into monsieur's clutches, but it didn't flash at all—I thought it queer, and I was puzzled; but I am free to confess that if it had been an ordinary business man's message, I should have packed my suitcase, put the diamonds in my stocking, and taken the train specified. But while I was still wondering what my brother could be wanting me for in this peremptory way, Mrs. Jimmson brought me the special delivery letter, which, with triumph and pleasure in her face, she said she had found under the set tubs.

I pulled it out of the envelope and read:

"Madame was seen by two witnesses to carry away the package containing the jewels referred to. If madame desires to return them to their owner, telephone Hotel Imperial at 9 a. m. The owner gives madame this one opportunity to rectify her mistake without further trouble or publicity. Failure to comply with the request to telephone will prove madame's intentions and necessitate active measures for the recovery of the jewels."

"Oh, you don't say!" I sneered. "Well, I wonder what next!" And by that letter I knew I still had the diamonds!

So I was to telephone at nine o'clock! By rights—and monsieur's calculations—I should have received the letter before the first delivery; instead, it had come after and by accident I hadn't read it till noon. The telegram was timed nine forty-five.

It was then that I began to see through a hole in a stone. I had not telephoned—which proved I meant to keep the diamonds. My next move, obviously, would be to get them out of the city—to my brother's, of course. The telegram gave me the excuse for doing it; also told him by what train and station I should leave, for he had set them himself. But why had he set a day train? Why not one at night? It puzzled me at first until I saw his reason—I could disappear out of a daylight crowd about four times easier than out of a night crowd. Who would notice, among hundreds of women going through the Pennsylvania station, a woman as simply dressed as I, carrying a common suitcase? Probably no one.

I confess I was so much disturbed as I thought what might so easily have happened had I acted on the telegram, that it was some time before I got my wits together. One thing was clear to me, however—monsieur was going to act with great rapidity and secrecy—secrecy—that was the main point; for if he were sure I had the stones, he had only to get a search warrant and he'd have the stones.

Mrs. Jimmson came to my study while I was pondering all this and asked me: "What about lunch?" I sent her round to the delicatessen and told her to buy everything she thought she'd like to have.

The moment she was out of the place, I tore open the bunch of hyacinths. The diamonds were there.

"Good Lord!" I said as I saw them. The things were a calamity.

I rolled them up again, but I must get a new bunch of hyacinths; I must do something—I must act—I must get the stones home to Mrs. Delario—I must at least ask her what she wanted done with them and tell her how unsafe they were with me.

I tried the telephone, but got no answer, and while I was clacking at it Mrs. Jimmson came home from the delicatessen and I had to hang up.

While I ate, my mind went like a hammer. How could I get the diamonds out of the house? To whom could I entrust them? Not a living soul, so far as I could see—unless I could get them back to Mrs. Delario herself, which didn't seem likely in the present state of the case.

You see just how the man had me at his mercy. If I'd been a person accustomed to sneaking round and making quick getaways, I'd have known what to do and how to do it. In the next place, I hadn't the least idea of the number of people I was pitted against—the strength of the opposing forces. At that time, I hadn't the dimmest suspicion that he was playing practically a lone hand in the game and had only one hired detective and he didn't know what he was watching Mrs. Delario and me for. But as a result of my thinking, the idea came to me to find out if I were now watched and followed.

Telling Mrs. Jimmson to wait till I came back, and though it was raining hard, I went out for an investigatory walk around the block.

A man sat in the lower hall as I stepped out of the elevator. His back was toward the light of the front door. I think the devil himself must have got into me then; for without looking at Mr. Man, except the glance I gave him as I left the car, I walked straight into him and stepped on his toe, hard.

He said: "Ouch!"

I said: "Oh, I beg your pardon! Did I hurt you very much?"

"No—not very much," he replied, and looked glum.

Now, I had calculated this way—to pass him in the act of stepping on him and make him turn when he answered me so the light would fall on his face. I got the look at him I wanted and went out.

I walked half a block and turned sharply in my tracks. Mr. Man was about twenty feet in the rear, following me. He began to limp the moment he saw me noticing him.

I walked past my house to the end of the block. As I turned north, I saw Mr. Man ambling along in my direction. I stepped into a florist's and bought a fresh bunch of hyacinths.

By the time I had them paid for, Mr. Man had reached the store and was looking in the window, pretending not to see me.

"Did I hurt you very much?" I asked sweetly.

"No—not very." He touched his hat and I thought he looked annoyed.

I sprinted along ahead of him and turned at One Hundred and Forty-fifth street. I fancy Mr. Man had to do a little sprinting himself on his poor lame foot. I had vanished into a toy shop and was buying a doll for my niece when he discovered me—and pretended he didn't see me. He walked on ahead, but I caught up with him.

"Did I hurt you very much?" I asked.

"No—not very." He was beginning to look astonished now.

I sprinted away and turned south on Amsterdam. There, I went into a stationery store and bought an ink eraser. Mr. Man passed the door and glanced in. I motioned him to wait, but he pretended not to see. He was some distance ahead when I came out. I ran after him and caught up.

"Did I hurt you very badly?" I asked.

"No—not very," he answered, eying me narrowly. "I'm afraid you're giving yourself too much concern over a little accident." He was, I saw, beginning to wonder which of us was following which!

"No," said I quietly, "I'm not giving myself the least concern over your stepped-on toe—I'm simply using it as an excuse to get a good look at you in various lights so I'll know you again in any possible disguise you may assume."

I have always regarded that episode—and those last words—as a stroke of genius on my part, if I do say it! It came to me on the spur of the moment without thinking about it, and nearly bowled Mr. Man over. Before he had decided what to say, or what to do to allay my suspicion of him, I bolted across the street, diagonally, ducked between two trolley cars, one of which hid me from view long enough for me to get into the corner drug store where I dashed into the telephone booth and called up Mrs. Delario.

I had considerable difficulty in getting her and I felt every second was precious. My detective man was hurrying about somewhere looking for me, and I rather guessed she had one watching her. My suspicions seemed confirmed, for the moment she recognized my voice she said, "I can't talk to you," in a tragic determined sort of way and I felt her in the act of hanging up.

"Wait!" I shouted peremptorily. "Why can't you talk to me? Are you watched? Is everything you say overheard?"

"Yes."

"All right—then I'll do the talking. You can answer yes and no, can't you?"

"Yes."

"Well, we're both in the same boat—I'm watched too—followed by a detective. This is the first chance I've had to get you and I don't know how soon I'll be able to get you again. Is your house watched?"

"Yes."

"Could I run the blockade?"

"No!" This was fairly shouted at me.

"Is there any way I could get those articles back to you today?"

"No—none whatever now. No—not under any consideration."

"Couldn't you come up and get them?"

"No—of course not."

"Couldn't you send up?"

"Whom could I send? Impossible—totally impossible." Her tone was so emphatic that I knew there was nothing to be hoped for in that quarter.

I felt she was about to ring off and leave me with that and shouted at her: "Here—hold on! I don't know what to do—you'll have to advise me."

"But I can't! You must do as you think best—you understand it."

"I don't! That's just the trouble. Listen. There are some things I've got to know about. You keep on answering yes and no—that isn't going to give anything away at your end, and I'm in a drug store and I don't think anything will get out from this end. . . . You knew I was at your house yesterday?"

"Yes—after you had left."

"You knew I was accused? And that I denied everything?"

"I thought it happened that way—I wasn't sure."

"Were you accused, too?"

"Yes."

"Of the same thing?"

"I presume so."

"You denied everything?"

"Absolutely."

"Now I really must know this—did you bring those articles in yourself?"

"Yes."

"You said a friend did."

"Well—I didn't feel I could explain at the time. There were circumstances connected with it—"

"At the time we crossed together—this last trip?"

"Yes. Can't you see how things have been worked? If I'd followed my intuitions, I shouldn't have allowed—"

"The girl to come with you?"

"Yes. It was planned."

"Wait! There's another thing I want to know."

"I'll tell you later."

"No—now. How did they get through the—"

"I can't tell you."

"But I must know—it's a matter of great importance to me."

"One of those slippers we bought in Paris is lost."

"No it isn't—I have it. Please answer my question—how?"

"Good-by."

That was all. I couldn't get another word. She'd rung off. Just as I was trying to get her back, I saw Mr. Detective Man slip into the drug store. He saw me in the booth. Then he quickly slipped away again. I hung up and stepped out; but I looked back as I opened the street door—Mr. Detective Man was just sliding into the booth to find out what number I'd called!

I went quietly home feeling I had gained forward one step at least—Mrs. Delario had admitted her smuggling—which I didn't consider any of my affair—and she had confirmed my suspicions that De Ravenol was trying to rob her. "All right, let's see him do it!" thought I; but how—if she hadn't told him—and she said she hadn't—and of course she wouldn't—how under the heavens did he know, or even suspect that I had her diamonds?

I had on my rubbers—for those remote my trip through the hall to the elevator was mistaken. The elevator car was up, and as I heard it coming down I did not ring. I was standing with my back to the shaft, facing the door of the rear flat—I stood at most three feet away from that door.

Without the slightest sound of footsteps from the hall of the flat, that door opened—a man's face looked out—looked at me—and the door noiselessly closed.

It happened in a flash, so silently, that had my back been turned, had I been watching the descent of the car, I should have been none the wiser.

The man who opened the door was Monsieur De Ravenol.

I could not possibly be mistaken. The main hall light shone full on his face. He was hatless. And what was more—he recognized me and knew I had recognized him!

I was stupefied! The man was evidently living in the same house with me!

The rattling elevator recalled me to my senses as George, smiling and talkative, opened the door for me to get in. How much did George know? The car did up.

"Who is the gentleman living in the rear flat?" I asked with as much unconcern as I could. "The French gentleman—foreigner—I don't know if he's French or what. What is his name?"

"His name?" George considered this past another floor, and I repeated the question.

"I don't know his name—he ain't been here long."

"When did he take the flat?"

"Well, now I don' know jes' which day it was, but it was before you come home—maybe two days, maybe a week, an' he ain't really moved in yet—only a bed an' some chairs. He say he got furniture comin' from the other side an' he don' want to buy no more here than he can help."

"Naturally. Did he speak to you about me?" I put the question boldly as the car stopped at my floor. George hesitated and then admitted:

"Well, he did say he thinks he knows you." He appeared reluctant to discuss monsieur.

I broke out in a new line. "The gentleman is very rich, George. I hope he tipped you well."

George was instantly enthusiastic. "He done that! He gimme ten dollars."

"He's good for another ten, George, if you work him right," I affirmed. "Oh, you needn't be so shy! He asked you a lot of questions about me and you don't want me to know it. You told him everything you know—"

"Well, that's right," George broke in sheepishly. "He did ask me some questions, but honest to goodness, I ain't tell him anything bad—I tell him I don't scarcely know much about you. That's what I tell him, honest to goodness."

"He really paid you for telling him every time I went out or came in, didn't he?"

But George was suspicious and on guard at once. He threw open the car door without answering.

"Oh, all right," said I carelessly, but not stepping out as I saw he wished me to. "You needn't give it away, but I know, all the same, so it doesn't matter whether you tell me or not."

"What you suppose he so perticuler to know for?" asked George, ingenuously feeling he was guarding his secret while gratifying his curiosity.

"How should I know? Maybe he wants to hang flowers on my door. He's very rich, I understand."

George grinned, interested and sympathetic. He scented romance and it explained all to him as adequately as it had to Mrs. Jimmson.

I unlocked my door as quickly as I could—I didn't mean to let George think I attached any importance to monsieur. I knew enough. The man was a fellow tenant in the same house, in the flat directly under mine, and George was his paid spy. As I shut the door, I asked myself, "What next?"

I had a fleeting idea of keeping Jimmson with me for the night; but I couldn't think of any explanation for so unusual a request. I could not take her into my confidence—if she stayed, I could hardly keep her out of it. She was anxious to go home—I saw that and I didn't blame her; and I was anxious to be alone and think, of her faded skimpy woods, her faded skimpy form, and I said good-by to her heartily, little realizing that she was the one human being who stood between me and monsieur's machinations, and that when she closed herself out, she closed me in—a prisoner.

Locked in her own apartment.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Find Date Valuable Food.

Dates form the staple food of the Arabs in a large part of Arabia and are served in some form at every meal. Syrup and vinegar are made from old dates, and by those who disregard the teachings of the Koran a kind of brandy is distilled from them. The date pit is ground and fed to the cows and sheep, so that nothing of the precious fruit may be lost. Whole pits are used as beads and counters for the Arab children in their games on the desert sand.

Sea's Depth Told by Sound.

For measuring sea depths a Massachusetts doctor has invented a dynamite bomb which explodes on striking the bottom, the distance being estimated by measuring the time it takes the sound to reach the surface of the water.

CURRENT WIT and HUMOR

BIG UNDERTAKING.

"Few people realize the broad expanse of our nation's territory."

"Sometimes," commented Senator Sorghum, "I wonder if the expanse is not almost too broad. It is very difficult to cover all the points you would like to include in a speechmaking tour."

Joyous Generalities.

"I don't believe people fully understand what you mean by a soviet government."

"They are not supposed to understand it," replied the agitationist. "When people fully understand a proposition like that they are almost certain to pick out objections to it."

Illogical Treatment.

"Ma, why do people talk about the cream of things?"

"Because the cream of a thing is always considered the best, my son."

"If cream is the best, then why do they whip it?"

An Elaborate Dinner.

"Was it a good dinner?"

"Splendid. All the time I was at their table I kept thinking that they were serving us food far more expensive than they could afford."

Obeying His Wishes.

Jim—And now that we are engaged let's keep it a secret for several months, dear.

Julie—Of course, Jim. I'll tell everyone that.

A Considerable Genius.

Miss de Jones—Are you musical, Prof. Paddyrusky?

Prof. Paddyrusky—Oh, yes, but if you want to play don't mind my feelings?

EARLY SYMPTOMS.

"I'd like to see that office boy of mine thirty years from now."

"Why so?"

"He ought to make a wonder as a tired business man."

Undisputed Autocrat.

To the most eminent of men
Of strength there comes a loss,
Which makes him own that now and then
The doctor is the boss.

Demonstration.

"Straws show which way the wind blows."

"Nobody needs to be told that who has ever chased his hat up the street."

Hard-Boiled Economy.

"You used to take your eggs soft-boiled."

"Eggs were less expensive then. Just now nobody can afford to risk spilling any part of one."

Joys of Economy.

"Why do you smile when the high cost of living is mentioned?"

"I was thinking of the large amount I now save every time I forego a needless expenditure."

The Mind of a Motorist.

"What do you regard as the most important of our railroad problems?"

"Beating an express train over a grade crossing," answered Mrs. Chuggins.

The Logical One.

"I wonder if it is dark inside the big airships?"

"Why, don't they always have a skylight?"

Its Sole.

"What's oral surgery, pa?"

"I guess it is the kind that makes a man's speech."

Experience.

First Skim Mother—Haven't those settlement girls nerve to come and tell us how to take care of children?

Second Ditto—I should say. Here I've reared seven through everything a baby has and buried five of 'em.

His Failure.

"The bad orator is a man who does evil with a good intention."

"How do you make that out?"

"Because he often murders a good speech while trying to deliver it."

Watch Your Kidneys!

That "bad back" is probably due to weak kidneys. It shows in a dull, throbbing backache, or sharp twinges when stooping. You have headaches, too, dizzy spells, a tired nervous feeling and irregular kidney action. Don't neglect it—there is danger of dropsy, gravel or Bright's disease! Use Doan's Kidney Pills. Thousands have saved themselves more serious ailments by the timely use of Doan's. Ask Your Neighbor!

An Ohio Case

George Hockley, painter, Gay St., Adelphi, Ohio, says: "I suffered from a lame back and frequently I had dizzy spells and spots floated before my eyes. The kidney secretions were too frequent in passage, scanty and highly colored. I used Doan's Kidney Pills and they cured me of the attack. I keep Doan's Kidney Pills on hand all the time. When I need a kidney medicine Doan's Kidney Pills always do good work."

Miss Ida Reed was an over Sunday guest of Miss Charlotte Miller.

John Koch and family were Sunday dinner guests of Chas. Schlatter and family, of near Cedarville.

Wellington Miller, of Washington, D. C., is visiting his parents, Adrain Miller and family, east of town.

Mark Tyndall and wife of Woodburn, Beeks Erick, wife and babe and LaVern Rhodes were Sunday dinner guests of Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Tyndall.

On Friday evening the Spencerville Independents played the Auburn Y. M. C. A., at Auburn. The Independents were defeated for the first time this season by a score of 36-26.

On Thursday evening, Manager "Shorty" Tyndall and his Juniors motored to Waterloo and there surprised the Waterloo Vamp with a score of 40—16 in favor of the Spencerville Juniors.

The weather conditions have made it possible to hurry along the work on the new town hall. Clint Wearley of Ft. Wayne finished the first coat of stucco last week and on Tuesday the carpenters finished the roof.

On New Year's Day, Spencerville and vicinity enjoyed a community pot luck dinner in the basement of the Lutheran Church. The occasion furnished the opportunity to exhibit the new kitchen and dining room equipment. Nearly 200 enjoyed the bountiful dinner. Toastmaster A. K. Mumma called on Rev. Wright, Henry Beams, Prof. Nelson and John Koch, all of whom responded with a few well chosen remarks. It was talked of having a New Year's community dinner an annual affair at Spencerville.

Mr. and Mrs. A. K. Mumma spent Monday with friends at Ft. Wayne.

Reports from Robert Beams at the Lutheran Hospital are that he is doing nicely.

Miss Beatrice Wasson is quite ill, also Gust Cupp is confined to his bed with pneumonia.

Levi and Jean Mumma left on Monday morning for Wittenberg College to resume college.

Edward Billman and wife spent New Year's Day at the home of Gerry Wasson and wife.

Frank Wertman and wife were New Year's guests of her cousin, Mrs. Sol Doty and husband, of Harlan.

Frank Baltz and wife were Sunday dinner guests of the former's parents, Jacob Baltz and wife; and Rolla Moffett, of Auburn, was a Saturday guest of the same home.

WHEN THE DAY IS OVER

When the household cares and the worries of every-day life have dragged you down, made you unhappy, and there is nothing in life but headache, backache and worry, turn to the right prescription, one gotten up by Dr. Pierce fifty years ago.

Nervous—Run-Down, Pain Here or There?

Kokomo, Ind.—"I can say something for Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. For some time I suffered from nervousness and general run-down condition. I lost my appetite and the doctors did not seem to help me. I had one of Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Advisers in the house and I started to read it. I found that 'Favorite Prescription' was what I needed. It helped me in many ways and built up my system. I regained my appetite and felt better. It gave me strength to do some work that I had not been able to do for some time previous."—Mrs. J. A. McGee, 821 E. Taylor St.

Lafayette, Ind.—"Several years ago I took Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and it did wonders for me. It is the best medicine I ever found. I was troubled with weakness from which many women suffer. I was down sick. Would have such terrible smothering spells I did not know what to do, and I would have dizzy spells, too. The doctor could not help me. I tried 'Favorite Prescription' and it proved wonderful with me. It built me up and cured me and made me stout. I was in awful condition at the time."—Mrs. Elizabeth Kahl, 224 S. Fifth St.

Kokomo, Ind.—"Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription has helped me. I took it when in a delicate condition. I had been in bed most of the time, and whenever I tried to stand I would feel so sick; my stomach failed me. I knew my mother had taken the 'Prescription,' so I took three or four bottles and I was then able to be up and around."—Mrs. Roy Morris, 922 E. Arnett St.

MEALS FOR A DAY.

For the first meal of the day, a little fruit of some kind is a good beginning. If fresh fruits, such as oranges, grapefruit, apples or pears are not at hand, a tablespoonful or two of raisins, steamed and added to the oatmeal or cooked cereal, or a few dates, figs or stewed prunes are all good and desirable breakfast fruits.

With an almost endless variety of breakfast foods, one may have a different kind every morning, if the family is large enough to practice this method without waste.

For the hot dish, eggs are always good, and may be cooked in as many ways as there are days in the year. Bacon is a breakfast meat, and if liked can be served daily without losing its charm. Sausage, chops and fish of various kinds are other breakfast meats. Mackerel is a great favorite. When the fresh fish cannot be obtained the salted fish makes a fairly good substitute. Soak the fish over night, or until much of the salt is removed, then bake in the oven for 20 minutes, covered with thin cream. Serve hot with bits of butter.

With toast, cakes, muffins, doughnuts, cookies and good coffee, one may find a choice for the first meal.

For luncheon, one hot dish, which may be escalloped fish, vegetables, rice or macaroni, codfish with baked potatoes, or a cream soup, of which there are a large number from which to choose; a salad, some kind of bread, a cupful of chocolate, cocoa or tea, and a small cake, with or without fruit, such as marmalade or jelly, canned or preserved fruit.

For dinner, a clear soup, if followed by a heavy dinner, a cream soup if a light dinner follows; one vegetable besides potatoes, a roast or meat loaf, a simple dessert, with coffee.

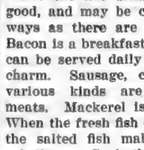
For a course dinner, the cocktail is served as a stimulant; on this account the clam and oyster, the various fruit cocktails and those with appetizing herbs, are used, their object being to stimulate, not cloy the appetite.

Pineapple Cocktail.—For each glass take a tablespoonful each of pineapple and lemon or orange, one-half tablespoonful of grated orange peel. Sweeten to taste, pour over a little chipped ice and fill the glass with iced water.

Many times—in fact, invariably—the mental attitude we take toward anything of an unfriendly nature that enters our lives determines its actual effect upon us.—Trine.

A FEW CREAM SOUPS.

A cream soup is sufficiently nourishing to serve as the main dish at a luncheon. One of the most common is potato, but the following is not common.



Cream of Potato.—Boil ten large potatoes and mash with a cupful of cream; season with salt and grated onion. Blend together two tablespoonfuls each of flour and butter; add two cupfuls of cold milk and cook until thick, stirring constantly. Add four cupfuls of boiling veal stock, the mashed potato, and bring to boil. Serve at once.

Veal and Celery Soup.—Cut up three pounds of veal; break the bones; cover with four quarts of cold water and simmer for four hours; strain and return to the fire. Add two bunches of celery, and two chopped onions; simmer until the vegetables are done. Press through a fine sieve; thicken with two tablespoonfuls of cornstarch mixed with two cupfuls of milk; add two tablespoonfuls of butter in small bits; reheat and serve with dice of fried bread.

Cream Veal Soup.—Chop fine three pounds of lean veal and one large onion. Cover with two quarts of cold water; simmer three hours; strain, cool and skim. Thicken with two tablespoonfuls of flour blended with a little cold milk beaten with three eggs and two cupfuls of milk. Season with salt, pepper, minced parsley, and a grating of nutmeg.

Egg Soup.—Butter six slices of stale bread; sprinkle with sugar and brown in the oven. Reheat two cupfuls of veal stock and two cupfuls of milk beaten with the yolks of three eggs. Add a tablespoonful of butter; season with salt, pepper, minced parsley, and a grating of nutmeg. Pour over the toast; cover for ten minutes and serve.

Sweetbread Soup.—Reheat one quart of veal stock and add two cupfuls of cream which has been beaten with the yolks of two eggs. Take from the fire, season to taste, and add one cupful of parboiled sweetbreads cut in bits. Garnish with one cupful of whipped cream and a bit of minced parsley.

He who has the quest of the good in his heart relates himself thereby with all the higher powers and forces of the universe and they aid him at every turn.

FAVORITE DISHES.

The old-fashioned milk toast which our grandmothers made, with plenty of butter and flour mixed together, making a rich white sauce, is not much like the soupy mass usually served when asking for milk toast. Prepare the flour and butter, using two tablespoonfuls of butter and two of flour for each cupful of milk. When the butter is bubbling hot, add the flour; then when well blended add the milk. Cook until smooth, add salt, and turn over well-buttered toast, the edges of which have been softened by dipping them into hot milk or water. Some like a generous sprinkling of cheese; as this makes a more nourishing dish, it is especially good for a luncheon dish.

Fruit Souffle With Cornstarch.—Mix three tablespoonfuls of cornstarch, one-third of a cupful of sugar and half a teaspoonful of salt; stir into one and one-half cupfuls of scalded milk, stir until it thickens, then add three-fourths of a cupful of raisins or cherries cut in halves; cover and let cook ten minutes. Add one tablespoonful of butter and fold in the whites of three eggs beaten very light. Butter six individual molds, dredge the butter with sugar and fill the molds with the cooked preparation. Set the molds on several folds of cloth or paper in a baking pan, pour boiling water to half the height of the molds and cook about 12 minutes. Serve unmolded with cream or a custard made with the egg yolks.

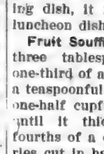
Honey Frosting.—Boil half a cupful of strained honey and a tablespoonful of corn sirup to 240 degrees Fahrenheit. Pour in a fine stream the beaten white of one egg. Beat until cool before spreading on the cake.

Quick Potato Rolls.—Boil potatoes and press through a ricer. To one cupful of potato and water add half a cupful of scalded milk, three tablespoonfuls of shortening, half a teaspoonful of salt, one tablespoonful of sugar; and when lukewarm, stir in one cake of compressed yeast mixed with one-fourth of a cupful of lukewarm milk; add two and a half cupfuls of flour; cut and work the dough into a loaf and let stand to raise, cut it down once, then let raise again and make into smooth balls. Cover and let stand until light. Shape for finger rolls and when again light, bake.

Success is the inevitable result of good management, just as failure is the natural outcome of ignorance, carelessness and idleness.

SEASONABLE FOODS.

There is no waste in tripe, it is all edible and easily digested, and reasonable in price. Take care to select tender pickled tripe, wash in cold water and cut in uniform pieces. Dry in a cloth, then pat in sifted corn meal. Have ready two or three spoonfuls of hot fat in a frying pan. Set in the tripe and let cook until lightly browned on one side, then turn and brown on the other. Have ready small onions, boiled tender and seasoned with salt and butter. Serve the tripe and onions on the same dish.



Apricot Sponge.—Soften a tablespoonful of gelatine in one-fourth cupful of water and dissolve in one cupful of apricot pulp and juice, heated hot. Add one-fourth of a cupful of sugar and stir until dissolved, then when the mixture begins to become firm, beat in the whites of two eggs, beaten very light. Serve in glass cups with cream, sweetened and beaten very light. Prunes may be used in the same way. Care should be taken to use no more gelatine than needed as it is best when not quite firm enough to keep its shape.

Potato Puree.—Some potatoes are better if a little cold water is added occasionally to check the boiling. Test with a fork and when tender, drain and dry off in the saucepan; add butter, salt and a little milk, using more than for mashed potato. Rub the saucepan with the cut side of a clove of garlic. Soup stock may be used instead of milk. The puree is used as a vegetable with meat or fish.

Ginger Cream.—Make a custard of the yolks of four eggs and the whites of two, four tablespoonfuls of sugar, two tablespoonfuls of the sirup from the preserved ginger and one pint of milk. Just before the custard is done add gelatine, using enough for a pint of liquid. Allow plenty of time for the gelatine to become completely dissolved in the hot custard. As soon as the custard coats the spoon, stand the dish in a dish of cold water to check the cooking and then turn into the custard molds. Sprinkle each mold with chopped preserved ginger.

Highway Improvement

PLAN TO GET FEDERAL HELP

Positive Obligation Should Be Placed Upon States to Give Aid to County Units.

That federal aid funds should hereafter be expended only upon roads which are included in an intercounty system of main highways, is becoming a fixed policy in many states, despite the fact that the present road act does not require such use of the money.

Pennsylvania, Virginia, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wyoming and Washington recently have practically decided to confine the federal money to roads that count in well-defined state systems.

"If the national government is to continue the policy of appropriating federal funds to the 48 states for highway improvement, a positive obligation should be placed upon the states to give aid to their county units," asserts President David Jameson of the American Automobile association, which organization devoted its country-wide energies to the passage of the federal aid road act and urged such legislation at a time when it was far from popular.

"If it is the correct thing—and we believe that it is—for the wealthier and more settled states to give assistance through the federal treasury to the less populated and undeveloped parts of the country, this national cooperation carries with it an obligation to the state to function as a commonwealth in the form of intercounty roads built and maintained entirely at state expense.

"While it has been found necessary in some states to employ automobile registration money in floating state bond issues, this should not be done except as a last resort, simply because there is need of yearly maintenance funds and these are best supplied by the registration and other taxes collected from motorcar owners. The total of this money for the whole country now exceeds $50,000,000."

FILL LINCOLN HIGHWAY GAPS

Recent Gift of $100,000 Made to Complete the Transcontinental Thoroughfare.

With a recent gift of $100,000 it is announced that two Nevada stretches of the Lincoln highway will be improved, thus filling the last gap in the first American transcontinental highway. It is sentiment of the donor that the work should properly be done by the state and federal governments, but he is glad to make a personal sacrifice that the finished road may be presented to the American people as an object lesson. It is felt that the greatest value of this pioneer highway lies in its educative value for the general public.

MUDDY ROADS DEVELOP DUST

No Place for Water to Stand Where Roadbed Is Kept Well Crowned, Hard and Smooth.

The muddier a road gets the more dust will result when it dries up. The sides of the ruts are ground to dust. The roadbed that is kept well crowned, hard and smooth offers no place for water to stand, so it will not develop bad ruts or mush dust.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

by Mary Graham Bonner © by the Author.

MR. SUN'S PICTURES.

"Hellow, Dawn fairies," called Mr. Sun, as he stretched himself and looked about him.

"Yes, Mr. Sun," called the Dawn fairies. "Are you thinking of getting up, sir?"

"Yes," said Mr. Sun, "it is almost time for me to get up. You know I always get up at just the time I'm supposed to. I'm a regular old fellow that way. My time changes in the summer and in the winter and in the spring and the fall, but every day at the hour I'm supposed to get up I do. That is more than many folks can say."

And Mr. Sun laughed a jolly, good old laugh.

"You see, I called you, Dawn fairies, because I've gone into a new business. At least it isn't a new business, for I have been doing it for years and years, but I'm calling it new just to be up to date."

"Whatever are you talking about?" asked the Dawn fairies. "Won't you tell us? We don't understand at all." Just then the Sun fairies came along.

"Oh, the business is being talked of again, ha, ha," they laughed.

"We're so puzzled," said the Dawn fairies.

"Of course," said the Sun fairies, "for you weren't around the other afternoon."

"No," said the Dawn fairies, "we weren't. We are never around in the afternoon."

"Well," said the Sun fairies, "we heard a good deal of Mr. Sun's business talk and we were there helping him for a good while, though we left the Twilight fairies to finish up the pictures."

"Stretched Himself."

"Pictures?" said the Dawn fairies; "and business? Oh, we are so puzzled."

"I will explain it all," said Mr. Sun, "for I've a few minutes in which to stretch before it is time to get up.

"You see I heard folks talking about moving pictures. There were funny ones and one that made them cry, and there were ones of travel; in fact, all sorts.

"Now I don't like those moving picture places. They're dark and they won't ask Mr. Sun to come in. They have never once given me a pass or a box, or even asked me if I wanted to buy a ticket at the box office. It is true I wouldn't go in if they asked me.

"I have really been quite hurt about not being asked, though, and then I thought I would go into the business myself. I have always given the earth people beautiful pictures as I have gotten up and gone to bed, and at many times.

"My pictures have moved and changed, too, but I never had the modern name for them. Now I call my pictures 'Mr. Sun's Moving Pictures,' and I ask everyone to come without paying a cent of money to see them.

"I give them out of doors where everything is clear and healthy and I give them all colored, too; ah, beautiful ones. The Cloud fairies are going to help me and so are the Sun fairies as they have before, and the Twilight fairies and so many of the others.

"So I would like to have the Dawn fairies help me, too. We'll give the earth people a wonderful series of pictures of the sun getting up and of all the colors and fairies and pictures which move along with him. Will you all help?"

"Yes," shouted the Dawn fairies.

So Mr. Sun got up, peeked first above the trees, and all the fairies came along, too—they changed and they moved about and they danced, and the Sun fairies danced upon the snow, which they called the Sparkling Ball Room Picture.

"It is being talked about—our picture," whispered Mr. Sun; "yes, they're admiring us. I do believe they will like Mr. Sun's moving pictures and that I will be a success in the business. There is nothing like keeping one's name up to date, nothing at all. And," said Mr. Sun, "when I want some music to play for the beautiful pictures I'll ask the trees to furnish it. They will, never fear."

And Mr. Sun smiled broadly as he said his good-morning to the whole world, for his moving pictures were such a success, he knew!

NERVOUS PROSTRATION

Mrs. J. Christman Proved That Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a Remedy for this Trouble.

Binghamton, N. Y.—"I was in a very nervous condition for over a year, my mind was gloomy, could see no light on anything, could not work and could not have anyone to see me. Doctor's medicine did not help me and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was recommended. I took it and am now well. I recommend it to all afflicted with nervous prostration."—Mrs. J. CHRISTMAN, 193 Oak Street, Binghamton, New York.

The success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, is unparalleled. It may be used with perfect confidence by women who suffer from nervous prostration, displacements, inflammation, ulceration, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion and dizziness. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the standard remedy for female ills.

If there are any complications about which you need advice write in confidence to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass.

Hoosier State Happenings

Greensburg.—With an appropriation of $72,000 by the advisory board of Jackson township for a new school building in the township, a question of long standing was settled. The new building, which will be started soon, according to an announcement, will be in the center of the township, to be of mutual benefit. In former years the question of a new school could not be decided, as three towns, all some distance from a central point, made a fight for the building. When the proposition was advanced to build a school in the center of the township last year, it met with general satisfaction and the appropriation by the board is the result.

Indianapolis.—The Woman's Association of Commerce of Indiana, an organization of business and professional women in the state, has been asked to take part in the new savings movement to be started by the savings division of the treasury department. Letters are being sent to the ten clubs affiliated with the state association, as well as all other clubs of business women in the state, explaining the new plan and asking for the co-operation of all business women in the new program planned by the government.

Indianapolis.—The allegation that some poultry dealers get as much money for their handling of poultry as do the growers who do all the work of raising the poultry, is being made the subject of inquiry by special investigators Ele Stansbury, attorney-general, has sent out over the state. It is known that the investigators are working on the theory that some chicken buyers around Lafayette, Lebanon, Delphi and elsewhere, are manipulating prices to the disadvantage of those who raise chickens. Investigation is also under way in Indianapolis.

Indianapolis.—An increase in both wholesale and retail margins of profit on sugar was authorized by Stanley Wyckoff, federal fair price commissioner for Indiana. The new margins are three-fourths of a cent a pound for wholesalers and 2 cents a pound for retailers. Margins heretofore have been .65 of a cent a pound for wholesalers and 1½ cents for retailers. In a letter to the Indiana Wholsale Grocers' association authorizing the increase, Mr. Wyckoff also instructed all firms having sugar in stock to sell that sugar at its replacement value.

Indianapolis.—Governor Goodrich directed the calling of a special session of the Indiana state teachers' retirement fund board in order that immediate action can be taken to avert the financial collapse of the pension system. The action was taken by the governor when the annual report of the retirement fund board was submitted for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1919, showing that benefits and annuities paid out exceeded the dues paid by the teachers by more than $12,000.

Muncie.—Dr. N. D. Berry, city health commissioner, has submitted to the city council a report that shows 923 births and 441 deaths in Muncie in 1919, an increase of 182 births over deaths, despite the fact that the Muncie death rate is said to have been the highest of any city in the state. The high death rate is attributed to an unusually large number of accidents and suicides. The report shows that although there were 54 smallpox cases, none resulted fatally.

Indianapolis.—One hundred accidents a day to industrial workers is the record of 1919, according to statistics of the state industrial board. The number includes only accidents to persons who work for employers under state workmen's compensation laws. Two hundred and thirteen of the approximately 37,000 accidents were fatal.

Indianapolis.—Granges or several states which group to buy the season's binder twine supply for their members again will get their supply from the Indiana state prison, L. H. Wright, master of the state grange, announced. Mr. Wright hopes to be able to announce the price to members at the annual meeting of the state grange at Napanee, January 20-24.

South Bend.—To assist the city of South Bend in its educational program, the Citizens' Housing company, a subsidiary of the Studebaker corporation, will give the school city six lots on which to erect a new school building.

Madison.—The Madison tobacco market opened steady after the holiday recess. Low grades are selling low, but high grades were in demand and brought their usual high prices. Receipts have slowed down and light sales are predicted.

Indianapolis.—Statistics of the grain activity of the Indianapolis Board of Trade, published in a report of the work during the calendar year shows receipts of wheat nearly 1,000,000 bushels in excess over a like report for 1919. Other grain, however, including corn, oats and rye, show declines since 1918.

Vincennes.—Due to the scarcity of coal only 34 new oil wells were completed in Lawrence county (Ill.) fields during December. The wells increased the production 330 barrels a day. Nine dry holes resulted during the four weeks of drilling.

Terre Haute.—Miners in this vicinity are complaining at the headquarters of District 11, United Mine Workers, in this city, that the price charged them for coal has been raised. Complications may arise from this that will seriously interfere with production it is said at the headquarters. It is alleged that the price of coal to miners for home consumption has been raised in some instances to such an extent as to put it higher than the wholesale price at the mine as fixed by the fuel administration, $2.35 a ton. The average price to the men, under contract between the several locals and the mine owners, has been $2.20. This has been raised 20 cents a ton, making the price $2.40, 5 cents more than the wholsale price, according to some of the miners.

Indianapolis.—Formal charges made against Edward G. Sourbier, Republican, and Carl VonHake, Democrat, treasurer and former treasurer of Marion county, respectively, alleging that they have retained $150,306.71 in interest accrued on Barrett law improvement funds, were certified to Governor Goodrich by Jesse E. Eschbach, state examiner of the board of accounts for the collection by the attorney general. Suits will be instituted at once for the collection of the money for the city of Indianapolis, Ele Stansbury, attorney general, said.

Greensburg.—For the first time in many years, offices of justices of the peace, in Greensburg will be conducted in private homes. W. J. Grant and A. S. Creath are moving their offices from the Lathrop building on the east side of the courthouse square, to their homes, and in the future will try cases, perform marriages and all official business at their own fireseides. The removal of the offices was caused by the forming of a Knights Templar commandery here. The commandery has leased the Lathrop building and will remodel it for a lodge hall.

Elwood.—All city employees of Elwood are to receive an increase of salary. Recently the street and garbage forces, the custodian of the city building and the members of the fire department presented petitions asking for more pay. Then the police commissioners, without consulting the council, gave all members of the police department an increase of $10 a month. The council at a special conference called by the mayor voted to give an increase to all city appointive servants. The council and elective officers do not share.

Indianapolis.—Asserting that two-thirds of the fires in Indiana are preventable, H. H. Friedley, state fire marshal, has issued rules for the care of homes, buildings and garages as the first step of a campaign to reduce the fire loss of the state in 1920. The cost of fires each year in Indiana, said Mr. Friedley, is equal to half of the cost of new buildings constructed in the same period. Garage fires in particular, he said, are causing alarm by their increase.

Evansville.—Judge J. C. Kern of the Wabash county circuit court at Mt. Carmel, Ill., has decided in favor of the property holders in the southern part of Wabash county, who sought authority to organize the Rochester McLeary bluff levee district. The levee will be more than nine miles long and will protect more than 5,000 acres of the best land in the county from Wabash river floods. The levee will cost about $75,000. Work will start at once.

Shelbyville.—Coal dealers in Shelbyville are not expecting an increase in the price of coal soon. They say that they are expecting a lower price, one local dealer basing the statement on "inside" information. The local dealers say that with the weather normal, a coal price decrease will be more likely to come than an increase. One dealer here who has a contract with a coal company for coal at the rate of $4.25 a ton, has been receiving the shipments at $3.75 a ton.

Indianapolis.—Action was begun by the Indiana Federation of Farmers' Associations to find out why Indiana farmers cannot get railroad cars with which to move their live stock. Lewis Taylor, secretary of the federation, said live stock farmers over the state are losing hundreds of thousands of dollars because they have been unable to get cars.

South Bend.—An average of 6,000 cars a day are being handled in the New York Central railroad gravity yards between Elkhart and Osceola. Freight business is breaking all records on the road. The highest number of cars ever handled in this division was 6,200 on December 8. More than 90 trains are being handled daily by the 55 engine crews.

Gary.—Martial law, in effect here since October 6 because of the steel strike, was suspended on orders from the office of Maj. Gen. Leonard Wood. Instructions to military authorities followed the request of Mayor Hodges that the troops be withdrawn.

Anderson.—The board of county commissioners has issued an order increasing the salary of the county superintendent of schools from $1,409 to $2,400 a year.

Gary.—The city council passed an ordinance barring the jitney busses from Broadway, Gary's main street. Jitney operators are expected to file suit to test the constitutionality of the law.

Ft. Wayne.—The Ft. Wayne & Northern Indiana Traction company properties were sold here to W. J. Devine and P. M. Chandler of Philadelphia. Their bid at a receivership sale was $2,801,000. Four divisions, radiating to many cities and towns in this part of the state are included in the holdings. Robert M. Fentel is the receiver of the company.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Teacher of English Bible in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)
(Copyright, 1920, Western Newspaper Union)

LESSON FOR JANUARY 11

PETER AND JOHN HEAL A LAME MAN.

LESSON TEXT—Acts 3.

GOLDEN TEXT—Freely ye have received, freely give.—Matt. 10:8.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL—Matt. 10:1, 8; Mark 1:29-34; Luke 4:40; John 14:2; I Peter 4:11.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Lame Man Made Whole.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Peter and John at the Beautiful Gate.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Faith and a Helping Hand.

The indications are that some months had elapsed since Pentecost. The believers were being taught by the apostles, who were showing their credentials by their mighty works (2:43).

I. The Lame Man Healed (vv. 1-11).

1. The occasion (v. 1). Peter and John were going to the house of worship. They were going up to Jerusalem to worship though they knew full well the corruptions of Judaism. What is needed today is not separation from denominational bodies so much as for those who know the Lord and the higher things of the Christian life to help lead those who lack these things into the better way.

2. The place (v. 2). It was at the beautiful gate which led from the outer to the inner court of the temple. This man was placed at the entrance of the place of worship, because where man comes closest to God he also comes closest to his fellow man. Human instinct is quick to discern this. Beggars are seldom found at doors of theaters and infidel lecture halls.

3. The man (vv. 2, 3). This beggar was infirm from his birth.

4. The method (vv. 4-8). (1) Gained the man's attention (v. 4). Peter and John commanded him to look on them. Having secured his attention they gave him more than he asked or expected. He asked for money and got healing. (2.) Peter commanded him in the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth to rise up and walk (v. 6). This was the very thing he had been unable to do for so many years. Was not this mocking his very impotency? No! No! It was in the name of Jesus. With the commandment went the ability to do. (3.) Peter took him by the right hand (v. 7). This act was meant to give impetus to his faith, not strength to his ankles. (4.) The man's response (v. 8). Strength came to his feet and ankle bones at once. He stood, he walked, he leaped and shouted praise to God. He thoroughly advertised the miracle. He ascribed the honor to God for his healing and walked into the house of God. The one who has experienced the life of Christ will surely make it manifest.

5. The effect (vv. 9-11). The people were filled with wonder and amazement. The multitude ran together to see this wonderful thing. There was no question as to the genuineness of the miracle, for this man was a familiar figure for many years. This miracle may be regarded as a parable setting forth the work of the church in the world. (1.) The helpless beggar had to be carried to the temple gate. Men and women out of Christ are spiritually helpless; they need to be brought where the life of God can be applied to them. We should bring sinners to Christ. (2.) Taking him by the hand shows the manner of the Christian's help.

II. Peter Witnessing of Jesus Christ Before the Multitude (vv. 12-26).

This miracle focused the attention of the people upon Peter and John. Peter immediately turned their attention from himself to Christ. This is most unlike the claimants to divine power today. Disclaiming power of his own, he seized the opportunity to preach Christ to the people who had assembled. He told them it was faith in Jesus Christ, whom the God of their fathers had glorified, whom they had deliberately delivered up and denied before Pilate when he desired to set him free, and that they desired a murderer to be granted freedom instead. He showed that the disciples were also witnesses that God had raised Jesus from the dead, and charged home upon them their awful guilt; for they had denied the holy one and the just, and chosen Barabbas, a murderer, instead of Christ, and killed the Prince of Life. He appealed to them to repent (v. 19), telling them that they had committed this awful crime in ignorance, God would pardon their sin if they would repent. He assured them that Israel would yet enjoy refreshing seasons from the Lord, when God should send Jesus Christ back to earth to consummate the work of redemption. He appealed to the Scriptures as the basis of his warnings and promises (vv. 22-26).

Service of Life.

Life should be measured by usefulness, as it is to serve the world that we are entitled to live in it. And after all service, well and faithfully performed, brings the only real happiness; all the outward pomp and insignia of rank are but badges of service. "Not to be ministered unto but to minister," not to be served, but to serve, is the utterance of the highest authority in spiritual matters. It was a most interesting object lesson that Jesus gave his disciples when he washed their feet.

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and ¼ oz. of glycerine. Apply to the hair twice a week until it becomes the desired shade. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. It will gradually darken streaked, faded gray hair, and will make harsh hair soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off.—Adv.

WONDER IT WASN'T FATAL

Girl's Question Must Have Given Awful Shock to Enthusiastic Harvard Football Rooter.

With all his wild cheers and vigorous gestures of encouragement, the Harvard undergraduate with the girl in the grandstand survived the strain until near the end of the second quarter. The Crimson halfback then caught a forward pass, shuffled off two Yale tacklers and crossed the goal line for the winning touchdown.

In the subsequent uproar one soft sentence, ringing high above the infernal roar, was put to him by the Radcliffe sophomore at his side:

"What is all the excitement about?" she asked.

It took the waterboy's sponge to revive him.

Embarrassed.

Edward is five years old and lives in Irvington. One morning he called early next door and asked for Mrs. Blank. "Come right in, Eddie," said Mrs. Blank. "What's on your mind so early this morning?"

"Well," began Edward, "I come to see your new rug."

"What a good little boy, to be so interested," and taking him by the hand she led him into the living room and pointed out the oriental rug.

"Well," said Eddie, "well, well, it don't make me sick to my stomach."—Kansas City Star.

The Way He Felt.

"Where are you going?" the dentist asked as a man started to leave the waiting room.

"I've been waiting here forty-five minutes for you to pull a tooth for me."

"Well, I'm ready for you now. Step into the operating room."

"I'm not ready for you now, doc. When I first came in here I was chockfull of doughboy courage, but each second some of it oozed away, and now I guess I must feel about the same way a German in a dugout felt just after he had shouted 'Kamerad!' and wasn't certain whether the answer would be a hand grenade or an order to march to the rear."

Sad News.

"Poor Godspur! His hands trembled when he opened that telegram from his wife."

"That showed genuine feeling. He probably feared she was ill or hurt in an accident."

"No. It was what he suspected, an urgent request for money coming as the finishing blow, just after he'd dropped $600 in a poker game. You know, the average married man simply can't understand why his wife has to have $50 or $60 at a time like that."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Vernon Franks Killed.

O. V. Franks, of Auburn, 41 years old, mail carrier, was instantly killed and his automobile in which he was riding, ground under the wheels of the north bound Ft. Wayne & Northwestern interurban car which leaves Auburn at 6:56 a. m. in an accident at the Morning Star road crossing north of Auburn on last Friday morning. He had left his home, just a short distance east on the road, a few moments before, to start on his mail route.

It being an unusually cold morning he had bundled up well before leaving his home and had the side curtains on the car.

The automobile was square on the track when the interurban car hit it so centered that the radiator of the car dropped on the west side of the track while the rear wheels remained on the east side of the crossing. The automobile was overturned, rolled and tumbled down the track in front of the car a distance of between 250 and 350 feet before the car was stopped. Mr. Franks was killed instantly and his remains strewn along the right-of-way.

According to Motorman Joseph Summergill and Conductor Gaskill who were in charge of the car, the proper alarm was given as the car neared the crossing.

Mr. Gaskill, who is the oldest conductor on the road, reports this as his first accident and stated that he had just walked to the front of the car. He said the enclosed Ford car was right in front of them on the track. There was a crash, the cow catcher and the light of the interurban car were snapped off and the car pushed the Ford machine down the track until stopped. The interurban car was going at a good speed when it struck the automobile, having just left the city limits of Auburn.

Chester Hodge, who lives near the crossing, was in his yard when he saw the interurban car approaching the crossing and also Mr. Franks coming west on the road from his home. As the two neared the crossing he wondered who would stop first and was dumbfounded to see the automobile on the track directly in the path of the oncoming interurban. There came the crash and he could see the car as it turned over and over again.

The Dilgard hearse was called but it was impossible to get the remains in a hearse and a basket was brought to take him to the undertaking parlors, so badly was his body mangled. He was crushed about his head and right side, his legs cut off and his body badly mangled in other ways. The Ford car was completely demolished.

Mr. Franks had been a mail carrier for about three years on R. F. D. No 3. He was a school teacher for years and was a good workman as an interior decorator. He had recently sold his property on Douglas street and moved to this five acre plat north of Auburn, which he purchased from G. A. Bassett.

O. V. Franks was born in DeKalb county in 1878, two miles southeast of Coburntown. November 16, 1901, he was married to Miss Hannah Baker who as his widow, survived him with seven children, Mildred, 16, Delos, Russell, Hartiett, Robert, Cleon and Martha. He has four brothers.

FIRE INSURANCE NOTARY PUBLIC

The funeral services were held from the Christian Church, Auburn, Sunday afternoon. He carried $2,500 insurance policy besides a $2,000 policy with the government as a mail carrier but there seems to be some question as to whether this policy will be paid because of the fact that he had not been on duty yet for the day, but was on his way.

A benefit show was put on at Auburn, Wednesday evening by the Court Theatre, W. A. Thomas, Manager, and the K. of P. Lodge, of which he was a member, took charge of the ticket sale. They expect to net several hundred dollars to help Mrs. Frank to pay up the expenses.

The Forty-fifth wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. M. T. Bishop was celebrated last Wednesday afternoon. Many of their friends called during the afternoon to extend congratulations and make short visits. Soon after the noon hour folks began to call and they kept it up until evening. They were surprised to learn that it had been planned by Mrs. Hathaway and Mrs. Buckingham a few days in advance and word was sent out for folks to call in this manner. Many pleasant and happy remembrances were called to mind by Mr. and Mrs. Bishop and they took special delight in conversing with their friends of the times forty-five years ago. They were among the early settlers in St. Joe and for years Mr. Bishop conducted a Hardware and Lumber business in the east part of town. Both have been active in the affairs of the town in the years past. Mr. Bishop has been afflicted with asthma which is accountable for his poor health. Tea and coffee were served all who called during the day.

TREATY ISSUE BRINGS WILSON-BRYAN CLASH

Sharp Difference of Opinion Over Question of Submitting Pact to the People.

MAY RESULT IN PARTY SPLIT

Chief Executive Against All Compromise in Senate, While Mr. Bryan Would Accept Reservations of a Certain Character.

Washington, Jan. 9.—President Wilson's decision that the League of Nations issue should be placed before the voters as a "solemn referendum" and William J. Bryan's contention that the Democratic party cannot go before the country on that question, but should accept such compromises "as may be possible," were the twin surprises of the conclave of party chieftains which found its climax in the annual Jackson day dinner.

PRESIDENT WILSON'S LETTER.

Congratulating the party upon the opportunity offered to be of service to the country in the matter of the League of Nations, inasmuch as its "ideas best fit it for the task of leadership in such a work," the chief executive wrote practically as follows:

"The United States enjoyed the spiritual leadership of the world until the senate of the United States failed to ratify the treaty by which the belligerent nations sought to effect the settlements for which they had fought throughout the war.

"It is inconceivable that at this supreme crisis and final turning point in the international relations of the whole world, when the results of the great war are by no means determined and are still questionable and dependent upon events which no man can foresee or count upon, the United States should withdraw from the concert of progressive and enlightened nations by which Germany was defeated and all similar governments (if the world be so unhappy as to contain any) warned of the certain consequences of any attempt of a like iniquity, and yet that is the effect of the course the senate of the United States has taken with regard to the treaty of Versailles.

"We Are Still at War."

"Germany is beaten, but we are still at war with her, and the old stage is reset for a repetition of the old plot. It is now ready for the resumption of the old offensive and defensive alliances which made settled peace impossible.

"Without the covenant of the league of nations there may be as many secret treaties as ever, to destroy the confidence of governments in each other, and their validity cannot be questioned. None of the objects we professed to be fighting for has been secured or can be made certain of without this nation's ratification of the treaty. . . .

World Peace Depends on U. S.

"The question is whether this country will enter and enter whole-heartedly. If it does not do so the United States and Germany will play a lone hand in the world. The maintenance of the peace of the world and the effective execution of the treaty depend upon the whole-hearted participation of the United States. I am not stating it as a matter of power. The point is that the United States is the only nation which has sufficient moral force with the rest of the world to guarantee the substitution of discussion for war. If we keep out of this agreement, if we do not give our guarantees, then another attempt will be made to crush the new nations of Europe.

Believes People Desire Ratification.

"I do not believe that this is what the people of this country wish or will be satisfied with. Personally, I do not accept the action of the senate of the United States as the decision of the nation. I have asserted from the first that the overwhelming majority of the people of this country desire the ratification of the treaty and my impression to that effect has recently been confirmed by the unmistakable evidences of public opinion given during my visit to seventeen of the states.

"I have endeavored to make it plain that if the senate wishes to say what the undoubted meaning of the league is, I shall have no objection. There can be no reasonable objection to interpretations accompanying the act of ratification itself. But when the treaty is acted upon, I must know whether it means that we have ratified or rejected it.

"Submit Treaty to People."

"We cannot rewrite this treaty. We must take it without changes which alter its meaning, or leave it, and then, after the rest of the world has signed it, we must face the unthinkable task of making another and separate kind of treaty with Germany.

"If there is any doubt as to what the people of the country think on this vital matter, the clear and simple way out is to submit it for determination at the next election to the voters of the nation, to give the next election the form of a great and solemn referendum, a referendum as to the part the United States is to play in completing the settlements of the war and in the prevention in the future of such outrages as Germany attempted to perpetrate.

No Moral Right to "Retreat."

"We have no more moral right to refuse now to take part in the execution and administration of these settlements than we had to refuse to take part in the fighting of the last few weeks of the war, which brought victory and made it possible to dictate to Germany what the settlements should be. . . .

"This, in my judgment, is to be the great privilege of the democracy of the United States, to show that it can lead the way in the solution of the great social and industrial problems of our time, and lead the way to a happy settled order of life as well as to political liberty.

"The program for this achievement we must attempt to formulate, and in carrying it out we shall do more than can be done in any other way to sweep out of existence the tyrannous and arbitrary forms of power, which are now masquerading under the name of popular government."

MR. BRYAN'S POSITION.

William Jennings Bryan, in that part of his address which had to do with the party's position on the League of Nations, said:

"A democratic president was the spokesman of the United States in holding out to a warworn world the hope of universal peace, and he brought back from Paris the covenant of a League of Nations that provides means for settling international disputes without a resort to force. He did the best he could, and succeeded better than we had any right to expect, when we remember that he fought single-handed against the selfish interests of the world.

"The Republican party, in control of the senate, instead of ratifying at once, or promptly proposing changes that it deemed necessary, has fiddled while civilization has been threatened with conflagration.

Compromise or Issue at Polls.

"The Democratic plan has been rejected, and we must face the situation as it is. We must either secure such compromises as may be possible, or present the issue to the country. The latter course would mean a delay of at least 14 months, and then success only in case of our securing a two-thirds majority in the senate.

"We cannot afford, either as citizens or as members of the party, to share with the Republican party responsibility for further delay; we cannot go before the country on the issue that such an appeal would present.

"Our nation has spent 100,000 precious lives and more than $20,000,000,000 to make the world safe for democracy, and the one fundamental principle of democracy is the right of the majority to rule. It applies to the senate and to the house as well as to the people.

"According to the Constitution, a treaty is ratified by a two-thirds vote, but the Democratic party cannot afford to take advantage of the Constitutional right of a minority to prevent a ratification. A majority of congress can declare war. Shall we make it more difficult to conclude a treaty than to enter a war?

"Neither can we go before the country on the issue raised by article X. If we do not intend to impair the right of congress to decide the question of peace or war when the time for action arises, how can we insist upon a moral obligation to go to war which can have no force or value except as it does impair the independence of congress? We owe it to the world to join in an honest effort to put an end to war forever, and that effort should be made at the earliest possible moment.

Should Retain Votes for Justice.

"What plan can a Democratic party have other than one that contemplates the popular election of those delegates who, in the influence they will exert, will be most in importance to the president himself?

"And what policy can the Democratic party have within the League of Nations other than one of absolute independence and impartiality between the league members and the league?

"Our nation's voice should at all times be raised in behalf of equal and exact justice between nations as the only basis of permanent peace; it should be raised in defense of the right of self-determination and in proclaiming a spirit of brotherhood as universal as the peace which we covenant."

GERARD WOULD YIELD POINTS

Former Ambassador to Germany Willing to Accept Compromise on League of Nations Pact.

James W. Gerard, former American ambassador to Germany and an announced candidate for the Democratic nomination, was a speaker at the twin Democratic banquet and took issue with the administration on the treaty issue and urged a compromise for the sake of world peace, even yielding on far as to accept the reservations.

Although he thought it a "great pity that the great men in the White House cannot relent over the adoption of the league with a world breathing thanks for our freedom from war," Mr. Gerard in his speech made it clear that he was willing to yield in the treaty deadlock, and, that failing, he urged the world to fall back on the Bryan arbitration treaties of 1914, which, if adopted, he said, would have prevented the world war.

Gowns That Win Favor in Paris

From present indications, writes a leading fashion correspondent, the Parisienne is not going to adopt any of the fantastic features that appeared in earlier models. She is accepting, however, in a very marked way, certain of the models which have distinct new features without any unbecoming or bizarre silhouette.

The Parisienne is too fond of her own personal appearance to go in for anything that is grotesque. She has worn too many good clothes and has too much personal taste and refinement in dress to go contrary to principles. Thus we find that out of the earlier showings, which carried all kinds of extraordinary hip extensions and queer girdlings, loops and draperies, the chic Parisienne has chosen straight lines, simple waistline beltings, soft collars and the natural silhouette.

This will come as no surprise to those who are close students of fashions in women's dress. Only the extremists were enthusiastic about the marked hip extensions and the complicated draperies.

Cuscho-Slavic Idea Proves Success.

As prophesied, the Lanvin models in the Cuscho-Slavic feeling have proved a success. While these dresses are of marked type, they are not bizarre in any way. In fact, they are most refined looking, with delicate thread embroidery in black on white or stone color. The best dressed women in Paris are wearing these gowns, which are of a straight chemiselike cut, but tightly girdled at the waistline with a string tie of the same material, which seemingly is drawn in as tightly as possible around the figure. This gives the appearance of being practically uncorseted, the stomach and hips bulging in a natural manner.

While the fashions of Jugo-Slav origin were thought by some to be extreme, they really were not. Probably the most remarkable feature about them is the great number of ideas which they embody.

Has Trouserlike Effect.

An example of how a costume that is simple and beautiful has been worked out from the long-coat garment with trouserlike underskirt, which was one of the most conspicuous notes in the Jugo-Slav collection, is a Lanvin model. It was she who first introduced this type of dress.

It is developed in pale castor colored velours de laine, the bottom band, which takes the place of the trouser underskirt, being black broadcloth and the collar of dyed fur, or polka, as it is called in France. The embroidery is black, with the exception of a touch of red around the pockets, the prevalent fashion of having a breast pocket for the watch and forming an edge down the entire front of the coat and making deep gauntlet cuffs. While this wrap is very simple it is of the type worn over dressy afternoon costumes, as well as a matching coat for the slipper velours or duvetyn dresses. It is smart to have one of these long coats exactly matching the frock.

Paris makes a great feature of very heavy wool embroidery done in a loop stitch, like tapestry. This is sometimes sheared to form little square tufts which stand away from the surface of the fabric a quarter of an inch deep. Sometimes a part of the pattern is clipped and the rest left in a tight loop. All patterns are geometrical and form deep, thick-looking borders on coats, collars and cuffs. To some degree this embroidery resembles a fur. It is almost overdone by Premet, as she uses it on so many models. The idea, however, is interesting and new.

Coats as well as dresses are drawn in tightly about the waistline to accentuate the natural lines of the figure. The one of wool velours shown has a collar, gauntlet cuffs and edging down the front of astrakhan.

Monkey Fur Still Popular.

Despite its great use last winter, monkey fur continues to be popular. It is very expensive when used in any quantity. As a garniture for dresses and suits it is not considered really smart unless used in the form of deep borders and enveloping collars. Lanvin has a delightful little dress with a deep border of jet black monkey fur at the bottom of the skirt. One of the most successful models from Madeleine is a coat of pearl gray checked in black and trimmed with a wide skirt band and a collar and cuffs of monkey fur. This coat is worn over a black velvet one-piece dress.

As to fur trimmings there is almost no tailored suit that has not fur trimming of some kind. The one-piece tailored dresses, or robe sautoure, are also heavily fur trimmed.

One thing specially to be remarked in the little use of the muff. Possibly the muffle type of wrap has made the muff unnecessary, as the wearer finds the muffle around her and holds it in place; then it would be very awkward to carry a muff.

The influence of the Jugo-Slav is quite apparent in the model sketched above, developed in castor-colored velours de laine. A light broadcloth underskirt gives a trouserlike effect.

ODDS AND ENDS

Belts are mandated.

"Poison green" is a favorite color.

Feather dresses are much in vogue.

Afternoon gowns show huge revers.

Belts are narrow and sometimes wrap the figure twice.

Suit coats are lined with bright printed tussah.

Cherry red and pearl gray are favored colors in the millinery world.

A general use of plaitings is noticeable in many of the new frocks.

Checked velours of brown and navy will be used for southern sport wear.

Some suit blouses are of high colored silks, trimmed with the suit cloth.

Many tailored blouses for spring will be of plain and frilled dotted swiss.

Accordion-plaited insertions may be used to give the prevailing side fullness.

Detachable Capes.

Judging from the winter's fashion notes, there are to be a good many coats with detachable capes. Sometimes a little fur cape is to be part of a cloth coat—a detachable part, that may be put on and taken off the coat at will.

Bleach for White Goods.

To bleach handkerchiefs, towels, etc., soak overnight in a solution of half a teaspoonful of cream of tartar to each quart of water.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Teacher of English Bible in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(©Copyright, 1919, Western Newspaper Union)

LESSON FOR JANUARY 18

THE BOLDNESS OF PETER AND JOHN.

LESSON TEXT—Acts 4:1-31.

GOLDEN TEXT—Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong. —I Cor. 16:13.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL—Matt. 4:18-22; Acts 3:12-26; II Tim. 4:6-8, 16-18; Heb. 11:32, 33.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Story of Two Brave Men.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Peter and John Standing Up for Jesus.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Courage to Do the Right.

1. Peter and John Arrested (vv. 1-4).

1. By Whom Arrested (vv. 1, 2). The priests and Sadducees. The priests were intolerant because these new teachers were encroaching upon their ministerial functions. The Sadducees opposed them from doctrinal consideration. They denied the resurrection from the dead and the future life. Although they were the intellectual liberalists of their day they were cruelly intolerant. The most outstanding bigots of our day are the professed intellectuals whose watchword is "scholarship."

2. The Result (vv. 3, 4). Peter and John were now put in confinement till the next day, it being too late for trial that day. Though the apostles were held by chains Christ continued to work, for the number of believers had now greatly increased. Opposition helps God's cause.

II. Peter and John on Trial (vv. 5-12).

1. The Inquiry (vv. 5-7). They were asked, "By what power, or in what name, have ye done this?" This inquiry admitted the reality of the miracle.

2. Peter's Answer (vv. 8-12). With stinging sarcasm he showed them that they were not being tried as evil doers, but for doing good to the helpless and needy man. He showed the absurdity of dealing with men as criminals who had merely relieved the suffering and helpless man from distress—thus the rulers were placed in a most ridiculous and embarrassing position. Since they could not deny the miracle, Peter boldly declared, "Be it known unto you all, and to all the people of Israel, that by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, whom God raised from the dead, even by him doth this man stand before you whole. This is the stone which was set at naught by you builders, which is become the head of the corner. Neither is there salvation in any other form; for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby ye must be saved."

III. The Impression Upon the Sanhedrin (vv. 13-22).

1. They marvelled (v. 13). The fact that the apostles spoke so boldly, being unlearned men, caused them to marvel. They saw that the behavior and words of Peter were as unusual as the miracle.

2. They took knowledge that they had been with Jesus (v. 13). They saw that though they had killed Jesus, his life and work were being reproduced in his disciples. Being with Christ (1) gives an experiential knowledge of him. The one who really knows Christ can and will testify of him and for him. (2) Gives freedom from fear. Peter, who shortly before this quailed before a Jewish maid, was now bold before the most august assembly of the Jews. (3) Opens a man's lips. What the heart feels, the mouth must speak out.

3. The judges commanded them not to speak in Christ's name (v. 18). They could not deny the miracle nor gainsay the accusation which Peter brought against them, so they attempted to intimidate them.

4. Peter and John's reply (vv. 19, 20). They expressed their determination to disobey their instructors—they openly defied the Sanhedrin. "Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye; for we cannot speak the things which we have seen and heard." By this declaration they repudiated the authority of the rulers of Israel and set the church in a place of independence from the Jewish state.

5. Their release (v. 21). Having further threatened them, the Sanhedrin let them go, as it had no way to punish them, since the people were on their side.

IV. The Church at Prayer. (vv. 23-31).

As soon as Peter and John were set free they hastened away to their disciples and rehearsed to them their experiences. They took the matter to God in prayer, and in their communion they turned to the Holy Scriptures for comfort and strength.

Forgive and Forgiven.

Of him that hopes to be forgiven it is indispensably required that he forgive. It is, therefore, superfluous to urge any other motive. On this great duty eternity is suspended, and to him that refuses to practice it, the throne of mercy is inaccessible, and the favor of the world has been born in vain.—Johnson.

OUR HEROINE BECOMES A PRISONER.

Synopsis.—While in Vevay, Switzerland, where the "staid proper spinster" who tells this story is spending a vacation, she is asked to allow Claire de Ravenol to be her companion back to the United States, but because of dislike for the girl's father she refuses. Later on, meeting them on the boat, she discovers Claire in care of a Mrs. Delario, whom she had met when they were purchasing a pair of slippers, exactly alike, and which figure prominently in subsequent events. In the confusion at the New York customs office the spinster carries off one of Mrs. Delario's slippers. She returns the slipper the next day and is shown some diamonds worth a million dollars which Mrs. Delario admits were smuggled. A man claiming to be an officer arrives with a warrant for the arrest of Mrs. Delario's son on a charge of stealing the diamonds. She outwits him and persuades the spinster to take the jewels home for safe keeping. Next day she returns the jewels, but learning that Mrs. Delario's son has been kidnaped she agrees to keep them for a while. She hides the stones in a bunch of hyacinths. Over the telephone De Ravenol informs her Mrs. Delario has met with an accident and urges her to call at once. She is met by De Ravenol, who claims that the diamonds are his, stolen from Claire on the boat, and demands their return. Our heroine defies De Ravenol. Returning home she finds that her flat has been ransacked. She discovers that De Ravenol has an apartment in the same building.

CHAPTER X.

—10—

A Prisoner.

"Alone at last!" That was my first feeling as I sank into my easy chair to collect my thoughts—alone with a million dollars' worth of diamonds—alone on the sixth floor with monsieur occupying lawfully the flat directly under mine! And what was I to do?

Obviously, the first thing was to hide them, and since they'd been safe once in the hyacinths I wasn't going to tempt fate by changing the place. So I put my fresh bunch in water, poked the diamonds among the stems and threw the old bunch away.

Soon done—but my real problem lay in barricading myself so that monsieur could not get in again. Remember, he had the use of the same fire escape and dumb-waiter shaft, to say nothing of the hall stairs—he could come and go in the house as he pleased.

The dumb-waiter I counted out because I could easily wire up the catch and make it impossible for anyone to open the door from the shaft side without actually breaking the door off its hinges—a most unlikely thing for monsieur to attempt.

Fortunately, I kept a kit of tools in the house—I'm not one of your helpless women who can't drive a nail or sink a screw—and my next act was to take the small chain-bolt that had been on the front door and put it on the hallside of the kitchen door. Then I changed the keys on this and the bathroom doors to the hall side. From the fire escape, monsieur could enter only those two rooms, and with their doors locked—and one chain-bolted—on him, he would have to break them off their hinges to get at me that way.

The bathroom window didn't give me much concern. The sash was stuck fast by the last painting and I couldn't raise it myself; the glass was too thick to be cut readily and I didn't believe monsieur would advertise himself to the neighborhood by breaking it. But I drove a couple of nails above the sash just for luck and then gave my attention to the kitchen window.

Since he'd gone out that way, he'd very likely try it to come back by. The glass was thin—he could cut it out easily; he could even smash it and come through so quickly that nobody would see him. But all right, monsieur, thought I, I'm going to give you your money's worth—I'll make you stand on the fire escape long enough for the neighbors to get a good look at you.

I had a couple of rolls of picture wire and I tacked this across the sash—not across the frame, because I didn't want to find myself wired in while he was wired out. The wire made a considerable network, almost impossible to get through without a pair of wire nippers, and I doubted very much if he'd be carrying such things in his pocket; and when I had nailed down the sash, as I have said, in the bathroom I felt secure in my retreat. There was now no way for a man to get in while I was in—unless, that is, he came down from the roof on a rope to one of the other windows. I thought of that and got ready to knock him off with a broom or throw pepper in his eyes if he tried that trick on me. And at last I felt I was safe—so long as I stayed in, of course!

All the time I'd been working, my mind had pounded out dully the question, "What had I better do next?" and the only answer seemed to be I must get help from some one—I had passed the point where I could play a lone hand in the game and save the diamonds. I had tried to telephone several times without getting an answer, which at the moment didn't astonish me. It provoked me, though, that I could not order something from the grocer and the butcher for my dinner. I go out to dinner, but tonight, even had I been so minded, I dared not leave the flat.

Outside the drizzle had settled to a steady downpour. It was dark and gloomy and my feelings were the same as I opened some canned stuff and got as much of a meal as I could with what was in the house. I think it was the skimpiness of the larder at the time that showed me as much as anything else how important it was for me now to get help—I had food enough to last for a couple of days, and after that—if things kept on this way—how was I to get it?

Billy Rivers was, of course, my logical resource. He had seen the flat the night before—he could start all the protective machinery in the city for me. With this resolution, I went to the telephone. It was "dead"—my connection was severed! I didn't need to be told that monsieur had cut my wires!

The full magnitude of my calamity burst upon me and I sat down on the nearest chair with a flop. The bitter fact of the whole situation struck me like a blow on the head—I'd let every chance for protection or flight go by me; the one remaining chance was a letter entrusted to my spy. Well, I'd try that, anyway.

I spent an hour in composing a missive to Billy that would tell him a great deal and monsieur nothing—if it fell into his hands—and this is what came out of it:

"Dear Billy: I'm ready to sell you that story I promised. It is now nearly finished, but I shall need some help from you in arranging the climax. Don't waste time telephoning—the telephone is out of order—but attend to it personally. This is an ambulance call."

It all hinged on the words "ambulance call" and if Billy would read them "hurry up," and then, taking them in connection with what he'd seen of the flat robbery, read, "My life is in danger."

And would monsieur see it if the letter fell into his hands? That was my risk—and there you are!

I made three copies. I directed one to Billy at his office—I inclosed one in a letter to Philadelphia to my brother asking him to mail it there—I dropped the third, carelessly, into the manuscript of a short story, sent to a magazine, hoping the editor would think it an accident and kindly mail it for me.

It was half past ten and I was fagged out. My last chance had come. "Would George mail the letters?" I got a quarter out for him—I was afraid to give him more and make him think the letters were important and not the sort of thing he mailed for me almost every night.

I dragged one weary foot after the other along the hall—I hated to let the letters out of my hands now that I had them ready. "Well, he's got to do it!" said I firmly, and took hold of the door knob and the Yale latch.

I turned and pulled; turned the other way round and pulled again. I was locked in from the outside and the key was in the lock! I was hard and fast a prisoner in my own flat!

The immediate effect on me of this discovery is hard to describe. My head swam and the room went round, and everything was all mixed up, and I kept repeating: "Fire! If there's a fire tonight I'll be burned like a rat in a trap!"

And with that I went to bed—there was nothing else to do.

I was nearly as much astonished in the morning to find the key gone from the lock as I had been to find it there. Apparently I was free to take that eleven o'clock train for Philadelphia that the fake telegram from my brother had requested me to—I was free to put the diamonds in my stocking and step out into—the Great Unknown! Only—I wasn't such a fool as to do it! I could and did, however, give George my letters to mail.

One thing was now clear to me—as long as I stayed in the flat I was comparatively safe—I must make my main play that Billy had got my letter or that somebody would call. Though of course George would say I was out—he was paid for that by monsieur.

In this manner of living—afraid to go out and being unable to communicate even with the grocer—two days were away; to be exact, from Tuesday night to Friday morning. And they were enlivened by some interesting experiences. On the second night I was awakened by the sound of a latchkey working at my front door. I tiptoed into the hall and listened. I can't say I was frightened. The chain-bolt was on and the only way it could be got off was by first shutting the door tight—which meant it could not be worked back with a wire. I had seen to that when the locksmith put it in.

Nothing came of this attempt to fit a key to my new lock, and I got comfort out of the thought that it proved monsieur regarded the fire escape as much too public for his performances.

I had given George my letters to mail on Wednesday morning, but as Thursday were away and Billy didn't come I saw what I was in for—I was to be starved into leaving the flat. I was already weak for want of food: I suppose my belief in imminent starvation had something to do with it, but as a matter of fact I had had nothing that could be called a square meal since Monday night at the restaurant, and I hadn't eaten much then—I was too excited over my encounter with monsieur. Oh, how I wished I'd eaten that egg Mrs. Jimmeson boiled for me—it might have saved my life! Yes, I was weak with hunger, and by Sunday night there would not be a mouthful in the house to eat. It was now Thursday evening.

That night monsieur picked the new Yale lock on the front door!

How long he'd been working at it before I woke up I can't say, and I might never have known it at all if he hadn't accidentally dropped his bunch of keys on the tiled floor. Their tinkling awoke me. I knew on the instant what it was and lay perfectly still while I felt him listening for a sound from me to show that I was awake. I should say I lay there fifteen minutes before he went on with his job.

Softly I crept out of bed. I tiptoed through the hall and placed myself back of the door where he could not see me should he get it open.

We stood thus possibly five minutes, his work lighted by the hall gas jet, I in total darkness, while keys slid into the lock, slid out and clicked against the bunch he had in his hand. It was a large bunch, judging from the sound.

The sixth key did it. The Yale lock turned once—twice. He withdrew the key and I heard him taking it off the ring and dropping the bunch into his pocket. He put the key once more in the lock and tried again to make sure. It was not till then that he unlocked the lower lock—the one he kept me prisoner with. He'd never once given me the chance to pop out on him till he was ready to pop in on me!

And now he was ready. The key turned—the door handle turned. A strip of light showed over his head and slowly widened. The chain-bolt slid and slid, almost noiselessly, along its socket. Then it stopped.

I think he hadn't noticed it at first—he had turned the gas low and as he stood he cut off the light. When the door suddenly stopped he moved aside to see what was hampering him. I saw the glitter of the brass chain. He saw it too. Then darkness again, and I felt rather than saw his fingers come through the crack and feel the chain.

Next came the whole hand and worked at the chain—but the further he pushed it back the tighter closed the door. It was meant to be that way, but he didn't yet know it!

He bared his arm and thrust it through the crack and felt along the slot to the hole in the end. This was my chance to give him one with the hairbrush—but I didn't. Truth to tell, I was too paralyzed with excitement. I had my chance and let it go.

I did nothing—said nothing—scarcely breathed the whole time he was there. And to this day I don't know if I could have bettered the situation by doing anything but what I did—nothing.

He wasted very little time on the chain. It took him not more than two minutes to learn that he couldn't get the bolt out at the end of the slot without first shutting the door—which meant it couldn't be got out except from the inside. He withdrew his hand. There was a dead pause in which he seemed to be considering what to do next. Then he closed the door and locked me in again. I did not hear him leave—only, when the door closed on him all was silent. He probably crept up and down the stairs in gum shoes. And with my teeth chattering I asked myself my now favorite question, "What next?" I was to have it answered in a way I didn't expect.

CHAPTER XI.

One of the Slippers.

I went back to bed, and thus ends Thursday night. Friday morning found me pretty desperate. I felt I must now get help or literally die—of starvation, if nothing worse; for if I went out, now that monsieur had a key to my flat, he could slip in and lock me out and stay till he found the diamonds. And if I took them out with me—well, that was something I simply couldn't think of. Nothing had come of the letters I had given George to mail—he has always stuck to it that he put them in the box immediately; well, he put them in the box—but not until Saturday, as I happen to know by the postmarks on two of them. But let that go. On Friday morning the one person I could positively trust to mail a letter for me popped into my head—the postman.

I rang for George and it was a solemn face I showed in exchange for his ivory smile.

"George, I seem to have lost a check in the mail," said I soberly. "I want you to bring the postman up on his next trip so I can see about it."

Next Came the Whole Hand.

"I don't know nothin' about it," he exclaimed excitedly. "If it come I bring it up—that's a sure thing."

"Nobody says you took it," I reminded him. "But I must see the postman on his next trip."

"Well, I ain't take no letter and no check," George still protested. But I held my peace—George had done something about my letters he was afraid I'd find out. And I did—by the next delivery. He brought up one with my brother's business address on the outside, the postmark in New York three days old!

He hurried down to catch the man on his next trip, and through the top of the disappearing car rang out to me, "I ain't take no letter and no check!"

I rushed to my study, and this is the letter I dashed off to Billy:

Dear Billy: That affair is now life and death. Come at once—but tell nobody till you've been here. Bring two good revolvers. Don't bother with the telephone—my wires are cut and I'm a prisoner being starved to death in my own flat.

Billy—this is the biggest story—and romance—you ever struck. When you get to the house the elevator boy will tell you I'm not at home. It's a lie—I'm upstairs. If he refuses to bring you up, scuffle. If he tries to prevent your coming up—or if he calls on the detective sitting in the lower hall—go to the nearest police station and get a couple of men. But don't do this till you've tried every other possible way of reaching me. Try it by the roof of the flat house next door.

Drop everything and come—only don't drop the revolvers—mine was taken that night. And Billy—you'd better leave a sealed envelope with some friend telling where you are and that if you don't telephone—say—three hours he is to come to the house with the police. But keep this secret, and for heaven's sake hurry, and if you can as easy as not bring me something to eat—I'm out of everything but four rolls and three sardines. Only hurry.

I addressed this to Billy at his office, found a ten-cent piece for special delivery, and hadn't more than just got it ready when George sprily brought up the postman.

A reporter gets into the game.

PUBLIC ROADS

MANY GOOD-ROAD PROJECTS

Oklahoma Leads Country in Size of Single Scheme Handled During the Month of July.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Among the special features of the recent federal aid road record as kept by the United States department of agriculture are three road projects to cost over $1,000,000, one of them over $2,000,000. Pennsylvania had first place in the number of statements approved during July, the amount of federal aid allowances, and the estimated cost of roads to be constructed, while Nebraska turned in the greatest mileage. Seventeen projects in Pennsylvania approved will cost $4,607,023.41 for which the federal aid is $1,968,907.40. Ohio with 12 projects came next to Pennsylvania in the number approved and in the estimated cost of the roads to be improved, and third in the amount of federal aid.

Oklahoma's two projects occupy third place for the month in the estimated cost of the roads and second in the amount of federal aid allowance. This state leads the country in the size of a single project handled in July. It is estimated to cost $1,271,555.00 for which $900,000 federal aid is allowed.

In the record of approvals for the month of August Arkansas occupies first place in the estimated cost and mileage of projects and in respect to the largest project. Minnesota is first in the total number of projects approved, namely 11, and second in the amount of federal aid allowances. Pennsylvania received the largest amount of federal aid and her six approved projects come second in the estimated cost of the roads.

On a Massachusetts project, a short concrete road, the estimated cost is at the rate of $127,894 a mile. This is the highest average cost per mile so far shown in any federal aid road. A bituminous brick or concrete road in Ohio will average $67,716 a mile and 7.14 miles of concrete or brick in Pennsylvania will average $64,018, while another project in Pennsylvania will average $56,443 per mile.

Was Going Down-Hill

Mrs. Bergman's Friends Were Worried, but Doan's Brought Remarkable Recovery From Kidney Complaint.

"I couldn't sit down without putting a pillow behind my back," says Mrs. Ole Bergman, 820 Pennsylvania St., Gary, Ind. "When I bent over it felt as though somebody had stuck a knife right into my back and I would often fall to the floor. The kidney secretions made me get up four and five times a night. There would be only a small amount, which would burn so that I would almost scream. Before long my body bloated and my feet were so swollen that I couldn't wear my shoes. My skin looked shiny and when I pressed it down it left a dent. I had chills and fever. Sometimes I would sweat so that I could fairly wring the water out of my clothes. Everybody said I was going down-hill fast. In two months I lost fifteen pounds and was discouraged. By the time I had finished three boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills I was entirely cured and I have enjoyed the best of health ever since."

Joe and Donald Keller, two young farmers of north of town, came to St. Joe Saturday evening to call on their lady friends, at least that is where we think they were, and when they came to go home were unable to find their rig. It was learned that they failed to tie the horse and after standing a while it started out of town and the boys were compelled to follow the track to locate it. The horse went north and landed at the Don Hindman home about 3 miles north of town. Don heard a racket at the barn and supposed that someone was endeavoring to steal his new Ford, so he called his neighbor Badman over the field by phone to come and help him catch the thieves. When Mr. Badman arrived he recognized the rig and not long a light was seen coming up the road from the south and it was the boys making their way through the snow with a spot light. This is the story as 'twas told the editor.

FINANCING THE FARM ON THE BUDGET PLAN

War Savings Organization Gives Tillers of Soil System on Which to Increase Capital for Future.

Farming nowadays justly is recognized as a business and a profession. As a profession it is prepared for as carefully as any other branch of highly specialized endeavor; as a business it is conducted according to business methods and upon a businesslike basis. Old-time "hit or miss" farming methods fail utterly under the present economic regime.

The first step toward businesslike farm management consists of systematizing farm finances. Because farm moneys come in irregularly they have been handled too often in the past without any adequate accounts or record. This method, rendered impossible by income tax necessities, long has been scorned by the successful, progressive farmer who believes in modern machinery, modern comforts, modern efficiency practices and projects. Such a farmer employs a farm budget just as he employs grain, soil and weather statistics in the arrangement of his farm operations, takes a good farm journal and demands fine and well-tested seeds. Because not every farmer cares to spend time making out an individual farm budget governmental experts, working through the War Savings Stamps department of the War Loan Organization, Seventh Federal Reserve district, have provided for the use of every farmer who cares to employ them farm records, including account sheets, that render the keeping of farm accounts a simple task.

One page of the simple pamphlet containing the indicated records is devoted to receipts, its opposite to expenditures, each registered every day of the year. Milk, butter, poultry, eggs, cattle and hogs, sheep, oats, corn, hay, fruit, vegetables and miscellaneous—these are the headings under which the irregular or recurrent sources of income are listed.

Total income for each day is shown at the right of the page, monthly total, collective and for separate items, at the foot. The expenditures page, similarly arranged, shows headings of: Savings, including War Savings Stamps purchased, bank deposits, etc.; labor; food, including groceries and meat; clothing; repairs; blacksmith; machinery; rent, insurance and taxes; live stock and feed; buildings; literature, which includes books, magazines and newspapers; recreation; and miscellaneous. Again, daily totals are shown at the right of the page, monthly totals, itemized and general, at the foot. Companion pages, similarly arranged, show yearly summaries, almost instantaneously computed, of receipts and expenditures for the year.

War Savings Stamps make ideal investments for the farmer. Purchasable for sums ranging from $4 and a few odd pennies to $1,000, built up by means of Thrift Stamps, should this prove more convenient, they are non-depreciable, nonfluctuating, income-bearing and distinguished by high rate of maturity interest. Previous to maturity they may be redeemed, if necessary, at precise face value.

HOW A SCHOOL BANK WORKS

Savings System in Eastern Institution Results in $60,000 Deposits, Averaging Weekly More Than $140.

Twelve years ago a New England school principal called a meeting of the mothers and fathers in his district, and proposed that they help their youngsters and himself start a school savings bank. If children were to patronize such an institution, they would have to have money, and he suggested that parents help them earn money by their own labor. He told them that the bank was to be part of school training, teaching thrift, industry, prudence and wisdom.

Today this school savings bank, in the Henry Barnard school, Hartford, Conn., has deposits of more than $50,000. The average weekly deposit during twelve years has been more than $140. The largest deposit by any child since the opening of the bank is $1,490, and the smallest less than $1.

Operation of this bank is simple. Solon P. Davis, the school principal, describes it: Deposits are received every Monday morning during the first half-hour of school. The pupils of the eighth grade act as tellers, each being assigned to a given room. Each child is provided with a pass book in which his deposits are entered by the teller.

Deposits are made at the teacher's desk, in the presence of the teacher and the teller, who enters them in his roll book. The teacher and teller then verify all deposits and place them in an envelope, which the teller delivers to the school secretary, who compares roll book and envelope, verifying the items. The envelopes are then forwarded to the Hartford Society for Savings, where the accounts of the school are pledged.

At interest periods, December, March and June, the roll books are examined by the secretary, and a personal account is opened at the Society for Savings for each pupil who has $2 in the school bank. After this, at these periods, all amounts of $1 or more, standing to his credit on a pupil's school deposit book, are added to his personal account. If any pupil wishes to withdraw his money a written statement from the parent or the parent's personal application is required.

Writes of a Great Gas Excitement.

South Connellsville, Pa.,
Jan. 4, 1920.

Dear Fred:

After receiving The News of two weeks ago, wherein notice was given that after the Christmas issue, The News would be discontinued, I thought my last letter would be what "the shoemaker threw at his wife" the last, but I am more than pleased to note that The News will be a visitor each week, and to those away from home, each little local is like receiving a letter from home. If we did not receive a copy of The News how would we know that Derwood Ridgway had been elected superintendent of the Lutheran Sunday School, or that J. P. Buckingham was putting up ice, or that the M. P. Sunday School had a fine Christmas tree and a fine program, or that John George was called to Nappanee, or that St. Joe Basket Ball team skinned Garrett B. B. T. to a fair-you-well, or that the K. of P's. had an idea that they could play some. All these little locals are like letters to us. While my garbling letters to The News reaches out to many of our friends and in a way saves us much letter writing (and postage) and, while my letters are addressed to "Dear Fred," yet we want all our friends to know that they are meant in part for them also, therefore, we are more than glad that you reconsidered your plan to discontinue the publication of The News.

In my last letter, I again promised a description of the Lawber Mines but, say, this extreme cold weather, has kept me inside, and I have not ventured out. Six below zero yesterday a. m. and five this a. m., much too cold for the old man, especially as all the children have good warm houses, furnaces and plenty of coal. The mouth of one coal mine is only about forty rods south of us, and inside the city limits. It is a private mine and they have mined only about three quarters of a mile into the hill. They sell to consumers only, and sell coal at the mine for 10c per bushel, 14c if delivered. They don't sell by the ton here. It is all by the bushel. Miners have to mine twenty-eight bushels for a ton, and the customer gets twenty-six bushels for a ton. Twenty-six bushels will weigh out a full ton, so you see if you do as in St Joe, go get it yourselves, a ton will cost you $2 60, fine coal at that, so you can see that the high price of coal out there lies between the railroads and the retailer.

I don't know, but perhaps you have read of the gas excitement out here at McKeesport, just a little west of here, where gas wells are being drilled by the hundreds, with the result that many "gushers" have come in, and very few dry holes. The "Detscher" with a fifty million feet of gas per day, the "Foster" with sixty million feet per day, and many others running from twenty to forty million per day. Stock is being sold everywhere. One girl, a "Hello girl" bought a $10 share in the "Detscher" well and is now drawing $100 per day. The "Foster" well took fire some way one day and shot a blaze, large as a man's body over a hundred feet in the air. It burned like that for three days and nights. They put it out with a cross fire of steam from three large boilers, then capped it and turned it into the pipe line. Layton is on the direct line of this gas belt and one test well shows an immense flow right there. One well, about forty rods from our place, they had to use three plugs to plug it. The first two blew out as fast as they put them in, the gas pressure was that strong. You can hear nothing but gas talk all the way from Layton to McKeesport. We are very anxious for them to begin drilling on our place, as we realize what it means to us in our old age. Of course it is coming sometime the coming summer.

While it is a little late, yet I cannot refrain from letting our friends out in old St. Joe know that we had the most delightful Christmas we have ever spent. Each of the children had seperate Christmas days for us, and the tables groaned. One wouldn't think the mone-ter, H. C. L., had hit this part of the U. S. A. It would take up too much space to enumerate the different courses at each. Five different Christmas dinners. No wonder ma is about down, and also it seemed that each one vied with the other in giving us so many beautiful and all useful presents, in the way of clothing, etc., some of Uncle Sam's stereotyped paper included.

Well, Fred, I guess I have taken up enough of your space, so I will close for this time, and if the weather lets up so I can I am going to the mines.

Mrs. Peterson sends her kindest regards to all our friends, as I also do.

Yours Truly,
W. E. Peterson.

Many People Poisoned

Scores of people meet death each year by a slow process of poisoning that is going on within our bodies. This poisoning is caused by the liver and kidneys failing to perform their proper function. Poisonous matter accumulates within the body and health declines. The unsightly liver spintches, biliousness, headache and dizziness, bad taste in the mouth, coated tongue, a pain in the back or under the shoulder blade, a tired or achy feeling are some of the most common symptoms of this poisoning. If this poisoning it not expelled and the cause removed the resisting power is finally gone and life pays the penalty. Are you of the heedless class or are you safeguarding your health? If you want health you must keep the liver, kidneys and bowels active. Glando Tonic is what you need to restore this activity and expell the poisons. Keep on the safe side and use a reliable remedy. Glando Tonic is put up in a treatment form and guaranteed to do the work. Ask your druggist for a large $1 treatment. Take it as directed and you will be surprised to know how much poison was stored up within your body. When the liver is inactive a mucous or slime collects within the stomach and bowels which hinders digestion and the assimilation of food. This is called catarrh of the stomach or bowels. Glando Tonic cuts this slime and mucus and removes it. A nauseated feeling is sometimes experienced when this mucus is breaking loose but as soon as it is removed from the bowels, you will feel fine, the complexion clear, the appet to return and you will want to tell others of your wonderful cure.

Glando Tonic is sold by druggists or may be secured by sending direct to the Gland-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Indiana.

In 1699 They Smoked Big Cigars Made Just as They Are Made at Present Time.

The earliest known mention of cigars is in a book published in 1740 under the title of "Distresses and Adventures of John Cockburn." It appears that Cockburn was cast on a desert island in the Bay of Honduras, from which he swam to the mainland, and thence traveled afoot to Porto Bello, a distance of 2,000 miles. Here he met some friars who gave him some "wegars" to smoke. "These," he says, "are some leaves of tobacco rolled up in some manner that serves both as pipe and the tobacco itself." Though this is the earliest date at which cigars appear to be mentioned by that name, so far back as 1498 two soldiers sent by Columbus to explore Cuba told their companions on their return how the natives carried in their mouths a lighted firebrand made from the leaves of a certain herb, rolled up in maize leaves. The description of an Indian method of smoking given by Lionel Wafer, in his "Travels in the Isthmus of Darien," in 1699, shows that they then smoked cigars made just as they are made now. The manufacture and consumption of cigars in northern Europe only dates from the close of the seventeenth century.

LIFE'S LOVELINESS

Sometimes the abundant beauty of the world
Makes my heart tremble and ache.
Sometimes, when summer's banners are unfurled,
Or autumn's glory on the winds is tossed and whirled,
I think my heart will break.

For loveliness is often too great to bear.
Trees laced at twilight, how they lift me up
To the far heights of heaven! And winds that stir
At evening bid my soul with God confer.
I drink the beauty of the world as from a cup.

Why should I almost weep when I behold
The quiet moon, a ship lights down the night?
Over and over I watch the shadows fold,
Over and over I see the stars' clear gold,
But never yet have I lost the new delight.

I weep for gladness, as women weep when Love
Enters the heart, singing its age-old song.
And I weep that the cloud which sails that sea above
Will drift from my dreams and all the hopes thereof
And I weep that life is short, when I thought it long.

—Charles Hanson Towne in Harper's Magazine.

Patent Medicines Drove "Yarbs" Out of Business

"Yarbs" are little known to the present generation. The patent medicines drove the "yarbs" out of business. The writer made his first acquaintance with one little "yarb," the goldthread, when as a boy he was given its wiry, yellow, bitter rootstocks to chew for canker in the mouth—truly not a delicious morsel.

The small, white flowers of this plant develop some interesting features. The outer divisions are the sepals, though they serve in the usual capacity of petals as well. Each real petal is small, club-shaped and terminated by a cupilke disk which, strangely enough, has been transformed into a nectary. The pistils are curiously hooked.—W. L. Bascraft in Boys' Life.

BOSCHEE'S SYRUP.

A cold is probably the most common of all disorders and when neglected is apt to be most dangerous. Statistics show that more than three times as many people died from influenza last year, as were killed in the greatest war the world has ever known. For the last fifty-three years Boschee's Syrup has been used for coughs, bronchitis, colds, throat irritation and especially lung troubles. It gives the patient a good night's rest, free from coughing, with easy expectoration in the morning. Made in America and used in the homes of thousands of families all over the civilized world. Sold everywhere.—Adv.

HIGH STANDARDS OF CLEANLINESS ARE DEMANDED OF ALL PRODUCERS OF MILK

Where Cleanliness Is a Business Asset—People Like to Buy Milk That Comes From a Clean, Sanitary Milk House Like This.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

To unnumbered city folk the bottle of milk they find on the porch each morning represents practically the sum of their daily contact with rural people. And this prominence of the milk bottle, or rather of its contents, has a financial significance not fully appreciated by the many farmers living within the zones from which the city's milk supply comes. The condition in which the milk arrives at the consumer's kitchen depends upon the carefulness of several agencies, but as dairy experts of the United States department of agriculture and others have repeatedly emphasized, the dairyman's position in this matter is particularly important, for laxness on his part may carry ill effects to the consumer despite all subsequent precautions by others who handle the milk. The public understands this pretty clearly and is placing increasing importance on the condition of dairies, large and small.

Consumers Demand Cleanliness.

If they display any tendency toward laxness, farmers who supply most big milk dealers are speedily required to correct their practices and conform to high sanitary standards. But there are a great many who do not have the advantage of such advice and regulation. Experience has proved that no milk dealer, small or large, can afford to jeopardize his market by insanitary practices. The day is almost sure to come, perhaps unexpectedly early, when some village or city inspector, or inquisitive, aggressive customer will start out to ascertain conditions at the source of his milk supply. When that time of reckoning arrives, experienced milk dealers point out, the farmer who has been alert to keep his daily equipment in approved fashion will profit in dollars and cents.

That milk must come from clean, healthy cows and be milked by clean, healthy persons into clean utensils cannot be emphasized too often, according to the United States department of agriculture specialists. As soon as the cows are milked the milk should be taken to the milk house. On a well-ordered farm this structure is conveniently near the barn, but so placed as to be free from dust and stable odors. Under some circumstances it is permissible to have the milk house in the same building as the stable, but in such a case it should be provided with a separate entrance, and the walls separating the two should have no openings.

A properly constructed milk house preferably is divided into two rooms, one where the utensils may be washed and the other where the milk is handled. A plentiful and convenient supply of water is a necessary feature, and its purity is an obvious requisite.

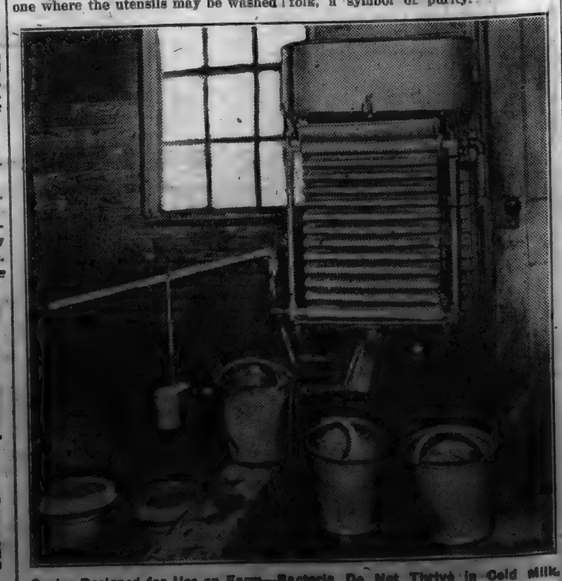
To make sure that utensils are properly washed, convenient arrangements for heating water should be provided. The sanitary dairyman rinses his utensils in cold water immediately after using them, and then washes them in hot water to which soda or some washing powder has been added. Brushes are preferable to cloths for washing as they are more easily kept clean and do better work. Utensils should then be sterilized by means of some form of steam sterilizer.

The milk should be weighed, strained, and cooled in the milk house shortly after it is brought from the stable. Straining is intended to remove the dirt that may have fallen into it, and is best done with a layer of sterilized absorbent cotton placed between two cloths, or by using filter cloth or similar material. Such cloths should be washed just as the utensils are, boiled five minutes, and then hung in a clean place to dry.

Cold Checks Bacteria.

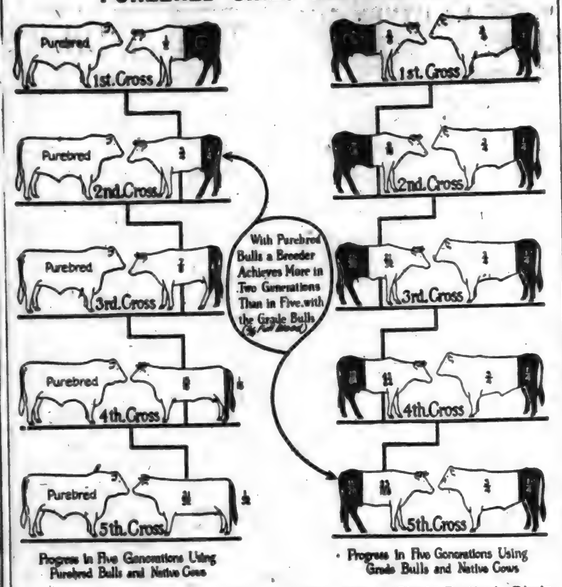
Relatively high temperatures promote the multiplication of bacteria. Therefore, it is essential that the milk be cooled as soon as possible to 50 degrees F. or lower. Ordinary cooling can be done satisfactorily by placing the cans in a tank, preferably of concrete. If the farmer has a supply of ice the tanks can be filled with ice and water. If he has no ice fairly good results can be obtained from a well or spring of running water. In either case the cans should be immersed well up to the necks. Stirring with a clean stirrer will also hasten cooling. A more rapid method is to run milk over a cooler in the interior of which is cold, running water; but if the air is not pure the milk will be contaminated by this process.

The United States department of agriculture is glad to supply any farmer engaged in dairying with a variety of pamphlets relating to sanitary dairy methods, as well as other equally important questions, such as keeping the herd free from tuberculosis. While the observance of the suggestions offered relating to sanitary practices may involve some additional expense, experience has proved repeatedly that the direct benefits to the farmer in the greater demand for his product more than repay him for the outlay involved. Every farmer engaged in dairying will find it profitable to do his utmost to make the full milk bottle, so familiar to city folk, a symbol of purity.



Cooler Designed for Use on Farm—Bacteria Do Not Thrive in Cold Milk.

WHAT IT MEANS IN LONG RUN TO USE PUREBRED SIRES INSTEAD OF GRADES



Progress in Five Generations Using Purebred Bulls and Native Cows

Progress in Five Generations Using Grade Bulls and Native Cows

See How Rapidly the Proportion of Scrub Blood (Black Portion) Diminishes When a Purebred Sire Is Used.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Tom Jones and John Brown live on adjoining farms. Each of them owns a scrub cow. The county agent gave them a United States department of agriculture bulletin on grading up by the use of better sires, and they have decided to try it.

Joe Smith, who lives a mile down the road, owns a three-quarters grade Shorthorn bull. The nearest purebred Shorthorn bull is a herd header at the Ellendale farm, seven miles away. Now, there isn't a great deal of difference—on the outside—between a three-quarters blood and a purebred. Tom Jones, being busy, patronizes Joe Smith's three-quarters Shorthorn bull. John Brown, remembering a copy-book maxim that whatever is worth doing is worth doing well, takes the trouble and the time to patronize the pure-bred bull at the Ellendale farm.

Short Cut to Good Blood.

There would not seem to be very much difference in the offspring. But, in actual fact, John Brown accomplishes in two crosses a result that is a little better than Tom Jones gets in five crosses. In about four years John Brown has an animal of a fraction higher grade than Tom Jones can get in about 15 years.

There may be no way to show it mathematically, but every reasonable man knows that the difference between four years and 15 years is greater than the difference between a mile and seven miles.

Or, put it in somewhat different form. Say that both Tom Jones and John Brown own a number of scrub cows and desire to buy bulls. Jones, being penny-wise, buys a three-quarters Shorthorn for $150. Brown pays $400 for a pure-bred Shorthorn. Most men will agree that the difference between 4 years and 15 years is greater than the difference between $150 and $400.

The thing needs a little diagramming to make the differences stand out. Here is what John Brown did by breeding his scrub cow to the purebred bull:

1 plus 0 equals 1; divided by 2, equals ½.

John Brown's calf was half Shorthorn and half scrub.

Here is what Tom Jones did by breeding his scrub cow to the three-quarters bull:

¾ plus 0 equals ¾; divided by 2, equals ⅜.

Tom Jones' calf was three-eighths Shorthorn and five-eighths scrub. Not much difference in the first generation—but wait. Using those heifer calves as breeding stock and mating them with the same kind of bulls, here is what happens:

John Brown gets 1 plus ½ which equals 1½; divided by 2, equals ¾.

Tom Jones gets ¾ plus ⅜, equals 9/8; divided by 2 equals 9/16.

John Brown's calf in the second generation outgrades Tom Jones' calf in the second generation by ⅜ Shorthorn blood.

It Pays to Start Right.

And Tom Jones has to breed three other generations of cattle (using the same kind of sire) to bring his cattle up to approximately the same grade as John Brown's second generation of offspring. In the meantime, using the same kind of bull, John Brown has graded his cattle up till the offspring of the original scrub cows contain 31/32 Shorthorn blood and only 1/32 scrub blood. Tom Jones' cattle, in the same generation, contain 98/128 Shorthorn blood and 35/128 scrub blood. Jones' herd, after 15 years of work, still retains 35 times as much scrub blood as John Brown's cattle—all because, 15 years ago, John Brown took the time and the trouble to travel seven miles instead of a mile, or saw his way clear to spend $400 instead of $150. The cost of bulls varies greatly, of course, according to quality of breeding, age, and other factors.

The moral of the story, as the breeding experts of the United States department of agriculture tell it, is to use pure-bred sires for herd improvement. Replace the scrub sires and the grade sires with good pure-breds. Join the "Better-Sires Better-Stock" campaign. And consult your county agent, your agricultural college or the United States department of agriculture from time to time for whatever information you may need.

PAY MORE ATTENTION TO MARKET PROBLEMS

Fact Is Shown by Survey Conducted by Bureau of Markets.

Model Law Incorporated in Whole by One State and With Practically No Changes in Others—Bureaus Established.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

That marketing problems are being given more and more attention by state governments is shown by a survey which the bureau of markets has been conducting.

Following the example of the federal government, 30 states have established bureaus of markets or similar agencies to study the buying and selling of farm products. Four state legislatures created such bureaus last year. The model law prepared by the bureau of markets has been adopted by one state with practically no change and has been incorporated wholly or in part in the laws of several other states. In a few cases state departments of agriculture have begun marketing work under authority of general clauses in their laws.

The activities of the bureaus vary from simply studying the conditions affecting marketing, through regulation of marketing practices, to the actual buying and selling of farm products. This latter activity, however, has been discontinued in at least one state. Most of the bureaus have authority to establish grades and standards, inspect farm produce, and maintain market news services.

RECEIPTS OF DURUM WHEAT

At Seven Primary Markets About 33,300,000 Bushels Were Received in Last Fiscal Year.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Receipts of durum wheat at seven primary markets were about 33,300,000 bushels in the year ending June 30, 1919. During the last five years they were as high as 43,900,000 bushels in 1916 and as low as 16,100,000 bushels in 1918. Exports of this wheat ranged from about 24,800,000 bushels in 1916 to 6,600,000 bushels in 1918, and the exports of the fiscal year 1919 were about 18,300,000 bushels. This is a hard wheat with high gluten content when grown on dry-land farms, and is suitable for macaroni and other paste products. Before the war its chief competitor in the markets of southern France and Italy, the principal destinations of the exports, was similar wheat from southern Russia.

After Three Physicians Failed

Dodd's Kidney Pills Give Prompt Relief

Here's one of the many unsolicited testimonials which reach us from every section of the United States. Thousands upon thousands have been relieved of their kidney complaints and there is no reason why Dodd's—standard for two generations—won't give you the same prompt benefit.

Mr. B. C. Birchler of Fulda, Ind., writes, "In the year 1905, I was very low with a severe attack of kidney trouble and three noted physicians had given me up expecting death at any moment, but death did not come and I lingered for several months until accidentally one day I found an old Dodd's Almanac in my house which described symptoms exactly as mine. I then procured a box of your pills and took a double dose and the second day actually felt relieved. After a week I felt so good that I was glad to be alive. I continued using them for a time and they cured me.

This was fourteen years ago and I can truthfully say I have never yet been laid up with the same disease. A severe attack of 'flu' last winter affected my kidneys to a certain extent so I bought three boxes of your pills and used them for my whole family with the same good results."

BELCHING Caused by Acid-Stomach

Let EATONIC, the wonderful modern stomach remedy, give you quick relief from disgusting belching, food-repeating, indigestion, bloated, gassy stomach, dyspepsia, heartburn and other stomach miseries. They are all caused by Acid-Stomach from which about nine people out of ten suffer in one way or another. One writes as follows: "Before I used EATONIC, I could not eat a bite without belching it right up, sour and bitter. I have not had a bit of trouble since the first tablet."

Millions are victims of Acid-Stomach without knowing it. They are weak and ailing, have poor digestion, bodies improperly nourished although they may eat heartily. Grave disorders are likely to follow if an acid-stomach is neglected. Cirrhosis of the liver, intestinal congestion, gastritis, catarrh of the stomach—these are only a few of the many ailments often caused by Acid-Stomach.

A sufferer from Catarrh of the Stomach of 11 years' standing writes: "I had catarrh of the stomach for 11 long years and I never found anything to do me any good—just temporary relief—until I used EATONIC. It is a wonderful remedy and I do not want to be without it."

If you are not feeling quite right—lack energy and enthusiasm and don't know just where to locate the trouble—try EATONIC and see how much better you will feel in every way.

At all drug stores—a big box for 60c and your money back if you are not satisfied.

HOME MADE TEA FOR CONSTIPATION

Is used by entire families because it is purely vegetable, does the work and costs very little.

Why pay high prices for Liver and Bowel remedies when none are better than Dr. Carter's K. and B. tea, which is purely vegetable, can be brewed at home, and a small package will last a long time.

Thousands of old people will tell you they have been drinking it for years, and after the liver and bowels have been put in fine condition in a few days by a before bedtime cup, that only an occasional cup is afterwards necessary to keep one feeling fit and fine.

People who drink a cup of Dr. Carter's K. and B. Tea once in a while, seldom, if ever, have any bilious attacks, sick headache or sallow skin. It's good for boys and girls, especially those who are peevish and fretful. Druggists have been selling it for many years.

Put aside the Salts, Oil, Calomel, or Pills and take "Cascarets."

Are you keeping your bowels, liver, and stomach clean, pure and fresh with Cascarets, or merely whipping them into action every few days with Salts, Cathartic Pills, Oil, or Purgative Waters?

Stop having a bowel wash-day. Let Cascarets gently cleanse and regulate the stomach, remove the sour and fermenting food and foul gases, take the excess bile from the liver and carry out of the colon and bowels all the constipated waste matter and poisons so you can straighten up.

Cascarets tonight will make you feel great by morning. They work while you sleep—never gripe, sicken, or cause any inconvenience, and cost so little too.—Adv.

Learning About Nitrogen.

Recent experiments with the alpha ray have led to the discovery, says the English Mechanic and World of Science, that nitrogen, which for a century and a half has been regarded as an element, may not be an element at all, but a compound of hydrogen and helium. It is an interesting coincidence that Doctor Dalton, according to the now accepted account, was led to his theory of the atomic structure of matter by a study of the physical properties of the atmosphere. Sir Ernest Rutherford, by experiments on the same gases, now sees in each of Dalton's atoms of nitrogen an atomic system in which two distinct elements play a part, and nitrogen itself apparently is to disappear as an element. —Youth's Companion.

Good Field for Films.

Several picture-producing companies have of late secured English estates for their work; and it is reported that the Oatlands Lodge estate, of twenty acres, has been acquired by one of the oldest British film-making concerns. This lodge is a part of the former royal domain of Oatlands, which was a veritable rendezvous of monarchs in the past. Henry VIII, Queen Elizabeth, James I and Charles I all stayed here at different times. Together with its historic traditions, Oatlands Lodge has such an attraction as the remains of a subterranean passage, a relic which no doubt will be very useful to the film producer.

At a dinner party it doesn't matter that the anecdote is totally irrelevant if it's funny.

WHAT A MOTHER SAYS

Cleveland, Ohio.—"During expectancy I was sick for three or four months, my strength left me and I became weak and nervous and just felt miserable. I began taking Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and my strength returned very rapidly, and I felt very well the remainder of the time. My baby was a very strong, healthy child and always has been. I would especially recommend 'Favorite Prescription' to the expectant mother."—Mrs. Bessie Baumgardner, 2354 77th St., E.

Cleveland, Ohio.—"I think Dr. Pierce's medicines are all fine. I have given the 'Favorite Prescription' to my daughters when they were growing into womanhood and it proved very beneficial to them. We have also used the 'Golden Medical Discovery' as a tonic and blood purifier, and it proved equally as beneficial as the 'Favorite Prescription.' I take pleasure in recommending these good medicines of Dr. Pierce's."—Mrs. J. H. Walls, 1766 E. 16th Pl.

COULDN'T FIND LADY'S NAME

Young Man, However, Had Done His Best, and Probably the Editor Appreciated It.

The editor was busy writing an article on the evil effects of the excessive use of tobacco and how it affected the heart. But he needed information on a certain medical point.

"Baxter, find out all you can about angina pectoris," he said to a budding young journalist, "and be quick as you can."

Twenty minutes passed before the aspiring journalist returned.

"Well," queried the editor, "you've been long enough about it; what have you learned?"

"Well, I've done my best," was the answer. "I've looked in all the local directories, and the London directory as well, and there is no such name as Angina Pectoris. Then I made a thorough search through some of the biographies in the office library, but found nothing. No one in the building has heard of such a person. Perhaps she's married now, and that was her maiden name. Are you quite sure you've got her name right, sir?"—London Tit-Bits.

Some Moniker.

Speaking of names, as the Nomad has been in recent issues, we once read of an English baby being christened "Actsoftheapostles Kennett." Which is some moniker, you'll admit. No doubt it was considerably abbreviated later, and it is not difficult to imagine the lad's mother exclaiming in a moment of exasperation: "Actso, how can you act so?"

Encouraging.

"Shall I settle the bill now, doctor?"

"Not necessary. I can arrange with your widow."

Saves Much Hand Work.

Old lingerie blouses nearly always contain somewhere in sleeves or body enough material for a pretty collar or two. They can be planned many times so a bit of embroidery or lace will make the finish for the collar. Medallions of lace or squares of fine pin tucking can be combined with new material and will make a collar often far more original and pretty than one bought in the store at a pretty price. Sometimes a shallow yoke for a nightgown can be planned from a discarded lingerie waist and much time and labor of fine handwork and embroidery will be saved.

Basque Blouse Ties in Sash.

A basque blouse that ties in a sash at the back is made of seal brown georgette. The unique trimming at the front of the blouse is a three-inch band of arrested fringe made of iridescent cut steel gunmetal and rose-colored beads. The round neck and short sleeves are piped with self material.

BEGINS TO SEE THE TRUTH

Old Oliver Onken Realizes He Is the Captive, and Not the Victorious Captor.

"My son-in-law, Luther Stuckey, doesn't amount to anything at all, and yet, paradoxical as it sounds, he is a howling success in his chosen specialty," related old Oliver Onken. "He sings a squealing tenor, he can second the motion all right, and will be as useful as anybody else to count on when the cholera breaks out. He might possibly do well managing a small farm. In short, he has never really accomplished anything except to work me so adeptly that he is able to keep better dressed than I can afford to, and by that means maintain a higher standing in the community than I enjoy. Just how he manages it I do not exactly understand, but somehow he keeps right on putting it over me. I cannot kill him, and he will not leave. When he broke into the family I thought I was getting a son-in-law, but now it looks painfully like my son-in-law has got me."—Kansas City Star.

China played football long before Japan, so long ago that the football was stuffed with hair until the fifth century, when the ingenious Chinese thought of inflating it.

Indianapolis Woman Flattered Herself When She Thought She Was Being Followed.

A woman looking into corner shop window recently turned angrily to a well-known Indianapolis man who by chance drew up alongside her to look into the same window:

"Sir, are you following me?" she snapped.

To which the astonished innocent replied with a gasp:

"No, madam, I was not following you," and quickly recovering himself and noting her looks and lines added: "Not after getting a good look at you!"

"Well, if I thought you were following me I'd call that policeman," she retorted. And to this our now perfectly poised, but outraged hero replied:

"I don't think he would follow you, either!"—Indianapolis News.

"I never measured it," answered the tired business man, "but it certainly gives you that impression when you listen to it."

JANUARY

A New Year's Wish With Fourteen Points.

—o—

Let's do more to make America safe for those who believe in America.

Let's not do anything on Wednesday which we would shirk from doing Sunday.

Let's remember daily that there are tasks we must do ourselves and not delegate them to someone else to perform.

Let's remember that when Paul said "as far as possible live at peace" etc., he did not mean that we were to fraternize with the rednecks, roughnecks and those who overthrow the government.

Let's up and kick all such out of the country.

Let's resolve that regardless of the pittance that we earn, we will earn something.

Let's fully understand once and for all that higher wages do not mean lower prices excepting we provide greater production.

Let's remember that while we counsel against too much haste that we should likewise counsel against too much rest.

Let's realize right from the start that 1920 is a year in which much lasting good may be accomplished if we start right and keep on doing right.

Let's all solemnly covenant that if one corner of the world is getting worse, that we will make our corner better.

Let's weed out preachers of the gospel of discontent everywhere and make it so unhealthy they will never want to return.

Let's refrain from saying anything against our neighbor, our town, our state, nation, flag, or competitive banker, that is not 100 per cent. boost.

Let's fight for the square deal for everybody.

Let's not forget that as a nation our God is the Lord.

How To Kill A Minister.

Tell others that you don't like him, but never tell him why. If you tell him why you don't like him, he might show you wherein you were mistaken; then you would need to apologize to him for talking behind his back.

Criticise his sermons. Say he's too old-fashioned in his theology, or he's too liberal; his sermons are too long; he is too closely confined to his notes; he's tiresome, stupid and monotonous. Never tell him his sermon helped you; that might make him puffed up.

Complain because he doesn't call as often as you think he ought to. Forget that he has several hundred other people to call upon, that he must prepare two sermons each week, must marry the living and bury the dead, and be all things to all men on all occasions, that he may win some.

Criticise his family, especially his wife. Say: "She takes up too much of his time, she tryes to run the church, she is not in sympathy with his church, she has too many hats, she dresses too well or not well enough."

Go to some other church or stay away because you don't like your own minister, and because the other minister is more sensational, more dramatic, more educated, more orthodox, more heterodox, more social and more anything else that suits your fancy.

Always look for your minister's weakest points, never look for his strongest qualities. To look for his strongest qualities might mean to be convinced that with all his failings he has consecrated himself to the high calling of God for your salvation, that he has sacrificed a larger income for a mere living wage, and that he has cast in his life with the people of God to the end that men may come to a saving knowledge of the truth.

There is nothing else.

Stay on The Farm.

The cry of "Stay on the Farm" is being sounded more and more and in the face of the high dailey wages offered for men in the cities is taking many of them from the farm, but in face of many leaving the farm for the city there seems to be just as many leaving the city and hunting places on the farm. The present day farmer has many obstacles to overcome and devices of all kinds are being manufactured to take the place of uncertain hired man, so that it is possible to do the farm work with even less help than ever before.

The tractor has come to stay and it is the one farm implement that is taking the place of the horse as much as the man and in all much more work can be done with less help and at a much cheaper expense than the old way when you stop to figure the amount of work done.

Many styles of tractors are being sold to the farmers the same as other new appliances but after being demonstrated and tested out fully the Titan 10-20 tractor stands out pre-eminent over the other makes as the one most adapted to the general farmer in every particular.

Thayer Northrup made a deal last Saturday with Wm. Curie for a 10-20 Titan to be delivered this week, together with a two bottom plow and an 18-32 tractor disc complete. Mr. Northrup is one of the progressive young farmers, living west of St. Joe, and has come to realize that now is the time to do bigger farming in the face of the high prices on farm products and to do more alone he was compelled to purchase a tractor. Delivery could have been made the same day of the purchase if needed as Mr. Curie has a good supply on hand, receiving a shipment some weeks ago. The place to buy anything is where you can see what you are getting and then to know that the dealer absolutely guarantees the article which you are buying whether large as a tractor or small as a bolt.

One More For Us.

Last Friday eve our boys made a trip up in the Lake region and trimmed the Hamilton Quintette to the tune of 23-16. It was the fast and flashy floor work that helped win the game, as our boys shot fine field goals in the last six minutes of play. Simanton starred for our team making seven field goals the last half. Next came Bender with one field goal and three free throws followed by Culler and Wyatt with a field goal apiece.

Obituary

Elizabeth Springer was born in Hamburg, Germany, May 15, 1851 and died at Spencerville, Indiana, January 13, 1920.

She came to America when a child of about one year old.

She was married to Mr. George H. Hollabaugh March 17, 1870, in Adams County, Pennsylvania. To this union were born five children, three sons and two daughters, one daughter died in infancy. She united with the Lutherans near Gettysburg, Pa., when but a girl in early teens. She moved with her husband from Pennsylvania to Spencerville in 1871 and has lived for forty years in the same place in which she died. She united with her husband with the Lutheran Church, Spencerville April 26, 1874.

She leaves a husband, one brother, Benjamin Springer of Cedarville four children, William H., of Auburn, Frank, Scudder and Minnie Hollopeter of this place, five grandchildren and many friends.

She was a sufferer for a number of years and for the past two years and one half an invalid, but she bore it all with remarkable patience, never complaining or giving any trouble to those taking care of her. She was a kind, loving mother and grandmother and a devoted wife.

The funeral services were conducted by her pastor, Rev. A. K. Mumma on Thursday afternoon and buried at White City Cemetery.

Death has taken from us William Franklin Coburn, son of William and Lovesta Coburn. He was born on a farm near St Joe, DeKalb County, Indiana, Nov. 30, 1867, and passed away Jan. 16, 1920, at the age of 52 years, 1 month and 16 days.

He left to mourn his departure three brothers and five sisters, viz., Calvin and Harmon of Hicksville, Ohio, Ezra of St. Louis, Mo., Florence Wilmot, Amanda Shaffer, Nettie Abel, Nellie Perry, St. Joe, Ind., and Cordelia Wade, Petoskey, Mich. His father and mother preceded him in death.

The funeral service was held at the home of Mr. Alva Perry, St. Joe, Ind., Jan. 18, 1920, by the Rev. T. A. Manley of the Christian Church. His mortal remains were laid to rest in the Alten cemetery.

CARD OF THANKS.

The brothers and sisters wish to thank all those who so kindly gave their services and sympathy during the death and burial of their brother, especially the quartette from Coburn's Corners.

Among those from out of town who attended the funeral of Frank Coburn Sunday, were H. A. Coburn and wife and Calvin Coburn of Hicksville, Paul Perry and wife of near Auburn and Mrs. Nettie Abel of near Newville.

LOCAL ITEMS.

Cliff Collins has quit working at the Leighty farm and is now in Auburn. Alvy Collins has taken his place.

OUT-OF-ORDINARY PEOPLE

ALLEN WOULD PROTECT THE PUBLIC

Gov. Henry J. Allen of Kansas handled the coal strike situation in his state in a way that attracted national attention. He acted on the principle that the public interest is supreme, seized the mines and set volunteers to work in getting out the coal.

He now proposes to give permanency to this emergency policy. The Kansas court of industrial relations, planned by Governor Allen and to be submitted to the special session of the legislature, is founded upon the idea of giving the labor unions a direct legal entity and taking away the strike privilege by giving the unions and the employers something else. This court can only be appealed to when efforts at mediation have failed.

It can act upon its own initiative when the public welfare is endangered. It can take over the operation of an essential industry—it provides only for operation in disputes involving fuel, food, clothing and transportation—when the owners threaten to close it down and it can put the owners or managers in jail. It can take over any labor union which conspires to decrease production or to close an industry, take its money, and put its leaders and its members in jail.

The court is the direct representative of the public and not the representative of either the employer or the employee.

WAR MEDALS AS "MADE IN GERMANY"

Representative James V. McClintic of Oklahoma, told the house the other day of the war medals issued by the German authorities to keep the people in a proper frame of mind. He described seven.

No. 1 was designed to show that America was not interested in the war and if she did enter she would be destroyed. No. 2 was designed to show that America had few ships and that they would be sunk. No. 3 conveyed the idea that America was not neutral and was selling munitions to the allies and not to Germany. No. 4 dealt with the sinking of American ships, America threatening and Germany declaring unrestricted submarine warfare.

No. 5 was in derision of President Wilson and his 14 points. No. 6 represented the American rooster crowing over the Argonne victory and derided America for fighting for the right of Chinese, Hindus and negroes.

No. 7 was the famous Lusitania medal, which was made several days before the Lusitania was sunk. On one side it pictures a scene in New York city, showing a great crowd of people standing before the Cunard line window for the purpose of buying tickets. The warning given by the German ambassador not to sail on that ship is represented by a skeleton standing in the ticket window. On the other side is the Lusitania submarined, half sunk, and the German inscription stating it was sent to the bottom of the sea on the 7th of May, 1915.

STORM CENTER OF GERMAN FINANCE

Mathias Erzberger, vice president and minister of finance of the German republic, is apparently the storm center of the German financial problem. He is apparently Germany's strongest public figure, with the possible exception of Gustave Noske. Anyway, he is probably the most discussed man—if not the most execrated—in Germany today.

There is a widespread belief among financiers, bankers and financial writers in Germany, that if two of Erzberger's plans are put into effect Germany will face actual ruin. The most important of these two measures is the emergency levy on property which they assert will reduce industrial fortunes of 10,000,000 marks to less than 3,000,000 in a decade. The second measure is the income tax, which will "beggar every modest fortune as well as every great fortune."

Erzberger, as well as his enemies, looks to America for financial help. He says: "We will make our investments attractive in every way for Americans. I will guarantee that the only tax on the capital of nonresidents will be an income tax not to exceed 30 per cent."

ADMIRAL W. S. SIMS: BORN TO TROUBLE

© Western Newspaper Union

Rear Admiral William S. Sims, U. S. N., appears to be born to trouble as the sparks fly upward. You see, he has the sailor's habit of speaking his mind. A year or so before the war he was given an official reprimand for publicly stating that American and British battleships would be found side by side in the hour of danger. Just the same, this same sailorman not long afterward was in command of the American fleet that went to the aid of England—and did some admirable work.

On his return to this country Admirable Sims wrote a series of articles on the American navy abroad. He fell foul of the Sinn Feiners in Ireland and raised another rumpus.

And now Admiral Sims declines to accept the distinguished service medal awarded him, and practically accuses Secretary of the Navy Daniels of gross favoritism in making the awards. It appears that Secretary Daniels did not pay much attention to the list of 19 naval officers recommended for the distinguished service medal by Admiral Sims. Anyway, Secretary Daniels ordered the navy department's board of awards reconvened, to revise the recommendations. Chairman Page of the senate committee on naval affairs requested full information concerning the recommendations of the board of awards and the secretary's changes therein.

There may be a congressional investigation going into the whole matter. President Wilson has the final say in the award of medals and crosses.

USE FUR, VELVET AND CLOTH

Favorite Materials Are Lovely as Well as Expensive—Cape Arrangements Prominent in Scheme of Evening Wraps.

Frocks are lovely this season but after a careful study of the season's modes one feels inclined to say that the coat is the distinctive article in the season's wardrobe—coats are so handsome, so varied, so altogether to be desired, and also in these most desirable forms so expensive, says a leading fashion writer.

One can buy a cheap coat, but unless pocketbook limitations positively enforce rigid economy, one is not likely to buy a cheap coat. Temptation to extravagance lurks on every hand. It is easy to be wise when folly does not wear alluring guise; but if a woman gets into a coat shop this season with more money in her pocket than she intends to spend, the chances are that she will invest it all.

Cloths, velvets, furs, all of the materials for the high class coats, are both lovely and costly. In addition, the modish coat is one of such ample fullness that it calls for much of that same costly material. There is no dodging high prices with that combination of expensive material and plenty of it.

Variety in Cost of Fur Coats.

The smart fur coat varies in price with the kind and quality of the fur, but even Hudson seal and caracul mount up if freely used and trimmed with other fur. These are two standard furs for the coat of more moderate price, and, while the seal, which as a matter of fact is dyed muskrat, is the softer and more becoming, caracul stands wear and weather more sturdily. The matter of becomingness is settled by the big collar of long-haired fur or contrasting short-haired fur that is likely to be used upon either the seal or the caracul.

Noted recently were remarkably smart-looking coats of caracul dyed in a bisque or tanish shade—and in about three-quarter length or even shorter. The collars were draped in loose folds or made, as one especially noted, in hoodlike shape at the back. These models were unquestionably intended for rather dressy wear.

But, to return to the subject of coats of exquisite cloths and velvets, so closely allied are these materials that in some instances one can scarcely tell whether it is the cloth or the fur that is the foundation material for the wrap. Especially is this true with regard to the coats of the more expensive type.

Smart Models Pictured.

One coat, handsomely trimmed with fur, was of velours in a beautiful dark brown tone with quantities of beaver trimming. The body of the coat was built upon straight lines but gives the modish width at the hips by shaped pockets of the beaver, which extended from the waistline to the coat hem. There was a large collar and cuffs of the beaver. A fruitful small round hat and round muff of the beaver accompany the coat.

Another coat, of navy blue velours, rich in texture and with a wonderful bloom in its soft surface is trimmed with opossum, which gives the effect of chinchilla and is also tremendously effective in contrast with the soft dark blue velvety tones of the cloth.

The coat under discussion is made on the simplest of lines and has a large collar and large patch pockets and cuffs of the opossum. There is a narrow girdle of the material.

Velvet Wraps Are Lovely.

Velvet coats and capes of this season are really lovely, and upon them the designers have lavished their skill and inspiration as well as the handsomest of materials. There is a great variety of line displayed in these coats and because of the suppleness of the material it may be manufactured in a variety of ways. Such wraps invariably show a large fur collar and many ways of introducing fur trimming. Often the collar is so large that it covers the shoulders like an enormous fur cape. Again, there may be a velvet collar with wide fur band trimming. Another new and effective model of velvet had a large fur hood falling down over the back of the mantle. The lower part of the wrap was banded by the fur.

All Colors in Vogue.

All the dark velvets are used for afternoon coats. Black, of course, has first place because of its adaptability; but very dark browns, the dark greens, grays, prune, dark blue, the castor tones, amber and sulphur yellows and various shades of reds appear in the display of afternoon coats. All of these, without exception, are fur trimmed—some in dark, long-haired fur like skunk or its cheaper relatives. But any and every effective type of peltry from sable to beaver is pressed into service.

Among the velvet coats much originality in sleeves, as well as in collars, is possible. The dropped shoulder is emphasized by lines of fur and the sleeve wrinkles softly from elbow to wrist. The collar may be of velvet and banded by fur.

Cape arrangements are seen upon some of the chic velvet coats, as well as upon cloth models, and enter into the scheme of beautiful evening coats. But the evening coat is another story. Afternoon cape coats having wide sleeves or just a wide encircling band of fur sewn into the sides of the garment are one of the smartest things this season.

A charmingly picturesque cape coat is of this type and made of blue velveteen. The deep yoke is trimmed with several bands of fur. The lower part of the wrap is attached to the shaped yoke with fullness. The arm slips through wide fur-trimmed bands at the sides.

An extremely smart coat and skirt costume is made of brown velours trimmed with dyed squirrel of a darker tone. The bodice of the coat is rather snugly fitted. Fullness is introduced at the hips and trimming consists of bands of the squirrel. The long shawl collar of fur fastens at the waistline with a large button.

Fur is introduced on frocks and suits in all manner of ways. Its edges openings, is inset in panels and borders semi-fitted long-waisted bodices at the lower part and various other decorative uses are made of it.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Teacher of English Bible in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1920, Western Newspaper Union)

LESSON FOR JANUARY 25

PETER STANDS UP FOR TRUTH AND HONESTY.

LESSON TEXT—Acts 5:1-16.

GOLDEN TEXT—Lying lips are abomination to the Lord: but they that deal truly are his delight.—Prov. 12:22.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL—Ex. 20:16; Prov. 11:1; Matt. 6: 2-4; Gal. 6:7, 8; Eph. 4:15, 25, 30.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Telling the Truth.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Two Disciples and What Became of Them.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Folly and Sinfulness of Lying.

In this lesson we see the new community now called "the church" (v. 11) vindicated. In the boldness of Peter and John we see that the break with Judaism has come—the authority of the Sanhedrin is repudiated with the determination on the part of the disciples to be led by the Holy Spirit. It is for this reason that the body now gets the name "church." Since the break has come it must be shown to be a holy body; it must have recognition as being sacred. The sanctity of the tabernacle is transferred to the new body, which is God's dwelling place (Eph. 2:19-22). The church itself, as well as the people about, did not know this until God's judgment burst forth.

I. Characteristics of the Primitive Church (4:31-35).

1. It was a praying church (v. 31). For every want annd every need they betook themselves to God in prayer.

2. It was a Spirit-filled church (v. 31). A praying church is a Spirit-filled church. The Spirit is given in answer to prayer (Luke 11:13).

3. It was a church which had great boldness in preaching the Word of God (v. 31). The minister in a Spirit-filled church will not offer an apology for the Bible, but will fearlessly preach it.

4. It was a united church (v. 32). They were "of one heart and one soul."

5. It was a charitable and generous church (v. 32). As needs arose supplies were given from a common fund.

6. Its ministers had a powerful testimony (v. 33).

7. It was a church whose membership exhibited unblemished characters (v. 33). For "great grace was upon them all."

II. The Sin of Ananias and Sapphira (vv. 1-11).

1. Its occasion (vv. 1, 2). This was their hypocritical imitation of the generous act of Barnabas (4:36, 37). Because of the peculiar distress of the early church when the open rupture was made with Judaism, the members for a time had a "community of goods." This was not universal nor permanent; some continued to own their own homes, as for example John Mark's mother, who used her home in which to entertain Christians. Ananias kept back a part of the money received for his land while pretending to have brought it all. His wife was a partner in it. They wanted the honor of generosity without paying the price.

2. The judgment (vv. 3-10). Ananias allowed satan to fill his heart and lied to the Holy Ghost in keeping back a part of the price of the land. It was most likely an acted lie. They were not under obligation to sell their land, or having sold it, to bring any of the money and place it in the common fund. Peter declared that they were absolutely free to do as they pleased with it. Love of praise is causing many today to make the same dreadful mistake. People are walking in the way of Ananias and Sapphira when they make a profession of religion for temporal gain and pleasure; or even preaching sermons not their own. Frequently men preach the sermons of Moody and Spurgeon without giving credit. Physical death was visited upon Ananias and Sapphira for their sins.

III. The Effect (vv. 11-16).

1. Great fear came upon the church and upon all who heard of these things (v. 11). Irreverence is an outstanding sin of this age. The church should be recognized as holy—the very dwelling place of the Most High God.

2. Multitudes of men and women were added to the Lord (v. 14). This caused the fame of Peter to be spread far and wide, so that the people were anxious to come under his shadow. Were the holiness of the body of Christ recognized, there would be many coming for pardon and salvation.

3. The hypocrites did not dare to join (v. 13). It is interesting to note that this vindication of the holiness of the church did not deter any but hypocrites from joining it. Nothing unhallowed nor any unregenerate person has a place in the church. This applies to our offerings as well as to our person.

Daily Prayer.

Oh Lord, we thank thee that men turn to thee; the measure of their need is the measure of thy supply. Let thy spirit dwell in our spirits, and then all shall be well within and peaceful without. We pray thee to give us a fuller and firmer, and more continual, and more vigorous and efficacious confidence in thyself. Through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

Character Building.

Life is mainly an opportunity for character building and testing.

A COATED TONGUE? WHAT IT MEANS

A bad breath, coated tongue, bad taste in the mouth, languor and debility are usually signs that the liver is out of order. Professor Hemmeter says: "The liver is an organ secondary in importance only to the heart."

We can manufacture poisons within our own bodies which are as deadly as a snake's venom.

The liver acts as a guard over our well-being, sifting out the cinders and ashes from the general circulation.

Diamond Cut Diamond

By JANE BUNKER

—11—

I was obliged to spin some sort of a plausible yarn to save appearances, and when I handed him my letter with the dime and begged him to mail it for me I knew I was saved. But I have never yet attempted to count up the lies those diamonds cost me!

It was now a little after ten and there was nothing for me to do but wait and shiver. I began to think coherently—to appreciate what monsieur himself would be getting into by calling the police or the customs authorities to help him steal Mrs. Delario's diamonds.

And yet I saw perfectly he could do it! Where he had her was that she'd smuggled the stones. He knew it—I knew it—Claire knew it. And if he were bold enough to steal them from her in just that way I wasn't sure but she was timid enough to let him do it.

I suddenly remembered what George had told me about his renting the flat. "Why, the man was here before we were!" I exclaimed. "He took a faster steamer—he was all ready to carry through the job when we landed!" And with that I suddenly remembered another thing that had entirely slipped my mind: while our baggage was being examined—or rather not examined—and Claire was weeping—and everybody was flying round and asking everybody if he'd seen her mother—an elderly man in a big fur automobile coat, the collar up about his face and his cap down over his brow—a man with a flowing white beard and flashing, black, beady eyes—a man on crutches—had stood opposite us, watching. As I looked at him I had the quick impression that there was something wrong about him—that he was there, perhaps, to steal from the incoming baggage in the confusion. The next moment my eye fell on a turquoise-beaded slipper—hers or mine, I didn't know which—that had fallen down between our suitcases. The old gentleman had his eye on it also. I saw his hand come out of his big pocket and reach, cautiously, slowly. My own hand shot out and grabbed the slipper from under his nose, and I gave him a double-barreled glare. I hadn't finished the glare when my cousin came hurrying to tell me to be quick, our baggage was through.

I had, as I say, forgotten the whole incident, but—THE MAN IN DISGUISE WAS MONSIEUR DE RAVENOL.

I knew it then—he confessed it later; he had expected to get those diamonds into his clutches while they were actually going through the customs inspection! I bounced out of my chair with one glad whoop—"Eureka!—I have found it!" and pranced to my bedroom. I had the key to the whole puzzle—"one of those slippers!"

When I asked Mrs. Delario that afternoon over the telephone how she got the diamonds through the customs house she replied, "One of those slippers we got in Paris is lost." Those were the words she said; what she really communicated was ". . . one of those slippers we got in Paris . . . is lost." The tones of her voice—the significant pauses—had been ignored by me then. But add "in" and drop "is lost" and she answered my question—she told me as plain as plain could be that she had smuggled the diamonds through the customs house "in one of the slippers."

Easy enough! I snatched them from beside my bed. Easy enough—with those high insteps. So that was how she did it!

Claire had been snooping till she found out where the diamonds were—that was what her father sent her over for. But she was not to steal the diamonds herself—the risk of her being caught with the goods was too great—that was her father's job; she was to give the signal—he was to get the stones. And why hadn't her mother met her, unless to create the confusion for Mrs. Delario and me that would make it possible for him to turn the trick! Why had he come over by a faster steamer except to be ready for it?

It's precisely what he did. I learned it all later. He came over ahead of us, passed himself off in disguise, and forged credentials as an Italian government secret service agent tracing an old master that had been recently stolen from one of the Italian museums and that was known to be coming to America—smuggled, of course—in charge of a certain woman, whom he knew by sight.

To carry out this pose he had already met several incoming steamers and he was prepared to step up to Mrs. Delario, demand to search her baggage and then—one turn of his hand and he could have walked off with her diamonds in his pocket, shed his disguise and let her whistle for them. Instead of that he got a glare from me!—one twist of my hand and I had "one of those slippers"—he didn't know which and he didn't dare to speak for fear I'd recognize him!

And thus his whole plot fell to the ground—also all my interesting occult mystery about three rotating slippers that toed the wall of their own accord after they'd been set heel to the wall and then walked out of a locked flat and then came home and hid in my wardrobe.

Monsieur had turned the slippers when he set them down hurriedly—the suggestion of all the other slippers, toe to the wall, had been too strong for his memory of three slippers heel to the wall after he had picked them up. That was his one inexcusable blunder in the whole affair—it had set me watching.

But Claire a thief!—or the accomplice of a thief! That high-bred girl—that rare, accomplished child!

I couldn't believe it—I wouldn't believe it. She was acting in good faith whatever she did. Perhaps he had convinced her that the diamonds were his—that Mrs. Delario was robbing him! I felt it then the boldest, cleverest plot I had ever heard of—I actually admired him for the daring and the intellectuality of it—as a feat it stimulated me.

Yes, once having the key to it in the slipper, I saw the whole plot as plain as day; the one point puzzling me was: how did monsieur know I had the diamonds now? I couldn't make that out at all—not if I believed Mrs. Delario hadn't told him, and I thought she was the only other living person who knew it. Well, I had them, and I'd keep them for all of monsieur until I returned them to her.

At a quarter after six or thereabouts I heard the front bell ring three two's I'd told Billy Rivers to use as his signal, and I skimmed along the hall in my Eureka frame of mind—never once thought of precautions or of calling thought first and making sure it was Billy—and flung the door open wide.

As the door flew back I realized the fool thing I'd done; and then without even looking to see who it was I caught the door and tried to shut it again. But he pushed. I looked, then cried "Billy!" and grabbed him by the arm. I knew I didn't deserve it—it ought by the rights of romance to have been the villain.

"Oh, Billy—my deliverer—you dear!" I gasped the minute the door was shut. "I declare you're good enough to kiss!" and with that—I up and did it!

Billy was embarrassed. He appraised my salutation at, "Aw—say—" and a sheepish grin; so I felt obliged to add, as I dragged him along the hall, "But I used to kiss you years and years ago."

"Why, so you did—in my Stone age," acknowledged Billy, his tone implying that he'd passed through some eons of civilization since; and with that he thrust a big package in my hands, saying laconically, "Some eats."

"Some eats!" I gurgled, remembering suddenly that I was starving. "Billy—I could kiss you again—"

"Aw—say—" he parried, and grabbed the package and began tearing off the wrapper. "It's so sudden—but thank you ever so much, and for heaven's sake tell me what's happened! I'll bust if you don't."

"I've run off with a million dollars' worth of diamonds, that's all."

For a minute Billy looked as if he thought I'd run off with my senses; then he observed in that soothy, condensed tone a very sane young person uses to a respected elder whose mind is wandering:

Billy Was Embarrassed.

"I think you'd better eat something—immediately." (Full period here—it says, "We'll talk about what ails you when you're feeling more yourself.") "Where's your can opener?"

I was so hungry at the sight of food that little panicky pains ran round my insides and up my throat, and I pranced into the kitchen for the opener and plates, leaving Billy to think what he pleased about my mental state. I had the wit, though, to tell him "Sch!"

Just at that moment Mrs. Thing-down-stairs began her supper-time performances. Little had I ever dreamed that her daily torture of an otherwise inoffensive piano would sometime prove a blessing to me. Billy whispered hoarsely, "What's that? The villain trying to get in?"

I said, "Mrs. Thing-down-stairs believes it's music, lucky for us—we can now breathe out loud without fear of the villain. He may be listening at the front door—but he'll hear nothing while she operates."

Billy forked a lot of chicken onto my plate and commanded me to go to it, and I grabbed a roll out of his box and said:

"Billy, he tried to murder me."

"He?"

"That man—he was waiting for me with a dagger that night—look here"—I jumped up and got the dagger from my penholder tray—"he dropped it on the floor."

"Gee whiz!" he cried, taking the dagger from me; and then he demanded, "Who?"

"That man—De Ravenol."

"De Ravenol?—you mean that man in Paris who wanted you to bring the pretty daughter over with you and you wouldn't?"

"Yes—that's the one. He was a diamond thief—that's what he was!" I blew off. "He was in the act of stealing a million dollars' worth of diamonds. And I foiled him!"

"Wow! You did?"

"I should say I did! And what's more, I've got the diamonds here—there—behind you in those hyacinths."

"Wow!" he whooped, and before I knew what he was doing he was out of his chair, his hand on the glass.

"Don't touch them!" I shrieked.

"Wow!" he cried, dropping his hand and jumping back. "Do they bite?"

"No—they sting. They pisen your very soul. But, Billy—stop wowing—I'm watched."

He sat down with the command, "Divulge the dread secret," and between bites I told him the whole story up to Eureka, and brought in the slipper to prove it.

He was still staring when I got through and asked him, "And now how am I going to get those beastly things out of the house and where am I going to get them to? She doesn't dare to have them at her house—"

"Oh, I can take them away and hide 'em, if that's all you want," he answered carelessly.

"It isn't all," I retorted, a bit indignant. "It's only the beginning of a new chapter of misery for the whole of us—it's throwing the responsibility on you without getting me out of the net—it won't save me from being kidnaped and searched and maybe murdered to keep my mouth shut—"

Billy nodded at that and said, "You're right."

He took a cigarette out of his case and with a short, "May I?" lighted up and began to blow rings, gazing at them abstractedly. I nibbled crumbs. After I'd stood his silence for half a cigarette, I repeated my question and told him, "We've got to do something right off—now—tonight."

"Of course." He smoked another quarter and threw the cigarette with energy into the empty chicken tin, bouncing up as he spoke.

"What are we going to do?" he gave forth masterfully. "We're going to trap that bold man all by our little own selves—you and I. And we'll give him one nice lesson on stealing diamonds from defenseless women—and threatening you."

"But we've got to hurry," I urged. "I can't live this way much longer—it's simply killing me!"

"Sure," Billy agreed, suppressing a smile at me. "I'm hurrying all I can. I calculate to have your 'mossoo' in handcuffs tomorrow night." And he unfolded his plot and I entered into it with fervor. The truth is Billy and I were having the fun of our lives.

The scheme was to decoy monsieur to the flat by a letter from Mrs. Delario indicating where the diamonds were hidden: we banked on his remembering the one place he hadn't searched—the hyacinths; and if he got the tip we believed he'd return the moment I went out.

After some discussion Billy and I decided not to take Mrs. Delario into our confidence, not knowing how she'd act in the crisis, which necessitated our imitating her writing. The only sample of her writing we had was her address in my notebook and some titles of books on spiritualism she'd wished me to read. But the sample did us, and the joint literary efforts of myself and Billy produced the following—this purporting to be from me to her:

My Dear Mrs. Delario: Since he searched everything but the bunch of hyacinths as I told you over the telephone Tuesday—(this struck me as an exquisitely neat, convincing touch, for his detective must have reported both that I telephoned and the number of the call)—I thought the same place would continue safe in case of a second invasion. I got a fresh bunch, so you will know where if anything happens to me. If so, come and get them at once; break in the flat if you have to.

I am going to try to see you Saturday night for final arrangements if I can slip out without being seen. Expect me between eight and ten. Be sure to be alone so we can talk. I still hold to my promise—one-third to you if you will help me to dispose of gem-drops.

"Gem drops" was Billy's touch—he declared that "mossoo" would read it "diamonds" sure as anything.

And this, purporting to be from her to him:

Monsieur: I have refused to have anything to do with this matter since I know the truth of the ownership. Under the circumstances, I feel she is foolish to try to hold on. Get the hyacinths while she is at my house tonight, and the trouble will be over for everybody.

I typed my own letter with a carbon copy while Billy laboriously produced the one from Mrs. Delario.

The decoy letters we sent to the hotel where monsieur was staying. The rest of our plan was this: Billy was to "sneak it" upstairs and get into the flat; I was then to put on my wraps,

"He Won't Murder You, They're Loaded."

go down in the elevator, telling George I was going out for the evening—so he'd report it to monsieur; wait in the lower hall for a mythical automobile till George went up with the car, and then creep up the stairs.

"This time tomorrow night I'll present you with a nice 'mossoo' in handcuffs," affirmed Billy confidently.

"Suppose he doesn't come? Or suppose he murders me tonight?"

"Oh, the guns!" He snatched up his overcoat and dived into the pocket. He laid two revolvers on the table, saying cheerfully: "He will come and he won't murder you—not if you keep your wits about you. They're loaded."

He slipped the coat on. He was going—in high feather; but my heart sank at the prospect of another night and that man lurking in the house.

"Keep a stiff upper lip—heroine of the greatest diamond robbery of the century!" he bantered. "I'll be here at six tomorrow." He picked up his hat.

"Oh, I'm all right," I returned nonchalantly, feeling suddenly knock kneed yet determined I'd not let Billy suspect it.

I rang for the elevator, and while the car was rumbling up Billy glided away in the darkness of the stairs back of it. He must have reached only the first turn when I heard him exclaim, "Oh! Excuse me! I never saw you!"

Followed the word, "Pardon!" and I recognized monsieur's voice!

I had the presence of mind to stifle my curiosity and slip back into my flat, noiselessly shutting the door. Was he merely coming to lock me in, or had he been listening? My forebodings every moment increased, for up to one o'clock—when I went to bed—he had failed to lock me in.

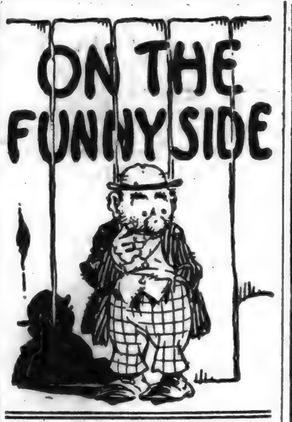
Flour a Dollar a Pound.

Food prices at present seem high, but they are nothing compared with prices in Alaska during the gold fever. A book recently reviewed in our columns, says that at Dawson in 1898 sugar was seventy-five dollars a sack, flour a dollar a pound, eggs a dollar and a half each. But the money came as easily as it went. A man who was low in funds happened to get a paper with news about the Spanish-American war at a time when no newspapers had been received for several weeks. He read a few choice items to a crowd about the post office and then announced that he would read the rest in a hall near by at one dollar a head for admission. Five hundred men crowded in.

A Hard Worker.

"You have great faith in your congressman." "Seems to me like it's justified," said Mr. Cobbles. "Anybody that's as reg'lar about sendin' me free seeds an' all the latest crop reports, not to mention full details about them cave dwellers that used to live out West, with stacks of pamphlets tellin' me how to fight th' boll weevil an' th' skeeter, is on the job even if he ain't no statesman."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

ON THE FUNNY SIDE



NOT FLATTERY.

While the minister was making a call the little girl of the house was busy with pencil and paper.

"What are you doing?" he asked when her mother had left the room for a moment.

"I'm making your picture", said the child.

The minister sat very still and she worked away steadily. Then she stopped and compared her work with the original and shook her head.

"I don't like it much," she said.

"'Tain't a great deal like you. I guess I'll put a tail to it and call it a dog."

Could Dispense With Him.

Flatbush—You know my dog goes away some place every Sunday.

Bensonhurst—That's strange.

"Yes, and my neighbor lambasts a carpet in his back yard every Sunday."

"I see. On Sunday they both 'beat it,' as it were."

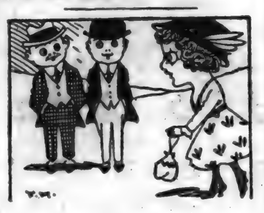
"Yes, but I only wish my neighbor would 'beat it' like the dog."

An Unusual Occasion.

Mr. Gotham—The soprano does not seem to be singing as much as the others in the quartette.

Mrs. Gotham—No; she's saving her voice.

"Gee! I never knew a woman to try to do that before!"



LUCKY CHOICE.

"I'll tell you, old man, Peggy is a bright girl. She's brains enough for two."

"Then she's the very girl for you, my boy."

Mental Fatigue.

As mighty arguments appear
Men like to wait and learn;
Yet they seem always glad to hear
The motion to adjourn.

Early Advantages.

"Some of our greatest men studied by the light of the pine knot."

"Maybe they were lucky at that," commented Senator Sorghum, "in not havin' to worry with any fuel administration over the prospects for heat and illumination."

Where Lawyers Draw Line.

"I should hate to have a husband who argued. I shall try to marry a lawyer."

"Why, lawyers are the very men who argue."

"But not without a fee."

What It Looked Like.

"That's a very pretty painting of yours, that orchard scene," said the near-sighted lady; "but why didn't you sign it?"

"I did," replied the artist; "don't you see my name at the bottom?"

"Oh, is that your name? I thought that was part of the fence!"

Or Saw a Pitcher Winding Up.

"Yes, I was on the battleship when she cleared for action and I assure you it is the most thrilling and impressive moment you can conceive."

"Huh! I guess you never stood by when a golf club champion was getting ready to drive."

Bad Enough.

"My poems are the children of my brain."

"They should be sent to reform school."

What They All Think.

"Are you satisfied with your present position?"

"No. I ought to have the boss' place. But he doesn't seem willing to resign in my favor."

Keeping Down Appearances.

"I suppose I ought to wear my last year's clothes," remarked the conscientious man.

"Don't worry," rejoined the tailor. "After you have worn these a week or so, they will look as if they were at least a year old."

Fortunately.

Herbert—I heard that your cook broke only one plate yesterday.

Robert—That's right.

Herbert—How's that?

Robert—It was the last one.

Why That Backache?

Why be miserable with a bad back? You can't be happy if every day brings lameness; sharp, shooting pains and a dull, nagging ache. Likely the cause is weak kidneys. You may have headaches and dizzy spells, too, with a weak, tired feeling. Don't delay! Try Doan's Kidney Pills. They have done wonders in thousands of such cases. Ask your neighbor!

An Indiana Case

John Oathsimer, stationary engineer, 607 Milligan St., Crawfordsville, Ind., says: "My back was sore and lame and when I got up out of a chair the sharp pains that went through my kidneys would almost make me fall. At night I couldn't sleep for hours because of the dragging backache. This kept me in a worn-out, tired condition. I purchased Doan's Kidney Pills and after taking three or four boxes I felt strong and well again."

INDIGESTION

Caused by

Acid-Stomach

Millions of people—in fact about 9 out of 10—suffer more or less from indigestion, acute or chronic. Nearly every case is caused by Acid-Stomach.

There are other stomach disorders which also are sure signs of Acid-Stomach—belching, heartburn, bloat after eating, food repeating, sour, gassy stomach. There are many ailments which, while they do not cause much distress in the stomach itself, are, nevertheless, traceable to an acid-stomach. Among these are nervousness, biliousness, cirrhosis of the liver, rheumatism, impoverished blood, weakness, insomnia, melancholia and a long train of physical and mental miseries that keep the victims in miserable health year after year.

The right thing to do is to attack these ailments at their source—get rid of the acid-stomach. A wonderful modern remedy called EATONIC now makes it easy to do this.

One of hundreds of thousands of grateful users of EATONIC writes: "I have been troubled with intestinal indigestion for about nine years and have spent quite a sum for medicine, but without relief. After using EATONIC for a few days the gas and pains in my bowels disappeared. EATONIC is just the remedy I needed."

We have thousands of letters telling of these marvelous benefits. Try EATONIC and you, too, will be just as enthusiastic in its praise.

Your druggist has EATONIC. Get a big 50c box from him today. He will refund your money if you are not satisfied.

Many People Poisoned

Scores of people meet death each year by a slow process of poisoning that is going on within our bodies. This poisoning is caused by the liver and kidneys failing to perform their proper function. Poisonous matter accumulates within the body and health declines. The unsightly liver splotches, billiousness, headache and dizziness, bad taste in the mouth, coated tongue, a pain in the back or under the shoulder blade, a tired or achy feeling are some of the most common symptoms of this poisoning. If this poisoning it not expelled and the cause removed the resisting power is finally gone and life pays the penalty. Are you of the heedless class or are you safeguarding your health? If you want health you must keep the liver, kidneys and bowels active. Glando Tonic is what you need to restore this activity and expell the poisons. Keep on the safe side and use a reliable remedy. Glando Tonic is put up in a treatment form and guaranteed to do the work. Ask your druggist for a large $1 treatment. Take it as directed and you will be surprised to know how much poison was stored up within your body. When the liver is inactive a mucus or slime collects within the stomach and bowels which hinders digestion and the assimilation of food. This is called catarrh of the stomach or bowels. Glando Tonic cuts this slime and mucus and removes it. A nauceated feeling is sometimes experienced when this mucus is breaking loose but as soon as it is removed from the bowels, you will feel fine, the complexion clear, the appet te return and you will want to tell others of your wonderful cure.

Glando Tonic is sold by druggists or may be secured by sending direct to the Gland-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Indiana.

Mr. Peterson Sick.

South Connellsville, Pa.
Jan. 17, 1920.

Dear Fred:

Don't look for much or very plainly written, for I am writing this lying in bed. I was taken sick the 4th., and have been in bed ever since, and I can't write lying here. I did want to tell you so badly of the gas excitement here. Beason, our son, has now shares in nineteen wells, and still buying. Shares on developed wells are increasing in value at the rate of a $50 share is now readily sold at $150 per share. Clerks and working men are putting their money into shares. There is talk of nothing but gas, gas, gas, and all making good. Beason has just paid $1,000 for an acre of ground at Layton, just about 40 rods from our place, and forming a company there to drill four wells. A well was drilled at the edge of this ground thirty-five years ago, and when they struck gas they plugged the well the gas was so strong that it blew out the first and second plugs, but with the third plug and stones and dirt they stopped the flow.

Fred, I would like to write more, but my strength has given out. I will be better for my next letter, when I will give a more full description.

Yours truly,
W. E. Peterson.

P. S.—I am sending you under seperate cover, a Connellsville paper which will tell you more than I can write now, one must be on the ground to realize the enormity of this gas flow.

You know that this line is one of our Specialties and we aim to always keep on hand just the thing that our farmer customers are wanting. We are now selling our

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

The New Year Motto

I asked the New Year for some motto sweet,
Some rule of life by which to guide my feet;
I asked and paused; it answered, soft and low:
"God's will to know."

"Will knowledge, then, suffice, New Year?" I cried;
But ere the question into silence died,
The answer came: "Nay; this remember, too,
God's will to do."

"To know; to do; can this be all we give
To Him in Whom we are, and move and live?
No more, New Year?" "This, too, must be your care:
God's will to bear."

Once more I asked: "Is there still more to tell?"
And once again the answer sweetly fell:
"Yes, this one thing, all other things above,
God's will to love."

Japanese New Year's Day.

Nowhere is New Year's day made more of than in Japan. All food for the day must be cooked the day before; for the first 24 hours of the year are holy, and only a sinner would labor on that day. Early in the morning the streets and windows begin to glow with beautifully tinted Japanese lanterns; everybody, even the very old, appears in gayly colored dress; the children are decorated with flowers. Early in the day all the Shinto priests begin the most strenuous day of their year's ministry; for they must visit every house in their parishes, recite portions of the Shinto ritual, and drink a little wine in each house.

Takes Son to Jail.

Bloomsburg, Pa.—When George Gibson of Catawissa brought his sixteen-year-old son Alfred to the county jail he did it because he wanted to give the boy a lesson, but of the two the father was suffering the most and when the steel doors were closed behind the youth the father burst into tears. The boy confessed to taking $5 from the store of H. E. Kearns & Son at Catawissa and was held in default of $300 bail for court.

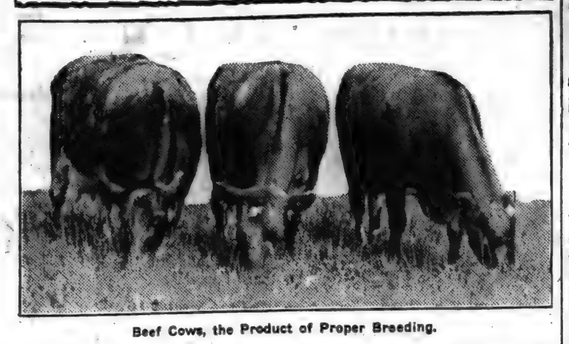
GOOD BREEDING HELPS PRODUCTION OF BEEF



Beef Cows, the Product of Proper Breeding.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

TEN RULES OF BEEF PRODUCTION

First. Plenty of pasture and feed.

Second. The right kind of cows—those that will produce good calves regularly

Third. A good, purebred registered bull—one that will sire good calves persistently.

Fourth. A large calf crop. This means that all cows shall drop calves, and that the calves shall be properly cared for at birth.

Fifth. Proper care of the breeding herd and the calves

Sixth. Selection of good heifer calves to replace old or inferior cows.

Seventh. Prevention of disease among the breeding herd and the younger stock.

Eighth. Shelter sufficient to protect the cattle from both severe cold and extremely hot weather.

Ninth. A practical knowledge of fattening cattle for market.

Tenth. Marketing to advantage.

The use of more and better purebred sires is a dependable method of decreasing the costs of rib roasts and beefsteak, because cattle of better blood make more economical and rapid gains than do their scrub-ancestored rivals. Buying a good herd bull is the first step in growing better calves at much less cost per pound. In common or native cow herds, calves sired by purebred bulls weigh on an average about 125 pounds a head more when one year old than youngsters of the same age sired by the average run of scrub bulls, and they will sell for about two cents a pound more as stockers and feeders. Two-year-old steers sired by good purebred bulls weigh on an average about 200 pounds a head more than steers parented by scrub bulls, and sell for about four cents a pound more as stockers and feeders. This difference in price of the two classes of calves and steers applies not simply to the difference in weight, but to the total weight. For instance, in the case of yearlings, scrubs weigh about 300 pounds and sell for about 9 cents a pound, while grades at the same age weigh about 425 pounds and will sell for 11 cents a pound. Two-year-old scrubs weigh about 525 pounds a head and, valued at 8 cents a pound, will bring $42 apiece, while grades of equal age weigh about 725 pounds and, at 12 cents a pound as stockers and feeders, bring $87.

Good Care for Bull.

The bull should be the best-cared-for individual in the herd. Not only should he have the proper feed, but he should be kept in a separate paddock or lot and should not have the freedom of the herd except during limited seasons of the year. Unless a special lot can be provided some means of giving the bull exercise should be devised.

Next to the bull, the cows merit careful attention. Breeding cows of large, roomy, vigorous type, possessing strong constitution as indicated by a wide, deep conformation, with a good chest or heart capacity, strong, clean-cut muzzle, bright eye, and alert but gentle disposition should be chosen as foundation stock. Cows of good quality, that prosper on limited feed rations, as indicated by their uniform fleshing, loose, pliable skin, glossy coat of hair, and, in general, animals which are not coarse or rough in any respect, should be selected for breeding purposes. Such cows usually produce sufficient milk to nourish their calves properly. It should be the aim of every beef owner to select cows for the breeding herd which will gradually and consistently improve the average of the progeny. At least these are the recommendations of the United States department of agriculture, as set forth in Farmers' Bulletin No. 1078, "Growing Beef on the Farm," which has just been issued.

There are three general systems of handling beef-breeding herds, in respect to whether beef, baby beef, or dual-purpose operations are the ends sought. The straight beef system is primarily adapted to regions where pasture is plentiful and cheap, this system being more widely followed in the United States than either of the other two. The baby-beef system is a highly specialized line, and is peculiarly adapted to regions where a plentiful supply of fattening feeds is grown, together with sufficient pasture for the summer maintenance of the breeding herd and nursing calves. At the present time the corn belt is the region best adapted to this system, although it is practiced in a limited way in other sections. The dual-purpose system is followed extensively in many semi-dairy districts. According to this plan all the cows are milked and the calves are raised on skim milk and supplemental feeds. Often the dual-purpose idea resolves itself into trying to make dairy animals out of a strictly beef breed. Dual-purpose calves, as a rule, do not possess the beef-type characteristics of strictly beef-bred calves, but when they are "grown out" and fattened properly they make very satisfactory beef.

Cut Feed Costs to Limit.

When feeds are high in price the use of cheap rations is especially desirable for the maintenance of the breeding herd. Cows raised for the production of calves only can be fed very cheaply on silage and dry roughages, combined with a small quantity of protein-rich concentrates, although by the substitution of leguminous hays the costly concentrates may be omitted. Dual-purpose cows kept for dairy products as well as calves should receive feeds nearly identical with those provided for dairy cows. As far as possible, home-grown feeds should be utilized, although it is almost essential that considerable amounts of purchased concentrates be provided. Cows that are milked should receive 1 pound of concentrate for every 3 to 4 pounds of milk produced, depending upon the fat content of the milk.

In the South, where velvet beans may be grown, this crop when planted with corn affords excellent pasturage for breeding cows after the corn has been gathered. Throughout the drought exposed areas of the West it is unusual to save emergency supplies of feed, and as a result during the drought many cattle owners are obliged to utilize the native range plants such as soapweed, sotol, bear grass, and prickly pear. These plants, ground up, serve to sustain the life of cattle where each mature animal receives from 20 to 25 pounds a day. When from 1 to 2 pounds of cottonseed cake is supplied as a supplement to the chopped feed a fairly good ration is provided.

In the semiarid region of the Southwest, sorghum plants provide excellent silage, while in the range sections of the middle West it is essential to set aside considerable hay as emergency feed. During severe winters animals that are especially thin and weak should be separated from the rest of the herd and sheltered and fed. Cheap shelter not only saves feed but may save many cattle that would die if left exposed to wintry storms.

How to Feed Beef.

The farmers' bulletin mentioned discusses in detail the proper methods of feeding cattle in the various beef-producing sections in the United States, and also presents a wide variety of balanced rations suitable for use in each of these beefsteak producing sections. It describes at some length the popular methods of handling yearling stockers, while it also emphasizes the value as scavengers of hogs, yard mates of fattening cattle. The number of hogs to use depends upon the kind of cattle and the character and quality of the grain ration which is fed. Ordinarily one pig weighing 70 to 80 pounds to each three steers is required. When supplemental feed is provided the porkers, a few more may just as well be added, the chief consideration being to utilize all waste feed and to convert it into pork.

GOOD ROADS

ROADS SHOW AT HOT SPRINGS

Active Preparations and Arrangement of Programs Have Commenced—Other Meetings.

The eighth annual convention of the United State Good Roads association, also the eighth annual good roads show, will be held in Hot Springs, Ark., April 12 to 17, 1920. Already active preparations and arrangement of the programs have commenced. J. A. Rountree, director general of the United States Good Roads association, has been invited to Hot Springs, Ark., for the purpose of consulting with the Business Men's league, the mayor, the various civic organizations and citizens in general, to discuss the program and details of arranging good roads week in Hot Springs, Ark., next April.

It is proposed to make good roads week the greatest gathering of good roads boosters that have ever assembled in this country. Delegates will be in attendance from every state in the Union. Already more than forty governors have accepted life membership in the organization and are vice presidents of the same.

In connection with the organization the annual meeting of the Bankhead Highway, which is promoting a national highway from Washington to San Diego, Cal., the Albert Pike National Highway, which is promoting a highway from Pikes Peak to Kansas City, and a number of good roads organizations will hold meetings during good roads week in April.

One of the features of the convention will be a display of road machinery, road material, trucks, tractors and automobiles. Already six governors have notified Director General Rountree of their acceptance, and will head a large delegation from their respective states. It is expected to have at least twenty governors in attendance at this convention. Senator John H. Bankhead, who is president of the United States Good Roads association and author of the Bankhead federal aid bill of $85,000,000 annually for the building of good roads throughout the country, is quite enthusiastic about this meeting and gives assurance that the governors will send heads of the various departments to the meeting.

PROVE VALUE OF GOOD ROADS

Cotton Growers Quick to Realize Commercial Worth of Improved Highways in Hauling.

Southern cotton growers have been quick to realize the commercial value of good roads. Money invested in scientific road building is well spent, as witness the illustration, where a single team is hauling 12 bales, about 6,000 pounds, to market. Under former conditions, with mud hub deep the year around, the same team could haul but one bale, and that only half as fast.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

PROGRESS IN FEDERAL ROADS

Total Mileage of Projects Approved in August Shows Increase Over Month of July.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

An increase for August compared with July in the total mileage of federal aid project statements approved by the secretary of agriculture is shown in the latest report prepared by the bureau of public roads, the total for August being 1,246.92 miles as against 1,168.66 miles for July. The 125 project statements approved in August involved improvement at an estimated total cost of $18,238,906.19, on which federal aid in the amount of $7,171,794.84 was requested. The 148 project statements approved in July involved improvement of highways at a total estimated cost of $19,012,480.85, on which federal aid to the amount of $8,461,571.58 was requested.

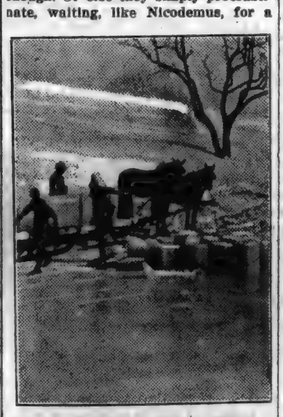
Is there any man who would not avail himself of any necessary commodity he could find that has not increased in cost?

Well, here is one thing that has not: Nature is freezing ice just as cheaply as it was before the war.

And yet, there are thousands of people—people who need ice—neglecting opportunities to provide themselves with an abundance of it at no cost of manufacture whatever. Where no extra labor is hired the cost of cutting and hauling is no more than it used to be, and the actual manufacturing cost is as it always has been—nothing.

Every farm family needs ice. With ice in the farm ice-house, a hundred comforts are possible all through hot weather. They could not be had if the ice-house were empty. And, with few exceptions, farmers who produce milk or butter for sale, as the United States department of agriculture has frequently pointed out, simply can not have a full measure of success without ice. The absence of ice generally means a big money loss, but it means more than that. Sour milk makes a bitter man. The dairy farmer who has to haul back home a lot of sour milk or cream every few days simply is not in a frame of mind to enjoy any of the good things of life.

A great many men honestly mean to harvest a crop of ice, but never do it. The pond freezes. They think, perhaps, that the ice is not quite thick enough. Or else they simply procrastinate, waiting, like Nicodemus, for a more convenient season. It does not always come. The pond does not always freeze a second time. Boreas may be the most rigorous of the gods, but he is also one of the most unreliable. It is not safe, therefore, to defer harvesting a house full of ice.



This Sort of Thing May Be Made a Picnic as Well as a Profits Promoter.

Many Kinds of Ice-Houses.

The house may be any one of many kinds. An ideal ice-house is one thing. A house that will keep ice is quite another thing. Farmers' Bulletin 623 of the United States department of agriculture gives full information concerning them.

The ice-harvesting season fortunately comes at a time when there is the least work on the farm for men and teams, and consequently the actual money cost is usually not very great.

The quantity of ice needed depends upon the location of the farm—whether in the North or in the South, the number of cows milked, and the method of handling the product. In the northern states it has been found that, with a moderately good ice-house, one-half of a ton of ice per cow is sufficient to cool cream and hold it at a low temperature for delivery two or three times a week. One and one-half or two tons per cow should be provided where milk is to be cooled.

Capacity of Ice-Houses.

A cubic foot of ice weighs about 57 pounds, so in storing ice it is customary to allow from 40 to 50 cubic feet per ton for the mass of ice. At least 12 inches must be left between the ice and the wall of the building for insulation, unless the ice-house has permanently insulated walls and an unusually large space for insulation beneath and above the ice. From these figures it is possible to calculate readily the quantity of ice that any given ice-house will hold.

Where a lake, pond, or stream of clear water is not available, some preliminary work in preparing the ice field will be required before freezing weather sets in. It is therefore advisable to make all plans for the work as soon as possible. Water for the ice supply should be entirely free from contamination or pollution. Ponds and sluggish streams usually have grass and weeds growing in them, so that the ice harvest is likely to contain decayed vegetable matter, which is always objectionable. They should therefore be thoroughly cleared of such growths before the ice has formed.

In some sections it is necessary to impound the water for producing ice. This may be done either by excavating and diverting a stream into the excavation, or by constructing dams across low areas. In localities where very low temperatures prevail for several weeks at a time and the supply of pure water is limited, blocks of ice may be frozen in metal cans or in special fiber containers.

Size of the Ice Field.

In harvesting ice it is desirable to have a field of sufficient size to fill the ice-house at a single cutting, as the thickness and quality of the ice will be more nearly uniform, and the necessary preparation for cutting and harvesting need be made but once. In many instances, however, the size of the pond or stream is such that it is necessary to wait for a second crop in order to fill the ice-house. The average farmer requires only a comparatively small quantity of ice, so that even a small harvesting surface will usually prove large enough, especially if ice is cut the second time. The square feet of surface required per ton is shown in the accompanying table. Size of cake, 22 by 22 inches.

Few Tools Required.

When a small quantity of ice is to be harvested, but few tools are required. The following list contains those actually needed for harvesting ice on a small scale: Two ice saws, one hand marker, one pulley and rope, two pairs of ice tongs, two ice hooks, one pointed bar and one straight edge. While these tools are all that are necessary, additional ones, such as the horse plow and marker, horse scraper and marker, and a calking bar, are convenient, and will help to expedite the work of ice harvesting.

LITTLE BUTTER IS EXPORTED

Product Manufactured in the United States Is Small Factor in International Trade.

Butter made in the United States is a very small factor in the international butter trade, according to compilations made by dairy experts of the United States department of agriculture. More than 99 per cent of our butter business has been entirely domestic, except in the last three years. Even small exports and imports, however, have a considerable effect on prices. That condition is especially true in countries where butter production and consumption are nearly equal. The United Kingdom and Germany were the principal butter-importing nations, and Europe in the last decade has been unable to supply its own butter needs. Shortly before the war Siberia, Australia and New Zealand supplied most of the butter which Europe imported.

GET PROFIT FROM POTATOES

Badly Cut, Mashed, Frosted and Damaged Tubers Not Wanted by Dealers or Consumers.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Shippers of potatoes will profit by heeding market demands and preferences. Dealers and consumers do not desire badly cut, mashed, frosted, and decayed potatoes or those damaged by sunburn, blight, dry rot, or an excess of scab or second growth. Markets frequently are overloaded, prices seriously affected, and unnecessary losses sustained by growers because of the shipment of such unsatisfactory stock.

GENERAL FARM NOTES

The farmer is the only man who can live at home and succeed at it.

* * *

Watch the squash and cabbage stored in the cellar. Both are apt to decay at this time of year.

* * *

Lots of land and big muscles will pay, but less land and plenty of active brains may pay better.

* * *

"Cut only dead and dying timber," is a good rule to go by in thinning the standing trees for fuel.

* * *

Burn all rubbish from the garden. Its value as compost will not offset the damage from the insects and disease found in this trash.

* * *

Farmers who keep cows, feed hogs and raise sheep usually save enough manure to keep up a portion of their land so large crops can be grown.

* * *

Pocket gophers may be poisoned by putting strychnine crystals in raw carrots or potatoes and putting the pieces in the pocket-gopher runs, preferably the branch runs.

MAN'S FRIEND IN FAR NORTH

Malamute Dog Has Assisted Enormously in the Opening and Settlement of Alaska.

The Malmute dogs are "man's own brother" in Alaska, according to Mrs. Charlotte Cameron, author and a fellow of the Royal Geographical society. The dogs, used for drawing sleighs over enormous distances, detest the summer months, and are boarded out to Indians living on the banks of the Yukon river at $5 a month. On the Yukon these dogs meet their enemy, the mosquito, and to get a little peace bury themselves up to the neck in the soft mud by the river until the sun goes down.

In winter there is a dog-sleigh mail twice a week from Seward to Nome, a distance of 1,500 miles. The dogs cover about 40 to 50 miles a day, and may compete in the Nome "Derby" over a course of 400 miles.

Mrs. Cameron was struck by the activities of American traders at Nome. They are rapidly building up a tremendous fur business with Siberia, the most valuable skins being brought across Bering sea in small schooners. "They are just one big, happy family in Alaska," added Mrs. Cameron. "Why, even the hotel porter at Nome refused a tip. I found afterward he owned two mines and two small farms."

TO RESTORE THE HOLY LAND

Zionist Organization of America Is Proceeding Along Comprehensive, Far-Reaching Plans.

The Zionist organization of America will prepare the Holy land in every way for immigration of Jews from Russia, Poland, Galicia, Roumania and "other pogrom-ridden countries," it announced. Large tracts of land in Palestine will be bought, and the plans provide for conservation and development of water power, inauguration of sanitation and drainage in cities and towns, irrigation, a forest station, survey and development of natural resources, and establishment of technical laboratories for agricultural purposes.

Basing its project on its confidence that Great Britain will assume a mandate over Palestine for the specific purpose of establishing there a homeland for the Jewish people, the Zionist organization has gone into comprehensive detail in its Holy land arrangements, it stated. These provide for a school system from kindergartens to a university, financial loans to agricultural and industrial organizations, rehabilitation of devastated Jewish colonies, maintenance of hospitals and nurses' training schools, an anti-malaria campaign and improvement of housing conditions in Jerusalem, Jaffa and other cities.

Wabash.—The Roann Co-operative Shipping association, composed of 80 farmers and stock breeders of Paw-paw township, has been formed.

Indianapolis.—The federal amendment for woman suffrage was ratified by both houses of the Indiana legislature, meeting in special session here. In the senate the vote was 43 to 3 and in the house 90 to 0. Indiana is the twenty-sixth state to ratify the amendment.

Indianapolis.—Purchase of the two city blocks between Meridian, Pennsylvania, Vermont and North streets as the site for Indiana's great war memorial building, as the state's memorial to veterans of the world war, is the recommendation adopted by the citizens' committee in charge of plans for the memorial.

Indianapolis.—One contractor for public work and 18 present or former public officials are charged with owing their respective government units a total of $8,224.48 in reports Jesse E. Eschbach, chief examiner for the state board of accounts, turned over to Governor Goodrich for certification to the attorney general's department for collection or legal action.

South Bend.—Two hundred pupils and several teachers of the local high school are ill, most of them suffering from some form of influenza. The disease also has made inroads on practically every factory and business house in the city and many employees are ill. Physicians are unable to attend to all calls and hospitals are unable to receive any more patients.

Lawrenceburg.—Charles A. Lowe, judge of the Dearborn circuit court, has announced that in all divorce cases in which the defendant lives in this county he cannot absent himself from the hearing of the case in court, but must appear in person and will be subpoenaed if necessary. Judge Lowe believes that by compelling both parties to the action to appear, the number of divorces granted will be reduced.

Indianapolis.—The 1920 state convention of the American Legion will be held June 28 and 29, according to a decision of the executive committee. The last state convention chose Vincennes for the meeting place and directed that the executive committee set the time. Raymond S. Springer, state commander, was authorized to appoint convention committees, and the state officers were authorized to draft the convention program.

Jeffersonville.—Farmers of Clark county say they never saw so much corn in the shock still standing in the fields at this time of the year and whenever opportunity offers they are shucking, which would have been done long ago had the weather permitted. Some of it is badly damaged by the damp and will be fed to stock. The wheat crop promises to be 30 to 50 per cent short. Early wheat either did not come up or was injured by fly and wet weather prevented sowing wheat late.

Washington, D. C.—The Supreme court held that the Indiana statute penalizing telegraph companies for negligent delay in delivering telegrams is inoperative as to interstate business owing to the federal act of 1910 placing telegraph companies under the jurisdiction of the interstate commerce commission. The court reversed Indiana supreme court decrees in judgments against the Western Union Telegraph company for failure to deliver promptly a telegram sent from Chicago to Fort Wayne, Ind.

Terre Haute.—Twenty-six mines in the Indiana coal fields, with an average daily production of 30,000 tons, were shut down recently on account of car shortage. Of these, eight were in the Clinton, eight in the Linton, three in the Sullivan, four in the Terre Haute and Brazil, and three in the Bicknell fields. One-third of the loss in tonnage was in the Clinton fields, where eight mines have a daily production of 10,000 tons. The coal ridge on the Monon railroad, near Linton, was closed, the men refusing to work because the miners' train was ten minutes late on a return trip from the mines.

South Bend.—The board of county commissioners and the chairmen of the political parties of the city are trying to obtain the appointment of a special election board which will confine its work entirely to the voting of women, with the purpose of keeping the cost of the coming presidential election at a minimum. It is said that because of the fact that women are permitted to vote for presidential electors, and cannot vote for county and state officials, two registration days may be necessary, and that the primary and election will cost the taxpayers of the county about $100,000. The election cost in other years has been about $50,000.

Richmond.—Quaker educational institutions, including Earlham college, in this city, will receive $7,500,000 of the $4,000,000,000 fund of the interchurch world movement set aside for the development of smaller colleges of this country, it was learned here.

Anderson.—Carl F. Morrow, attorney for Madison county, is drafting an ordinance for redistricting Madison county as to voting precincts. The last congressional poll of Madison county showed a total of 19,778 men voters, and it is estimated that with women voting the total number will be 39,378.

Evansville.—Some of the coal dealers of Evansville are selling lump coal at 20 cents a bushel. This is the highest price ever charged for coal in this city.

South Bend.—An advance of approximately 15 per cent in board, tuition and room rates at Notre Dame university, beginning February 1, was announced in a letter received by the 1,500 students in attendance at the college.

Gary.—Judge Charles Greenwald found for the defense here in superior court in a case in which owners of jitney busses attacked the constitutionality of a city ordinance ousting jitneys. The trial was in progress four days. It is said that an appeal will be taken. Fifty jitneys are affected by the court order.

Lafayette.—Preston Moody, age fourteen, of Fremont, Steuben county, was declared the junior corn champion of Indiana at the farmers' short course at Purdue university, his feat of growing 147.3 bushels of corn on one acre of ground establishing a new record in Indiana corn production. The youth is a high school freshman.

Vernon.—Fur-bearing animals, whose pelts have been worth $40,000, have been caught in Jennings county this season, according to estimates of trappers and dealers. Lowlands of the Muscatatuck river, Sand creek, Graham creek and their tributaries are the homes of many foxes, racoons, muskrats, mink and skunks.

Indianapolis.—It became definitely known here that the name of Gov. James P. Goodrich will be placed on the Indiana presidential preference ballot, to be voted on at the primary in May. No announcement has been made by the governor as to his candidacy for the Republican nomination, and it is not expected that any formal announcement will be made.

Indianapolis.—The state has just closed a deal whereby it acquired for $19,000 the Tauglog farm of 87 acres adjoining the Wayne colony farm of the Eastern Hospital for the Insane. The state has an option of $215 an acre on the 93-acre Shank farm, adjoining the colony farm. If the second tract is acquired, the total will be 700 acres for the colony farm and a grand total of 1,050 acres in the hospital property.

New Albany.—This place is beginning to attract attention as a fur pelt shipping point, one buyer having purchased $15,000 worth from hunters and trappers recently, one shipment of over $8,000 being made to Chicago. Pelts are brought in from many points in aradius of fifty miles. The season for shipping pelts of fur-bearing animals extends from November to March. Furs worth more than $45,000 have been bought by one buyer for a New York firm.

Bloomington.—Which is the greater handicap to the young man—to be born rich and reared near Broadway's bright lights or to be born poor in the wilderness? Indiana high school pupils will attempt to answer the question in an essay contest for prizes offered by William Lowe Bryan, president of Indiana university. The contest will be held in connection with the Roosevelt memorial campaign in the state and will be open to all Hoosier high school pupils.

South Bend.—Farmers of St. Joseph county have placed themselves on record as being emphatically opposed to the campaign being made by the South Bend Chamber of Commerce to restore the daylight saving law. They assert they will use every means to defeat the action of the chamber. In the argument of the farmers, it is asserted that transportation facilities demand much more early morning work on the part of the farmers and hired help, which is oftentimes impossible. Dairymen, too, are opposing the chamber's plan.

Bedford.—Superintendents of ten high schools met in this city and perfected the organization of the South Central Superintendents of Schools Research club, which will have for its function the betterment of the schools and the maintenance of the highest standards in the curriculums. The cities represented and their representatives are Spencer, Fred Bourns; Greencastle, Edwin C. Dodson; Martinsville, Willis Holman; Bloomington, E. E. Ramsay; Brazil, Charles P. Kellar; Mitchell, J. H. Shipp; Washington, R. N. Tirey; Orleans, L. L. Hoover; Salem, Superintendent McKinsey; Bedford, E. W. Montgomery.

Lafayette.—Edward Lux of Shelby county was proclaimed corn king of Indiana at the annual state corn show at Purdue university, held in connection with the farmers' short course and the twentieth annual convention of the Indiana Corn Growers' association. He is a brother of Peter J. Lux, also of Shelby county, national corn king and former state champion corn grower. The new state champion has been exhibiting for 15 years at the Indiana shows, but this is his first important winning. His farm is at Waldron and it was an exhibit of ten ears of Johnson county white dent corn from this farm, that won him the grand sweepstakes prize.

Indianapolis.—There have been 13,405 prisoners paroled at the state prison, reformatory and woman's prison since the indeterminate sentence and parole law went into effect in 1897, according to figures compiled by Amos W. Butler, secretary of the Indiana board of state charities. Of the number, 26.8 per cent proved delinquent, but more than half of them were apprehended and returned, Mr. Butler said that while on parole the prisoners earned a total of $4,806,511.44; incurred personal expenses of $3,499,949.45 and earned, net $306,561.99.

YOUR COLD IS EASED AFTER THE FIRST DOSE

"Pape's Cold Compound" then breaks up a cold in a few hours

Relief comes instantly. A dose taken every two hours until three doses are taken usually breaks up a severe cold and ends all the grippe misery.

The very first dose opens your clogged-up nostrils and the air passages in the head, stops nose running, relieves the headache, dullness, feverishness, sneezing, soreness and stiffness.

Don't stay stuffed-up! Quit blowing and snuffling! Clear your congested head! Nothing else in the world gives such prompt relief as "Pape's Cold Compound," which costs only a few cents at any drug store. It acts without assistance, tastes nice, contains no quinine—Insist upon Pape's!—Adv.

Music is the food of love—which is more than can be said of the onion.

Taking Garfield Tea keeps the system clean, the blood pure and the general health good. Buy from your druggist.—Adv.

Yes, Alfred, a wife is called the better half because she usually gets the better of the other half.

ASPIRIN INTRODUCED BY "BAYER" IN 1900

Look for name "Bayer" on the tablets, then you need never worry.

If you want the true, world-famous Aspirin, as prescribed by physicians for over eighteen years, you must ask for "Bayer Tablets of Aspirin."

The "Bayer Cross" is stamped on each tablet and appears on each package for your protection against imitations.

In each package of "Bayer Tablets of Aspirin" are safe and proper directions for Colds, Headache, Neuralgia, Toothache, Earache, Rheumatism, Lumbago, Neuritis, and for Pain in general.

Handy tin boxes containing 12 tablets cost but a few cents. Druggists also sell larger "Bayer" packages. Aspirin is the trade mark of Bayer Manufacture of Monoaceticacidester of Salicylicacid.—Adv.

When lovers form a combination an engagement ring is the result.

Sore Eyes, Blood-Shot Eyes, Watery Eyes, Sticky Eyes, all healed promptly with nightly applications of Roman Eye Balsam. Adv.

The Kind.

"Margaret has a film in her eye."
"Poor thing. Is it a cataract?"
"No; a motion-picture play."

GREEN'S AUGUST FLOWER.

Constipation invites other troubles which come speedily unless quickly checked and overcome by Green's August Flower which is a gentle laxative, regulates digestion both in stomach and intestines, cleans and sweetens the stomach and alimentary canal, stimulates the liver to secrete the bile and impurities from the blood. It is a sovereign remedy used in many thousands of households all over the civilized world for more than half a century by those who have suffered with indigestion, nervous dyspepsia, sluggish liver, coming up of food, palpitation, constipation and other intestinal troubles. Sold by druggists and dealers everywhere. Try a bottle, take no substitute.—Adv.

Between the written and the unwritten law, justice has no easy task.

TOO WEAK TO DO ANYTHING

A Serious Feminine Illness Remedied By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Casco, Wis.—"After the birth of each of my children I had displacement and was so weak I couldn't do anything. I found a book about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound so thought I would try it, and after taking it I soon felt better. That was fifteen years ago and I have felt well ever since except that I had a slight attack of the trouble some time ago and took some more of your Compound and was soon all right again. I always recommend your medicine and you may publish my testimonial for the benefit of other women."—Mrs. Jules Bebo, Jr., R. 1, Box 99, Casco, Wis.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotic or harmful drugs, and today holds the record of being the most successful remedy for female ills in this country, and thousands of voluntary testimonials prove this fact.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

A New Year's Wish With Fourteen Points.

—o—

Let's do more to make America safe for those who believe in America.

Let's not do anything on Wednesday which we would shirk from doing Sunday.

Let's remember daily that there are tasks we must do ourselves and not delegate them to someone else to perform.

Let's remember that when Paul said "as far as possible live at peace" etc., he did not mean that we were to fraternize with the rednecks, roughnecks and those who overthrow the government.

Let's up and kick all such out of the country.

Let's resolve that regardless of the pittance that we earn, we will earn something.

Let's fully understand once and for all that higher wages do not mean lower prices excepting we provide greater production.

Let's remember that while we counsel against too much haste that we should likewise counsel against too much rest.

Let's realize right from the start that 1920 is a year in which much lasting good may be accomplished if we start right and keep on doing right.

Let's all solemnly covenant that if one corner of the world is getting worse, that we will make our corner better.

Let's weed out preachers of the gospel of discontent everywhere and make it so unhealthy they will never want to return.

Let's refrain from saying anything against our neighbor, our town, our state, nation, flag, or competitive banker, that is not 100 per cent. boost.

Let's fight for the square deal for everybody.

Let's not forget that as a nation our God is the Lord.

Saturday morning a notice was placed in the door of the Farmers State Bank at Hicksville, Ohio, stating that at the request of the Bank Directors the affairs of the institution had been placed in the hands of the State Banking Department. The facts in the closing of this institution are not known to the public but it is believed that the bank has loaned out too much of its money and in exchange has taken over some paper that is not as good as it ought to be. Rumors of all kinds are afloat but the inspectors or directors have not given out anything authentic for publication at this time. The bank opened for business about two years ago and is composed of farmer stockholders with the exception of one member. The deposits at the last report were given at $230,600.

Wife Is Granted Divorce.

After three days battle in the DeKalb Circuit Court, Mrs. Edith Abel, wife of Ross Abel, Trustee of Newville township, obtained a legal seperation from her husband, Friday, according to the decision of Judge Dan M. Link, together with alimony amounting to $4,000 with the right to her personal effects that she had at the time of their marriage.

The plaintiff used one day last term of court and a day and a half this term in substantiating her claims as set out in her complaint, while the defendant used less than a half day in making his denial to the wife's complaint and in trying to establish the facts as he had set out in his cross complaint.

The court had given the contracting parties an opportunity to settle their differences before proceeding at the last term of court but they were unable to reach an agreement. Both the parties are well known in this section of the county and many witnesses on both sides were taken from this community. According to the decision of the court the plaintiff established her complaint beyond any doubt and the verdict was given immediately at the close of the trial.

The defendant stated that they were married June 30, 1905, and at that time he had personal property to the extent of $1,500, that he had purchased land to the extent of 95 acres valued at the present time to at least $100 per acre, that he had received $1,100 as gifts, and that the stock was worth $3,000, that he had sold wheat and hogs from farm since separation, salary earned as teacher and trustee and also taking account of the grain raised showed an aggregate of $12,000.

The separation occurred in April 1919.

J. E. Pomeroy was attorney for the plaintiff and Atkinson-Husselman & Endicott for the defendant.

Sure Business Is Good

Looking at this fact from all angles, we believe that the business in St. Joe at this present time is the best now that it has been for a long time without any exception. In talking to our business men we have come to this conclusion.

Taking Monday for an example. E. R. Kinsey reports a good sale of furniture to parties one mile north of Grabill. It is a fact also that when a person comes to town for anything at one store that others of the town are well patronized.

Wm. Curie reports an extra good run also. He sold four lob sleds to parties away from this community and three hog waterers besides the other articles. The parties coming here were surprised to learn of the great saving in prices, in fact they made a saving of $25 in their purchases at the Curie store. They were not given any reduction in prices whatever as Curie has but one price to everyone.

All of our business men should remember one thing and that is that it is necessary to do some practical newspaper advertising and reach out for new trade in every channel. The News is getting a nice list of good reliable customers and every merchant can well afford to invest in advertising in its columns.

Dies Wednesday Morning.

Mrs. Sarah Hull, aged 70 years, died at her home in St. Joe, Wednesday morning after an illness of some months. The funeral will be held Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock at the Lutheran Church.

Six Lives Taken.

Six lives were the toll exacted by a crazed mind in a horrible tragedy enacted at Harlan, ten miles south of St. Joe, on Tuesday evening of last week, being the most terrible tragedy in this locality for years.

William Spindler, aged 70, a retired farmer, is dead by his own hand and his son and wife, Mr. and Mrs. Christ Spindler, and their three children as they lay in their beds.

The dead: William Spindler, 70; Christ Spindler, 31; Mrs. Christ Spindler, 29; Herschel Spindler, 6; Marion Spindler, 4 and, Blaine Spindler, 2½.

That Spindler was insane through worry over a real estate deal which had been troubling him for some time is the belief of his friends and neighbors. He left a rambling note to his daughter, Mrs. John Werts, which bears out this belief.

The murder and suicide took place some time Tuesday night but it was not discovered until six o'clock Wednesday evening when the daughter, Mrs. Werts, became alarmed because she had seen neither her father nor brother about their premises. With her husband and Mr. and Mrs. Henry Smith, neighbors, they went to the Spindler home and forced a lock. The aged man was lying on the floor with the revolver he had used still in his hand and his five victims were in their beds.

Word From Hospital.

Word was received last week from the Insane Hospital at Richmond, Indiana, to the effect that he is kept quite close most of the time because he is so irritable with those about him. The doctor pronounced his case as incurable and that it would be necessary for him to have special care the balance of his life.

PROBLEMS FACING STRICKEN WORLD

Shall Chaos or Reconstruction in Europe Follow the Great World War?

NOW WEAK AND HEARTBROKEN

In Mourning and Poverty She Counts Her Dead and Looks With Eyes of Sadness Toward the Threatening Future.

Article II.

By FRANK COMERFORD.

August 1, 1914, was the day. On that day Germany declared war on Russia. The fire alarm rang around the world. Peasants in the field straightened their backs, listened and looked into the sun confused, wondering. Flags were unfurled, bands played, faces were white, tense and serious. Men left their work and talked in groups on the street corners. Women laid down their brooms, put aside their washing, and talked in whispers; sad lights were in their eyes. Children stopped playing. Something had happened. Evil things were ahead. August 3 and 4 found France and Great Britain mobilizing their sons. The torch was sweeping Europe—the fire of death had started.

For four long years—heart-sickening years—the world ran red. Men waded through mud and blood, fought, suffered, cursed, prayed, while back home in the manless houses women and children worked, cried, prayed and waited. The world was mad. Death poisoned every breath the people breathed.

It is over now, it is finished. A stunned, numbed, weak, heartbroken Europe is again sitting in the sun of peace. Europe is in dirty black rags. The black is mourning, the rags are poverty. Her face is deeply lined—trenches made by suffering. Her eyes are downcast and dead. Hope flutters weakly in her breast; faith has faded from her soul. Her home is a house of darkness. The fire on the hearth has turned to cold gray ashes. The kettle no longer sings, it moans. Her mind is weary, her body is wasted. Hunger has robbed her of her strength. Her stockingless, shoeless feet are blue from the cold. Her lips wear starvation color. Ice in the winter's wind lashes her shivering, half-naked body. She mumbles as she stares vacantly into space—she is tired, so tired. As I beheld her it seemed to me that a face so troubled and sad must never have known a smile.

I listened to her mutterings. I found that she was counting. Over and over again she counted on her thin, tired, worn hands—she was counting her dead.

Thinking of Her Loss.

She was thinking. Her eyes looked over the hundreds of thousands of square miles of war zone, slashed with trenches, pitted and pockmarked by shells. She sees where they fell. No tears are in her eyes. Long ago the hurt had reached the point where tears dry up. Row upon row, line upon line, mile upon mile, white-painted wooden crosses mark their graves. For the most part they were her youngest born, her most beloved, who dug deep in the soil to sleep forever in the dark dugouts.

As they fell bleeding from steel and lead, choking from gas, writhing in agony from fire, they proved in the dying word they spoke that they were mere boys, as they had shown in their fighting that they were brave men. To the poppies they intrusted their message, and the red poppies remember the last word of Europe's dying sons, who went out into the great beyond with this last word on their lips, "Mother."

She has finished counting; an ache shudders through her bent body. She sighs and sobs, "Seven and a half million of my sons are dead."

Her thoughts turn to the living, her arms open to receive them, she holds them to her heart. They have come, but how?

Some with sightless eyes, doomed to grope through the world in a never-ending darkness, a night without stars or moon; sunless, black, hopeless days, and these, too, young men in the very morning of their day.

Others sentenced to silence—deaf and dumb. Never again will she hear their voices nor will they hear hers.

Still others in wheel chairs, dwarfed, legless.

More hobbling on crutches, limping on canes.

Some with empty sleeves.

Many with great scars, where once was a handsome face.

She sees them all, her heart bleeds; the twisted, the mangled, the torn. She is counting them, the 12,616,617, the wounded of the war.

War's Frightful Cost.

Her voice is husky, her hands are tired, but she must count on. Six and a half million of her sons were marked "missing and prisoners" in the official war score. Many of these have come back to her, but she does not question them—she dare not. Their faces tell of the unspeakable horrors they endured. She sees in their eyes a depth of pain that is unfathomable. She is a mother—she knows.

The war is over, but she is not over the war. Must she never stop counting? Is there no end to her losses? The graveyards are crowded. Her thoughts turn to the dead who, while they did not die in the war, died because of the war. Those who went out in battle left life in a burst of glory. Others there were who fell in their tracks—exhaustion, broken hearts sent them "west." She has not forgotten how the home flank suffered. The stay-at-homes were not all slackers. They fought hunger and cold, bent their backs beyond the straining point. Worst of all, they waited. It is estimated that 20,000,000 civilians died from weakness, fatigue, strain, broken hearts—the horror of waiting destroyed resistance. These were the underfed older men and women, the scared, undernourished children. Is there any wonder that Europe has a death look in her eyes? Death has been her morning thought, it has been her night sob, and for four years made up of months, weeks, days, hours, minutes and seconds death has been her Nemesis.

She is now totaling. The figures are appalling. They stagger her imagination. It is easy to write them, impossible to understand their full meaning. The mind can't grasp it; the world is bewildered by the number. It is too stupendous, too horrible for understanding. Think of it, seven and a half million young men, for the most part between the ages of eighteen and thirty, the youth, the strength, the spirit, the man power of Europe, dead—twenty million from civil life dead, over twelve and a half million wounded.

Who can measure this loss?

War brought death. It did more—it stopped birth. In the devastated regions of Belgium, France, Italy, Poland, parts of Russia and the Balkan countries, the birth rate fell to almost nothing. In England and Wales the birth rate in the last part of 1915 was 19.5, the lowest on record. Mallett calculated that the birth rate had fallen 12 per cent in England and Wales by 1916.

The Journal of Heredity quotes Savorgnan as having estimated that it will take England at least ten years, Germany 12 years, Italy 38 years and France 36 years to recuperate their populations. These calculations by Savorgnan were made before the fearful losses of the campaign of 1918.

A village in France, Blerancourt, tells what the war has done to the man power of Europe. This village, which is in the Chateau Thierry-Soissons district, had a population of a thousand people before the war. Its losses have been tabulated. Twenty-six soldiers from this village were killed in the war. Ninety-seven of the villagers died from war privations. The total of 123 is the death toll of a village of a thousand.

The figures I have quoted from the calculations of Savorgnan and Mallett were made before the war was finished. Since the war, estimates have been made, and these estimates show the situation to be even worse. In France I was told that 57 per cent of the men between twenty and forty years were listed as dead or incapacitated for work. Further, that it would take France over 70 years to recover her normal population.

It is said that it will take Italy 50 years and England 25 years to regain normality of population.

The human waste of the war is more than sad memories. The loss of man power makes a grave problem. It has thrown out of balance the domestic scheme of the world. It will be felt for years. There are a great many more young women than men. Home life is bound to suffer. There will be fewer marriages, fewer children. Statistics only tell part of the story.

European Tarantula.

An eminent authority in such matters, in remarking that the tarantula is a spider, says of that terrifying creature that it is the Lycosa Tarantula, a species of spider found in some of the warmer parts of Italy and Spain. When full grown it is about the size of a chestnut and of a brown color. Its bite was at one time supposed to be dangerous and to induce a kind of "dancing disease," but now it is known not to be worse than the sting of a common wasp.

It is an old fable, extending to remotest times, that the bite of this spider would produce epilepsy or a strange dancing mania in its victims and that this epilepsy or madness could be relieved only by a particular kind of music. The tarantula of Italy and Spain—and it is found in those countries today—has hairy legs with black markings on them.

America's Debt to Jews.

Jews figured very prominently in the discovery of America by Columbus according to Rabbi David Philipson of Cincinnati. The first man who stepped on the shore of the new world was the interpreter of the expedition, Luis de Torres, a Jew. Bernal, the ship surgeon, was also a Jew, as were several members of the crew.

It is also now said to be established that the long-credited belief that Queen Isabella pawned her jewels to furnish Columbus with the funds for the trip is a legend. These funds, it is said, were furnished by two Jews, Luis de Santangel and Gabriel Sanchez. A letter by Columbus to Sanches is still extant, in which he gives some account of his exploits.

Who Knows?

A friend of mine called upon a newly wedded pair and I happened to drop in. The bride had been a widow. My friend remarked to me, "You introduced them to each other, didn't you?" "Why, yes," I tactlessly blurted, "I introduced her to her first and second husbands and who knows but what I'll be the one to introduce her to her third one?"—Exchange.

ART OF MILKING FULLY OUTLINED

Chief Object of Milker Should Be to Increase Quantity and Keep It Clean.

FIRST COMES CLEANLINESS

Cow Should Be Curried and Given Sponge Bath—Harshness Should Be Avoided and Work Done Rapidly—Weigh Milk Daily.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Do you know how to milk?

The question is neither irrelevant nor impertinent. In sober fact, a great many persons who milk cows twice a day really know little about the true art of it, and a great many more could add to their present knowledge.

The writer of this article met one of the men in the dairy division of the United States department of agriculture who knew how to milk. He was a tall, quiet gentleman.

"I'll just drive the cow in the office here," he said. And he did. She was a pasteboard cow, to be sure, but she served very nicely to illustrate several things about milking. And following are a few of the essential things that this man who knows how to milk said about milking.

First Comes Cleanliness.

The first essentials are clean, healthy cows and a clean, healthy milker.

The next, perhaps, is a clean and sterilized pail with a narrow or partially covered top.

The cow should be curried before milking to remove loose hairs, dirt and dandruff. This should be done, if possible, an hour before milking to allow all dust to settle before milking is begun.

The Good Milker Gets the Larger Yield.

The next thing in order is a sort of sponge bath for the cow. It is a very simple matter, though, for all that is required is a pail of clean water and a cloth. Wash off and wipe the udder, the flanks, the thighs and the switch.

That done, everything is ready for the actual milking—which process, by the way, should be approached with hands that are not only clean, but dry.

The milker sits down on a stool placed on the right-hand side of the cow. It is not very clear just why the right side is universally the milking side. Perhaps it is partially due to the fact that the great majority of persons are right handed. The milker on the right side of the cow, if she starts to kick or to move, is in a better position to yank the pail out of harm's way before she can upset it.

The milker then grasps a teat in the palm of each hand. He squeezes the teat by closing the fingers around it and at the same time pulling the teat slightly downward. Then the fingers are loosened around the teat and the hand raised slightly to allow the teat to assume its original form and position, while the other hand squeezes and pulls slightly downward on the other teat. Thus each hand alternately gives a downward squeeze, in rhythmic order.

Getting Rid of Bacteria.

It is wise to milk about two squirts out of each teat before allowing any milk to go into the pail. Bacteria appear to accumulate around the end of the teat, and to be got rid of largely in this way.

Then clasp the small-top milk pail between the knees, with the covered portion of the top nearest the milker. If held in this position the covered portion will prevent hairs and dirt from falling into the milk.

Milk quietly but rapidly. The milker makes use of the mother instinct in the cow. Harshness is against that instinct and the cow does not secrete as much milk as she would if she were milked and handled quietly.

It must be remembered that not all the milk is in the udder when the milking process is begun. The cow secretes milk more rapidly during the milking process; and the milking, to be be successful, must be done in such a way as to promote that secretion If it is done so as to give pain to the cow or to alarm or disquiet her, she will not give so much milk.

Keep milking as long as it is possible to get any milk. The last milk is the richest. The first milk drawn is always comparatively low in butterfat. It is the "strippings," or last milk given, that contain the highest per cent of butterfat.

Milk Should Be Weighed.

Well, that is about all there is to the milking process. A great many things are related to it. The department of agriculture recommends that the milk should be weighed daily. There are several reasons for this. One is that the ration should be adjusted to the weight of milk. A safe rule, the department experts say, is one pound of grain to every three and one-half or four pounds of milk. Another, and perhaps more accurate, rule is to feed as many pounds of grain a day as the cow gives pounds of butterfat in a week; but this latter rule is not so conveniently applied in the case of the family cow, because of the necessity of making a Babcock test for butterfat.

The weight of milk produced, in proportion to the grain ration, is of particular importance during the first 30 days after the cow freshens. She is at that time most easily able to establish her working basis. She has just had her vacation. Her milk-secreting glands are sensitive, her digestive apparatus active. A few days after she becomes fresh, increase her grain one-half or three-quarters of a pound a day, and see how much milk she gives the following day. Keep up the increase from day to day as long as she responds with enough increase in milk to pay for the increased grain. When the point is reached where the milk flow fails to increase with increased feeding, reduce the grain ration a pound or two, and keep along this line until the point is found at which the cow produces the greatest and most economical flow of milk. Then fix this as her regular grain ration as long as she produces that amount of milk.

INFERIOR SIRES ELIMINATED

First Count of Scrub Purebreds Over Considerable Area—More Profit From Herds.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Of particular interest in a live stock survey recently completed in South Dakota are figures on the quality of purebred sires, as well as on the number of scrubs and grades in that region. Fourteen counties typical of live stock conditions in the state were included in the survey. Of the sires in herds of cattle 65 per cent were grades or scrubs, and about 25 per cent of the purebred sires were classed as inferior, according to a part of the reports. This is the first count of scrub purebreds, over a considerable area, received by the United States department of agriculture.

It was found that when purebred sires were used, the average herd of 20 grade cows returned $540 more profit during 1918 than when grade or scrub sires were used. It has been estimated that the elimination of inferior purebred sires would increase the average profit in each herd from $540 to $800 annually.

CLUB MEMBER PRIZE WINNER

Junior Poland China Sow Ascended to Reserve Championship at Colorado County Fair.

One of the largest and best exhibits of registered pigs ever shown in Colorado was brought together at the Larimer county fair, Loveland, by the boys and girls of pig clubs organized by the United States department of agriculture and the state agricultural college. Sixty-six registered pigs, Poland Chinas and Duroc Jerseys, were shown. Only nine club pigs entered were graded. The club pigs competed successfully with the entries of the best swine breeders in the state. A Junior Poland China sow, the property of a club member, ascended to the reserve championship, any age, any breed, being second only to a Duroc sow raised at the Colorado Agricultural college.

GENERAL FARM NOTES

Guard against wear by continuous repair.

• • •

All high-protein feeds are high in price this year.

• • •

Leaves which fall from trees are beneficial to garden soils.

• • •

As with all live stock, it pays to have purebred ducks and geese.

• • •

Good alfalfa seed is now very scarce and commands a high price on the market.

• • •

Leaves are especially valuable when barnyard manure is scarce and hard to obtain.

• • •

Crimson clover does not succeed unless either the seed or the ground is inoculated.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Teacher of English Bible in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1920, Western Newspaper Union)

LESSON FOR FEBRUARY 1

PETER AND JOHN IN SAMARIA.

(May be used with missionary applications.)

LESSON TEXT—Acts 8:4-25.

GOLDEN TEXT—Ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth.—Acts 1:8.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL—II Kings 17:24-31; Luke 10:33-35; John 4:1-42.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Telling Others About Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Peter and John in a Strange City.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Three Missionaries and Their Triumphs.

I. Preaching the Word Everywhere (v. 4).

After the stoning of Stephen the enemies of the Lord were more active than ever in their efforts to stamp out the new faith. With Saul as their leader they rushed back to the city, dragged from their homes and imprisoned those who confessed Christ. In this the devil overreached himself, for the believers took flight and went everywhere preaching the word. The time had come for the witness-bearing to extend beyond Jerusalem and Judea. Preaching was not confined to the twelve. The Lord thus makes the devil's wickedness to further his own purpose. Frequently, in the hour of trial, Christians see more clearly their duty and bestir themselves to perform it. If Christians will not move on, the Lord will shove them on.

II. Philip Preaching the Gospel in Samaria. (vv. 5-13).

Hitherto the gospel had reached only Jews; now its scope broadens and a Jew is preaching to Samaritans, and Samaritans are rejoicing in the gospel of Christ proclaimed by a Jew. His preaching was fruitful for multitudes believed his message. Much joy in this Samaritan city followed the reception of the message. Both Samaritans and Jews were looking for Christ, so they were glad to know that the Christ had come. Christ is the one name and person who will break down race prejudice. In him there is unity and real brotherhood, for he is the universal man. The only hope of the world is Christ.

So great was Philip's success that Simon Magnus professed faith and was baptized. Simon was a sorcerer who by magical devices had made a great reputation, gaining control of many of the credulous and ignorant, so that they regarded him as some great one from God (v. 10). The people turned from this sorcerer to the gospel of Christ.

III. Peter and John Sent to Samaria (vv. 14-17).

The church at Jerusalem sent two of its best men to encourage the work. They discerned that the Spirit had not yet fallen upon the believers, so they laid hands upon them and the Spirit was given unto them. These Samaritans were really converted, regenerated, but had not yet been filled with the Spirit's gift. Believers should seek the Spirit's gift at once, for this will exclude the interests of the world. The mission of Peter and John shows the unity of the church—the mother church gave sanction to the new work in Samaria. Much of the work of the modern evangelist is a failure because it is not properly followed up by those who will instruct and bring the converts into relationship with the living church.

IV. Simon's Wicked Request (vv. 18-24).

When Simon saw that the power of Peter exceeded that which he possessed and that it was received through the laying on of hands, he offered money for the gift. This act reveals the hypocrisy of this man. He professed faith and was baptized, following after them for a selfish end. To desire and seek the gift of the Spirit for selfish aggrandizement is to be guilty of Simon's sin. All traffic in sacred things has been called "Simony," from the name of this sorcerer. Peter told Simon that he had neither part nor lot in this matter, that he should repent of his wickedness and pray to God for forgiveness. He requested Peter to pray for him.

Simon practiced the art of sorcery for gain and influence. Now that he found his profits diminishing and his influence waning, he endeavored to acquire new power. All persons who use their religion to further their ambitions to get gain are guilty of this sin. Sometimes men join the church for business, social, and political reasons; sometimes official positions are coveted for the prestige and power they give. Let all who are using the name of the church for business purposes be warned by Peter's rebuke! Let Simon's doom be a solemn warning to all!

The Goal.

The goal on which our eyes must be set is a church that will, in its own corporate life, conspicuously express the Christian ideal of fellowship and brotherhood, and at the same time strive persistently to mold national, industrial and social life in accordance with the principles which are the fountain light of all its days.

Delight in God's Work.

All great art is the expression of man's delight in God's work, not in his own.—Ruskin.

INDIANA FOLKS

Testify About Coughs, Colds, Lungs

Fort Wayne, Ind.—"At one time through exposure at the breaking up of a hard winter I caught a severe cold, which settled on my lungs. This caused me to cough continually. It was so bad I had very little rest day or night; could not sleep. Just about the time I would get to sleep I would have a severe fit of coughing. I soon began losing weight and grew weak. I kept getting worse all the time, until I was a walking skeleton. Three bottles of the 'Discovery' completely cured me of my cough, and much to my surprise my heart trouble as well. I am sure I owe my life to the use of the 'Golden Medical Discovery.'"—George F Aichele, 68 Portage Ave.

Goshen, Ind.—"It is now about fifteen years since I had a wonderful demonstration with Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. I had coughed night and day for a whole year and had lost so much flesh I began to look like a walking skeleton. Two of my sisters had died with tuberculosis and I felt certain that my time had come, too. A friend recommended Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery to my husband, and it gave new strength and vitality right from the start, and in a year's time I was just as strong and hardy as ever."—Mrs. Eliza Teeter, 415 Middlebury St.

Muncie, Ind.—"When I had a severe cough, night sweats, loss of weight and appetite and the other things that lead to consumption, I was induced to try Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. I took it faithfully for about forty days and gradually I gained; the cough disappeared and I put on flesh and got strong again. I took no other medicine at the time. I have had no cough for 14 years, since I was cured by 'Golden Medical Discovery.'"—Mrs. Lucy McCoy, 512 E. Howard Street.

Dried Snow.

Little Mary Louise saw snowflakes falling and said to her mother, "Let's hurry and put up our Christmas decorations, it's Chrismas." In a little while she went outside to play, but soon returned to the house, for the air was so cold. Her mother noticed something that looked like clay on her shoe, and said to her:

"What is that on your shoe, dear?"

"The snow dried on there," answered the five-year-old.

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and ¼ oz. of glycerine. Apply to the hair twice a week until it becomes the desired shade. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. It will gradually darken streaked, faded, gray hair, and will make harsh hair soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off.—Adv.

"Heavy strains on my back and being exposed to all kinds of weather, weakened my kidneys," says John S. Shelton of St. Charles, Mo. "The misery in my back was constant and I had to get up several times during the night to pass the kidney secretions. I got no rest night or day and lost twenty-two pounds in weight. My eyes burned as if there were fire in them. I also had dizzy spells and would feel as if I were going to pitch forward. Sharp catches would take me in my back as if someone were driving a sharp knife into my back. My kidneys were so weak I had no control over them and the secretions were scanty and burned in passage. I had pains in my bladder too. I was discouraged. I tried different remedies but received no benefit. I was advised to use Doan's Kidney Pills and when I did so I was soon relieved of my misery. Doan's cured me."

BELL-ANS FOR INDIGESTION

Diamond Cut Diamond

By JANE BUNKER

CHAPTER XII.
—12—
The Capture.

That night nothing happened—at least to me; but somehow the periods when nothing happened were more alarming than when he was boldly attacking. You may imagine, if you can, what I went through on Saturday! My one diversion was to rehide the diamonds. This time—after I had taken them out of the hyacinths and poked a thimble among the stems—I sealed them in an envelope and thumb-tacked it to the bottom of a sideboard drawer. The drawers sledded in and out on runners deep enough to allow the envelope to pass. All day long I kept thinking, "What will happen if monsieur doesn't take the bait?" It seems strange to me now, but I never once asked myself, "What will happen if he does?"

The last half hour before Billy came was positively the longest in my life, and when the bell did finally ring I was shot through the heart and ready to die.

I came to life immediately, whispered through the door, "Who's there?" and heard, "Ann Preswick"—the password we'd agreed on.

"Then he hasn't killed you!" were my first words.

"Who? Your 'mossoo?' No—I killed him on the stairs last night—or pretty near!"

I didn't see why Billy should bestow the proprietorship on me—he wasn't my "mossoo," as I reminded Billy while he was pulling a pair of handcuffs out of his overcoat pocket.

"A mere detail," he returned. "He will be your own in an hour." He flung off his coat. "Where do we hide these togs?"

"My wardrobe. . . . But he won't come."

"Oh, yes, he will—he told me so."

I thought Billy was joking and made no reply.

"Very interesting man," mused Billy. "Not at all the sort of person you'd expect to find in a diamond robbery. Wonderful knowledge of European politics—and American politics, too."

"Billy, what do you mean?" I demanded.

"Why, I took your 'mossoo' home to his hotel last night—and—"

"You didn't!" I gasped.

"Of course I did! Why not? You don't suppose I'd go off and leave him here to murder you, do you?" Billy was making the most out of his story, I could see.

"But — how — did — you — manage—it?" I was still gasping.

"I didn't. He did. He wasn't going to give himself away by going upstairs; he said he was going down. So we went down together, and I kept talking to him. When we got to the street we just kept on till I'd seen him home. We were thick as thieves by that time. I invited him to see Chinatown tonight and he accepted—"

"Billy! You never—"

"Yes, I did! And it's how I know he's coming tonight—see? I went round this morning in time for the first mail. He was waiting for it. Oh, he got the letter all right! And as soon as he read it he came over and told me he couldn't go to Chinatown tonight—he had diplomatic business that might take him to Washington—which means here. See?"

"Billy, you're the cleverest thing I ever saw!" I cried with real admiration.

"Thanks—coming from you I appreciate that." He said it in an offhand way, but I could see he was feeling very set up over himself. And I didn't blame him. He added, "What the 'mossoo' was really after—why he wouldn't let me go out in the dark alone—was to know who I was calling on. I told him it was the people in the front flat and I couldn't get in. I told him it was their cousin from Boston I was calling on and maybe they'd gone to the theater. That led to our talking about plays; that led to an inspiration of genius and I asked him if he'd seen Chinatown; that led to my invitation and—the rest you know."

"Billy, you are positively the cleverest man I know!"

"Didn't think I'd grow up like that, did you? And that's not all. As for the pretty daughter—your little Claire that you think so much of—don't faint now—well, she's in it up to the neck and over her ears. She's his accomplice, all right. Here's her cable message—" He drew out a bit of paper on which he'd copied it and read:

"Born a girl. Mother and child doing well. CLAIRE."

"But this is—this isn't—" I stammered.

"Quite so," agreed Billy. "It is and it isn't! It is a code. It isn't a piece of insanity. I've read it—or I think I have. Listen now: 'Born'—the precious thing that was expected has come to pass successfully; that is, 'the diamonds have arrived safe and sound.'"

He glanced at me for approval and then puckered up his brow while admitting. "This next—'a girl'—puzzles me a bit. It's one of three things: just a filler, to make it read; or a code word with an agreed meaning; or it refers to Mrs. Delario—that is, she still has the diamonds—she hasn't passed them on to some man. But let that go. The next is too easy—'mother'—the owner, of course; 'child'—the precious things; 'doing well'—got through the customs without being separated. Plain as day—and when you and Mrs. Delario stepped out of the cable office your dear 'mossoo' stepped in and read it."

"Poor little Claire!"

"Poor yourself!" snorted Billy. "You don't need to waste any pain and tears on that outfit. They're slick. Well, let's to work—'mossoo' is downstairs anxiously waiting for you to go out."

"How do you know?"

"Shadowed him. . . . My revolvers all right? And the red pepper?"

"Yes—but I've been thinking about that pepper and how about ammonia instead?"

"H'm-m," considered Billy. "What's the advantage?"

"It wears off quicker, and I think it's probably safer for us if he struggles and we have to hold him down."

"Guess it is," Billy agreed. "Got it ready?"

I took him to the kitchen and showed him half a glass of household ammonia diluted with water and covered with a saucer. Then I hung his coat and hat in my wardrobe. After that he looked at me and I looked at him—the fatal moment had arrived.

"Well?" said Billy. I seemed to know he'd say "well."

"Well?" I repeated after him, trying to pretend to myself I didn't know what he meant.

Billy glanced at the clock. "Your 'mossoo' is wondering why you don't come. By the way—there wasn't a soul in the lower hall when I sneaked in—he's sent his man off for fear you won't leave."

My knees were shaking under me. I was sure Billy knew it, but he affected not to notice. He took one of the revolvers and inserted a blank cartridge for the first shot, explaining that we couldn't have an omelet without breaking eggs. I was to jump out of my bedroom and fire this as soon as monsieur reached the dining room.

"I calculate we'll have him now in about fifteen minutes," was Billy's delicate hint to me to go on with my part, and with knees ready to close up under me like jackknives I rang for George.

I must say that George acquitted himself very creditably—as a spy. Instead of his usual inquisitive "Goin' to be out all the evening?" he put it in this way: "If somebody calls when shall I tell 'em you'll be home?"

"Tell them I won't be home—say I'm out for the evening." I returned promptly; and George's face wore the satisfied expression of a well-earned five-dollar bill.

By the time we reached the second floor Billy was ringing furiously from the sixth—this was to get George out of the way at once so I could slip upstairs—and when we reached the first the luck that is said to favor naturalborn idiots and such turned a trick for me by fetching little Mrs. Thingdown-stairs slithering along the hall.

"Tell Them I Won't Be Home."

She darted past me into the car, almost knocking me over in her desire to keep George from opening the front door for me, and she made sure of my defeat by uttering an acid, "Take me up immejetly." For which rudeness I have ever blessed her! In ten seconds I had gone along the hall to the front door, retraced my steps, and—thanks to her—was gliding up the stairs in her wake like a ghost. In less than two minutes from the time she trampled me under her feet I was safe in my own flat.

Whether Billy and I had five minutes or fifty to wait now we did not know, but we took it for granted that we should have the shortest possible time in which George could deliver the news of my departure "for the evening"—and monsieur could creep upstairs, unseen by his all-seeing spy. We therefore took our prearranged places.

The flat was almost dark. One low gas jet lighted the dining room and showed the hyacinths on the table—so monsieur could see the moment he entered the front door; a low light in the bathroom showed at a glance through the half-open door that nobody lurked within. The door to my bedroom stood flat against the wall; the kitchen door nearly so, and behind it Billy, jammed in between the refrigerator and the set tubs, was completely concealed unless one entered the room. A low light burned here, sufficient to show the room's apparent emptiness. We calculated that monsieur would make a dash for the fire escape when I shot off the blank cartridge from my bedroom and Billy was then to greet him with the ammonia.

In my own room I stood pressed against the wall just inside the doorway. In my right hand was the revolver.

Neither Billy nor I uttered a sound. The little metal clock echoed along the hall, horribly loud. It chimed the half after seven. I counted ticks—one minute gone. I counted and thought of hundreds of things I meant to do, or had forgotten to do, all the while counting mechanically. Three minutes gone—four—five—

A key slipped quickly, boldly, regardless of the noise it made—my lock! No—it couldn't be! The lock turned. A quick illumination filled my hall from the gas jet outside and was gone almost before I had realized it. The door closed. My heart jumped out and ran about the floor and tried to hide under the bureau.

I remember thinking, "Suppose it doesn't come back but stays away? Then poor Billy's done for—I can't move a muscle without my heart!" And all the time I was thinking these idiotic things, I heard the cautious indomitable pad, pad, pad of whispered footsteps. They paused at the bedroom door for a glance within—nothing there; paused at the bathroom door—nothing in there; paused at the kitchen door—nothing in there; then made for the table.

The light blazed up in the dining room and my heart came back with a plop. Monsieur had turned up the light in order to remove the diamonds and leave me to discover it, as it might chance—tomorrow or a week from tomorrow.

With the light, all my fear left suddenly. I popped out of the bedroom—saw monsieur with the hyacinths in his hand—fired the blank cartridge and yelled, "Hands up!" and stood facing him and between him and the door with a smoking revolver in my hand.

He said, "Mon Dieu!"—took in the situation—and bolted for the fire escape—got a smashing blow from the kitchen door as Billy jumped from behind it and then half a glass of ammonia in the face. Two seconds later we three were a writhing strangling heap on the floor.

The next thing I remember, I was sitting on monsieur amidships and Billy was snapping a handcuff. I gasped and rolled off on the floor; picked myself up from the inelegant position by way of my hands and knees, got a wet towel and sopped monsieur's face as fast as I could—though why I performed this humane act so quickly, I can't say; and as soon as he stopped strangling—for a lot of the ammonia had gone into his mouth and very little in his eyes—Billy and I dragged him to the dining room, propped him against the sideboard and opened a window.

I believe that none of the three of us uttered a word during the entire performance—Billy says he can't remember any; but one of the strangest things was that the firing of the revolver elicited no investigation from the populous house. All this might have happened in the center of Laramie plains in a snowstorm the day after the fall roundup for the amount of notice man or beast took of it.

It was a faultless achievement.

And now we had monsieur—we had captured him, as Billy said we should, all by our little own selves. He and I silently regarded the crumply creature sitting against the sideboard and then for the first time the idea came into our heads, "And now that we've got him, what are we going to do with him?"

I looked at Billy and he looked at me. We asked each other the question with our eyes. As for monsieur, his fears had swallowed up his chagrin at the indignities heaped upon him. Strange as it may seem, he was the first of the three that found his voice.

"Zere has been a great mistake," he began, to which Billy retorted:

"It looks that way."

"Ah—c'est vous!" breathed monsieur, suddenly recognizing Billy.

"Of course. Who did you think it was?" returned Billy with a tang of pertness, for which he might on that occasion be forgiven.

Monsieur repaid it by ignoring him and addressing himself to me.

"If madame will permit me a chair and allow me to explain—I"

We couldn't very well refuse him that—particularly as we didn't know what to do with him anyway—so we helped him to a chair and when we'd set him in it, I took my turn to remark severely: "There's not much to explain. You were caught in the act of breaking and entering my flat—you may make your explanations to the police. We'll have them here in five minutes." That was a fine shot on my part, I felt.

Monsieur's face proved it. "Madame!" he cried. "Ze police—no! For your own sake—for ze avoidance of ze scandal. Madame, you totally misunderstand ze so strange situation—"

"It certainly is," commented Billy.

—"in which I am place. But I can explain all—everysing—why I am here. I have se absolute proof zat madame has ze—se jewels of my daughter—which do not belong to madame—in her apartment."

Billy and I couldn't help smiling at this and monsieur seemed astonished. I sneered, "Indeed?" in the way that always set him on edge.

"Oui—yes—madame. I have ze proof in your own words."

I gave him another "Indeed?" in the same tone. This was the moment I had been waiting for. I slipped a paper out from under a pile on the table—the carbon copy of the decoy letter.

"Is that it?" I sweetly asked, showing it to him. "Yes—I thought so. . . . And is this it, too?" I handed him the copy of the decoy letter supposed to be from Mrs. Delario to himself. After that I said: "Really, monsieur," in an amused tone, and Billy waved his hand toward the typewriter and informed him blandly, "Homemade cake. Written here last evening just before I had the pleasure of making your acquaintance on the stairs. Mailed by me after I saw you to your hotel."

"Madame, You Are a Brave Woman."

The poor man looked from one to the other of us—and actually I did feel sorry for him! He stammered: "I cannot understand—I recognize ze writing of Madame Delario—" He was silent a moment and then light seemed suddenly to break on him and he launched an ultimatum of accusation at me: "If madame did not have se stones—if she has not seen se stones—how could she refer to zem? How could she have composed zis—to deceive me?" He nodded in a way that said: "Now answer that—if you can."

I had expected some such question and I was ready. "That's too simple," I assured him. "You remember you accused me of stealing jewels from your daughter; therefore I knew what you were after."

"But zis word 'gum-drops'—it refers most evidently to unset jewels—"

"Oh, I put that in," Billy interrupted. "It doesn't mean anything but what you make it mean. See?" He spoke in a tone that said: "You're giving yourself away."

Monsieur ignored him and looked at me as if expecting me to continue my explanation.

"The hyacinths," I went on—they lay, a draggled bunch on the floor, "you overlooked them in your search—it was the one thing you did not open, that bunch, so I knew you'd remember it when I called your attention to it. You see, monsieur," I added, "I knew you would remember the one thing you'd overlooked"—he bowed and a faint smile flitted across his face at the compliment I was paying his intelligence—"and come back to investigate—if you had the chance. I gave you the chance, that was all."

"But how do you know zat I can come back so easily as zat?" he asked, partly puzzled and partly to draw me out.

"You had a pass-key to the flat—you opened the door with it the other night and I stood behind it while you were working at the chain-bolt. I saw your hand—"

"And you said nossing—you do not scream when you see a man try to get into your apartment in se middle of se night?" he interrupted, his tone a mixture of incredulity and—I hope I'll be forgiven the apparent conceit—admiration for my bravery.

"Why should I say anything—or scream? I knew you couldn't get in, so what was there to be scared over?"

He smiled them for the first time and said: "Madame, you are a brave woman."

HEAD STUFFED FROM CATARRH OR A COLD

Says Cream Applied in Nostrils Opens Air Passages Right Up.

Instant relief—no waiting. Your clogged nostrils open right up; the air passages of your head clear and you can breathe freely. No more hawking, snuffing, blowing, headache, dryness. No struggling for breath at night; your cold or catarrh disappears.

Get a small bottle of Ely's Cream Balm from your druggist now. Apply a little of this fragrant, antiseptic, healing cream in your nostrils. It penetrates through every air passage of the head, soothes the inflamed or swollen mucous membrane and relief comes instantly.

It's just fine. Don't stay stuffed up with a cold or nasty catarrh.—Adv.

BOSCHEE'S SYRUP.

A cold is probably the most common of all disorders and when neglected is apt to be most dangerous. Statistics show that more than three times as many people died from influenza last year, as were killed in the greatest war the world has ever known. For the last fifty-three years Boschee's Syrup has been used for coughs, bronchitis, colds, throat irritation and especially lung troubles. It gives the patient a good night's rest, free from coughing, with easy expectoration in the morning. Made in America and used in the homes of thousands of families all over the civilized world. Sold everywhere.—Adv.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Water.

Water is a wondrous blessing,
Good for making seas and lakes;
It would bring ten bucks per gallon,
If it made a guy see snakes.

Water is a wondrous blessing,
Good for skating when its froze,
But no good for decorating,
It won't color up a nose.

Water is a wondrous blessing,
Good for people when they're sick;
It would be our greatest treasure
If it only had a kick.

Harvest 20 to 45 Bushel to Acre Wheat in WESTERN CANADA

Think what that means to you in good hard dollars with the great demand for wheat at high prices. Many farmers in Western Canada have paid for their land from a single crop. The same success may still be yours, for you can buy on easy terms.

Farm Land at $15 to $30 an Acre located near thriving towns, good markets, railways—land of a kind which grows 20 to 45 bushels of wheat to the acre. Good grazing lands at low prices convenient to your grain farm enable you to reap the profits from stock raising and dairying.

FATES ATTEND BABY'S BIRTH

Peculiar Superstition That Has Strong Hold on the Poorer Classes of Greece.

Almost every nation has some particular superstition or belief about babies, and these result in actions which vary all the way from the utterly absurd to the terrible tragic. The peasantry of Greece firmly believe that the future of every child is determined by three fates, known as the Moral. In the popular mind these fates are three old women, whose habitation is a mountain cave and they come together to a house where there is a new-born child. In preparation for them, all furniture is set aside, that their tottering footsteps may not be impeded, and refreshments in the shape of honey, bread, cakes and wine are set out for these important though invisible guests. Money, too, is placed on the table, as a bribe, for it is believed that in the gift of these fates are all good things as well as bad. Under no circumstances must a child's beauty be alluded to while the Moral may be in the house, or they will certainly make its good looks disappear.

THEATER'S "GOOD OLD DAYS"

Example of Rough-and-Ready Methods of Stock Companies of the Olden Time.

David Belasco said at a theatrical supper in New York:

"I hear a lot of praise bestowed on the old stock companies. Well, the old stock companies were all right in their rough-and-ready way. They'd hardly go down with us nowadays.

"Once in the '80's I dropped in at a stock performance in a western town. The company had a score of plays in its repertoire, and this play I had dropped in on went very raggedly.

"In the third act climax the hero forgot his part, and after an embarrassing silence of about two minutes hissed audibly to the prompter:

"'What's the line?'

"'What's the play?' the prompter hissed back from his little box, as he grabbed up a stack of two or three dozen books and began to run through them feverishly."

INTERESTING EXPERIMENT WITH PASTURE CROPS FOR PRODUCING WOOL AND MUTTON

Sheep Relish Frequent Change of Fresh Forage Crops.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The old dictum of making two blades of grass to prosper where one formerly succumbed has been applied to sheep farming in an experiment conducted by specialists of the United States department of agriculture. A field of 80 acres has been used exclusively during the past four seasons, for producing forage crops to be harvested by sheep. The field is divided into ten plats, and during the recent season every portion grew at least two different crops, while on some of the unit areas three crops were grown and grazed.

Oats and Peas Follow Wheat.

Fall-sown wheat provided the earliest available pasturage in the spring, and after this was exhausted the sheep were shifted to an early spring sowing of oats and peas. Thence they moved to another tract of oats and peas, which they grazed luxuriantly and well until the supply of green stuff was curtailed, when they were transferred to alfalfa and rape pasturage. This medley mixture of green feed furnished good grazing until about the middle of July, when the soy beans were available for pasture purposes.

As a consequence of the intensive utilization of pasture crops for mutton and wool production, this field of 80 acres furnished sufficient feed for 70 ewes and 60 lambs for a 200-day period. The best grazing resulted from a patch of three acres of soy beans, which carried 60 sheep for 30 days with satisfactory results. The system of management followed was to move the lambs and, as far as possible, the old ewes at regular intervals of not less than two weeks from one patch of green feed to another. This practice of moving the sheep frequently to fresh ground, as well as the plan of plowing the land for the subsequent crop, eliminated the danger of loss from stomach worms.

Although the system requires some extra preparation of the land and seeding, as well as shifting of the sheep from one plat to another and providing plenty of water for the mutton makers, it nevertheless, is believed worthy of trial, especially in sections of high-priced farming land where a maximum return must be realized from every acre used.

The Results Applied.

On the basis of the results in this experiment a flock of 200 breeding ewes would require 80 acres of forage crops. It would require the services of two men and one team to produce 80 acres of forage crops, in addition to caring for the sheep. Winter feed for such a flock, together, together with that for horses, would require 35 acres of similar land, making a total of 115 acres of farm land necessary for the maintenance of a 200-ewe flock under this system. On the basis of the 1919 market prices, the gross income from a reasonably well-managed ewe flock handled in this way would be about $3,000. This figure represents the return of the ewes on 115 acres of land and a year's work of two men and four horses.

There would be a higher expense for seed than in ordinary farming, but the amount of labor required and its distribution throughout the year would afford a very marked advantage in favor of sheep farming as compared with other agricultural activities producing an equal revenue.

HOG STYLES CHANGED IN SOUTHERN STATES

Apparent Aim Is to Expedite Growth in Best Type.

Farmer Should Not Be Influenced by Fads or Fancies in Selecting and Maintaining Breeding Stock—No Best Breed.

South of the Mason and Dixon line hog styles are changing, the underlying idea apparently being to eliminate extravagance, to effect intensive economy, to expedite growth in the most profitable types of porkers, to amalgamate, as soon as possible, the good points of the most profitable producers and to concentrate them in the majority of southern herds.

It is undeniable that some breeds of swine do better under certain conditions and with certain feeds and methods of feeding than do others, although there is no outstanding breed which excels, report specialists of the United States department of agriculture. No fads and fancies should influence the farmer in selecting or maintaining foundation breeding stock. Primarily the farmer breeds hogs for profit and accordingly he should work only with utility animals of the most desirable type.

In every breed of hogs there are certain lines of breeding that are deservedly popular because they have been built through generations of careful selection by master breeders who have been successful in establishing the more fundamental qualities. The farmer should keep these facts in mind and should continue such improvement by close culling and proper feeding. The farmer's popular hog should be of a breed that is liked by both feeders and packers, animals that are adapted to all sections of the country and which will thrive and fatten on a large variety of feeds. It is essential that such porkers produce the maximum weight at the minimum cost; that they mature early to the greatest weight consistent with quality and that they inherit the ability to produce an abundance of frame and to make rapid growth.

Broad, high backs with good spring of ribs and full, deep hams denote carrying ability and high-priced cuts. Good strong feet and heavy bone are essential for the support and production of great weight. Long, deep and roomy bodies denote prolific qualities and plenty of pork. Deep chests and bright, open eyes are signs of vigor and energy. Size spells more meat for the hungry world and more money for the southern hog producers who raise and market animals of the type described above.

WINTER WORK FOR FARMERS

Wood Cutting in Cool Weather Does Not Interfere With Field Crop Operations.

Farmers, as a rule, have too much to do at certain times of the year and not enough at others. Many farms are unprofitable because their owners have little or nothing planned for winter. Wood cutting can be done at any time, but cool weather favors the rate of production, and in the winter the work does not conflict with that on regular field crops. If cut in winter logs are not subject to rapid drying, nor to deep checking at the ends of the logs, which often occurs in summer-cut logs and appreciably reduces their sale value.

Because of injury from the southern pine bark beetle in the hot season, it is practically necessary to cut pine in the fall and winter months. Damage and loss in summer often come from wood-rotting fungi, including the "bluing" and other staining of wood. For these reasons a good many farmers turn profitably to logging and sawmilling for a few fall or winter months each year. Nearly every kind of wood product can be satisfactorily handled in winter, according to the forest service of the United States department of agriculture.

BEEKEEPERS GO TO SCHOOL

Short Courses Are Now Being Conducted in Several Western States—Others to Follow.

The beekeepers of several states which boast of large honey production are going back to school. Under the direction of representatives of the United States department of agriculture short courses for commercial beekeepers are now being conducted in Idaho, Washington, California and Texas. During the first two months of the new year similar instruction will be given in Ohio, Kansas, Iowa, Minnesota and New York. There is particular need this season that owners of apiaries have all possible assistance because the shortage of sugar promises to make it difficult to carry the swarms through the winter.

U. S. OUGHT TO LOOK AHEAD

Country Could Well Afford Hard-Surfaced System of 50,000 Miles—An Economic Asset.

It is possible to build a hard-surfaced highway system of 50,000 miles so located as to serve directly 46 per cent of all the counties of the United States and indirectly 41 per cent of all the others. For an annual expenditure of $100,000,000—hardly $1 a person per year—this fundamental road system could be completed in twelve and a half years, and it would serve 87 per cent of the total population of the United States. Such is the statement of the United States department of labor.

Hard-Surfaced Roads Facilitate Movement of Motortrucks Handling Traffic Railroads Cannot Accommodate.

"The growing needs of the country demand that some such comprehensive highway system be constructed," says Robert F. Black, Chicago manager of a large motortruck concern.

"In the past there has been too great a lack of foresight on the part of the road builders. They have lacked vision to foresee the requirements of even five years ahend. A road built today must be built, not with the iden of present traffic but that of ten years in the future.

"The growing need of the day is for transportation. We have simply got to provide it. We cannot stop it and the sentiment of the country will not tolerate any handicap of our transportation system.

"With each year the railroads are becoming more and more inadequate. Motor transportation is a growing economical necessity, a fact that is being recognized more and more each day as motortrucks are called upon to handle traffic that the railroads cannot accommodate.

"Estimates prepared by engineering authorities show that the United States could afford to spend $1,250,000,000 on a hard-surfaced road system of 50,000 miles which would serve directly and indirectly 87 per cent of the population of the entire country. Not only would such a system be an economic asset that would pay for itself many times over, but its construction would provide work for many thousands of people for a number of years, and in that respect alone would have great business value to the country in general.

"War increases business to replace the great losses of destruction; but the development of a nation in times of peace provides a more normal and healthy market for labor and material that can be made a stabilizer of business and industrial conditions.

"A well planned national highway system is a necessity, and as soon as the nation can complete the plan conditions will force putting it into operation."

EARTH ROAD IS SERVICEABLE

Meets Requirements Fairly Well When Properly Crowned, Drained and Maintained.

When properly crowned, drained, and maintained with the split-log drag or other similar device, the earth road, on all but a few exceptional soils or in a few places immediately around the farm lots and buildings, can be made to answer the requirements fairly well.

ADVANTAGES OF GOOD ROADS

They Mark Degree of Civilization in Community and Add to Value of Farm Lands.

Good roads promise self respect in a community. They make possible social intercourse. They bring the benefits of churches and schools within the reach of all. They help to keep the boys on the farm. They cheapen the cost of transportation of farm products to the markets and thus add to the farm profits.

Hoosier State Happenings

Shelbyville.—Ray Jones, near Waldron, Shelby county, has sold 33 head of beef cattle to Charles P. Sindlinger of this city for $6,000. The total weight was 40,000 pounds.

Terre Haute.—J. A. Van Osdol of Anderson was elected president of the Indiana State Chamber of Commerce here at the closing session of the annual meeting of the organization.

Jeffersonville.—A statistical statement prepared by Thomas L. Stoner, Clark county auditor, shows that only two and one-half miles of free gravel road were completed and accepted in the county in 1919.

South Bend.—Increase of salaries of 300 school-teachers in South Bend was refused by the board of school trustees, announcement to this effect following a conference held by the board with a teachers' committee. The teachers requested a 25 per cent increase.

Greensburg.—D. M. Blackmore has sold a farm of 160 acres three miles northeast of here to Henry Brown for $38,000. Henry Brown has sold a farm of 95 acres four miles west of here to William Christian of Milford for $28,500, or $300 an acre, the highest price ever paid for land in this county.

Princeton.—The Gibson county five-acre corn contest awards have been made by the Gibson County Farmers' association. Samuel Williams, Princeton, won the silver medal with 86.65 bushels to the acre; and Curtis Callis, Fort Branch, was second, getting a bronze medal, with 78.27 bushels to the acre.

Bloomington.—Miss Marietta Sicer of New Albany, a junior at Indiana university, received first place in the William J. Bryan oratorical contest in the closing exercises of the centennial celebration of the founding of the institution. It was the first time that a woman has won the prize, which is the interest on $500 for one year left in 1898 to the university.

Indianapolis.—Ed Jackson of Lafayette formally took over the duties of the office of secretary of state, following the acceptance of the appointment to fill the unexpired term of William A. Roach, who died recently. Governor Goodrich presented Mr. Jackson with his commission and the oath of office was administered by Patrick J. Lynch, clerk of the supreme and appellate courts.

Lafayette.— According to figures just compiled, Lafayette is particularly well off, judging by the per capita bank deposits of the community, which show that for every man, woman and child of census age in the city and West Lafayette, including the several thousands students at Purdue university, there is $596 in local bank deposits. The total deposits in local banks is $17,287,000.

Evansville.—In refusing a petition of the schoolteachers of the city, organized as a federation, for the right of a federation advisory council to meet with the Evansville school board, members of the board said that they did not recognize the "so-called federation and could not afford to recognize collective bargaining." They said, however, that the board will meet a committee of teachers, as teachers, at any time.

Fort Wayne.—Worry over a deal in real estate is believed to have caused William Spindler, aged seventy, to kill his son, his son's wife and their three children and end his own life at the Spindler home at Harlan, east of Fort Wayne. The bodies were found by Mrs. John Werts, a daughter of Spindler, who became alarmed at the nonappearance of the family and, with neighbors, broke the lock on the Spindler home and found the bodies.

Jeffersonville.—With the population of the institution standing about 700, 39 inmates of the Indiana reformatory received paroles by the board of trustees out of 85 eligibles who had a hearing. The number paroled would indicate an average sentence of two years served by the inmates. In addition, the cases of nine inmates who had been transferred to the state prison at Michigan City, were considered and eight of them were paroled.

Indianapolis.—J. Fred Masters, attorney for the Indiana Transfer and Warehousemen's association, caused an affidavit to be filed against William Frye of the Frye Transfer company, charging him with refusing to procure his 1920 truck license, thereby putting up the first definite opposition to the state law requiring motortrucks to be taxed in proportion to their capacity. Judge Walter Pritchard of the city court will hear a motion to quash the affidavit. The affidavit was filed to test the law.

Ft. Wayne.— Rotarians from all parts of Indiana will be here February 11 and 12 to attend the eleventh Rotary club district conference, which includes all of the state. Ft. Wayne is preparing to entertain more than 2,000 delegates and their wives.

Goshen.—Edward McClure of Aurora was elected master of the Indiana state grange at a session of the annual meeting of that organization at Nappanee. He succeeds L. H. Wright of Indianapolis, who was head of the grange for six years and refused to be a candidate for the office at this convention.

Gary.—The city of Gary in 1919 collected from all sources $1,442,935.24, and spent $1,427,065.48, leaving a balance of $15,869.76 in the treasury at the end of the year.

Brazil.—A ban on kissing and on "political" handshakes is suggested by Dr. George W. Finley, county commissioner of health, as a preventive against the spread of influenza.

Terre Haute.—Announcement was made at the headquarters here of the Woman's Franchise League of Indiana that the annual convention of the organization will be held at Indianapolis April 6, 7 and 8.

Brazil.—The city council has passed a resolution calling for the building of a new city hall at once, to cost approximately $80,000, and to include the city office, fire department, restrooms and a large auditorium seating 1,200.

Muncie.—Local laundries have appealed to the government employment agency here for girls for laundry work, saying that because of the high wages being offered for women's work in the factories girls have deserted the laundries and crippled the operating forces.

Columbia City.—Peter Schmitt and son, Henry Schmitt, sold farm produce, farm implements and animals for $4,120, at a sale near here, and when the clerk left the farm he had cash or a check for every article sold. It is said to be the first sale in Whitley county where every purchase was settled without a sale note.

Noblesville.—Farmers in central Indiana are not favorably impressed with the wheat outlook for 1920. They say wheat which was sowed early was damaged by the fly and they fear that this damge has been such that the wheat will not recover. Wheat planted late is in fair condition, but none of the grain, so farmers say, is in first-class condition.

Gary.—Representatives of the Lake County Medical society and the Lake County Anti-Tuberculosis association are collaborating with the board of county commissioners in preparing plans for the proposed new county tuberculosis sanatorium, which will be built this year on a site of 73 acres of land one mile north of Crown Point.

Indianapolis.—In an effort to prevent another epidemic of Spanish influenza such as swept Indiana last year, the state board of health has instituted a plan of checking up the number of cases of the disease prevailing weekly throughout Indiana. Frank cards have been sent out to all health officers throughout the state with blank spaces after the name of the disease to be filled out by the various officers.

Indianapolis.—The state board of accounts' report of the public service commission for the year 1919, filed in the office of the auditor of state, shows that all the transactions and expenditures of the commission were regular. The expenditures for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1919, amounted to $133,708.03 and $143.20 of the commission funds reverted to the general fund.

Wabash.—A freight embargo on everything with the exception of live stock and perishable products was placed in effect in this city on the Big Four and Wabash railroads the past week, and officials said that the embargo either had or would be extended to cover every railroad in Indiana, Illinois and Ohio. Some parts of Missouri and Kentucky are also included in the states on which the shipping ban has been placed.

Evansville.—Farm laborers on rural route No. 8 in Perry township, Vanderburg county, have organized a union and made application to the American Federation of Labor for a charter. As soon as it arrives the organization will be completed and will be known as the Farm Hands' union. The union will seek to regulate wages and hours of work. This is the first instance in Indiana where a farm laborers' union has been organized.

Shelbyville.—Engineers, who have completed an investigation, report that immense power can be derived from the Flat Rock river, south of this city, and that harnessing this great power would be a profitable investment. It is estimated that the project will cost more than $300,000. About 800 acres of flood rights would have to be bought to form a lake of about fifteen miles of water front. A thirty-seven-foot dam and a thirty-two-foot wall would have to be constructed.

Rushville.—At a meeting of farmers or eight counties in this part of the state, forming the Eighth district of the Indiana Federation of Farmers' Associations, Fred Bell of this county, who is president of the county association and chairman of the district committee, was selected to make a general investigation of the conditions at the Indianapolis stock yards. Resolutions adopted at the meeting demand a reduction in the cost of feed at the Indianapolis stock yards, improvement in the yard facilities in unloading live stock, improvement of the Belt railroad service at the yards and correction of such evils as the failure to water cattle and hogs.

Lafayette.— According to action taken by the board of county commissioners, Tippecanoe county will experience the biggest road building campaign in history during the coming summer. At the joint meeting of county commissioners and county council, bonds totaling $985,000 were authorised to carry out the work. It is the intention of the commissioners to construct a permanent road that will traverse the county from the Montgomery county line on the south to White county line on the north. It will be nineteen miles in length, and will pass through the city of Lafayette

TURNED THE LIGHT ON HER

Ill-Timed Illumination That Was Not at All Pleasing to the Central Figure.

A few years ago we drove to the East and camped along the way.

The first night's camp was made in a field along a side road, far enough from the main road to avoid many passersby.

However, in the midst of our bedtime preparations a car with bright lights turned off the main road and came toward us. My wife, who was using the rear seat of our car for her boudoir, gathered her kimono about her, and ran around in front of our machine in case the spotlight from the other car should be turned in our direction.

At the same time another member of our party reached for the switch buttons to extinguish one small light which we were using. Imagine his consternation, my wife's horror, and the shouts of laughter from the passing car, as he pushed the wrong button and turned the powerful lights of our car full on my wife's thinly clad form.

What Doctors Laugh At.

In the last 50 years the science of medicine has advanced more than in the previous 50 centuries. But the average man still thinks he knows an infallible cure for a cough.—Journal of the American Medical Association.

Never Sees It Now.

Mae—If we get a divorce I want a chance to see the child once a month.

Rae—But that would break your record.

The Difference.

"A traveler relates that in Peking if a wife dies and the husband follows her remains to the grave he is not permitted to marry again," didactically state Professor Pate. "If he stays at home it is an intimation that he has further matrimonial ambitions. Here in America if the bereaved husband weeps all the way to the cemetery and then it requires the united efforts of several strong men to keep him from precipitating himself howling onto the grave the experienced onlookers allow that in less than three months he will be stepping about the girls and declaring that a man is only as old as he —ee-hee! hee!—feels." —Kansas City Star.

Artificial Scents.

The great bulk of perfumes are chemical productions. The Wall Street Journal says the commercial problem is whether the American perfumer of the future is to be an artisan or an artist. Shall he deal with the fragrance of flowers or chemical odors and scents? The idea of the layman is that the cosmic chemist seeks the odor of flowers; but as a matter of fact synthetic chemistry not only crowns his work with the crushed oil of roses, violets and jessamine, but seeks to rival the fragrance of flowers with superior scents originating wholly within the laboratory and trade-marked as such.

A Quick Customer.

"A new germ has been discovered which makes it almost impossible for people to talk."

"You don't say so!" exclaimed Mr. Meekton. "Where do you buy it?"

His Vacant Dome.

Borcleigh—Yes, the bullet struck my head, went careening into space and—

Miss Keen—How terrible! Did they get it out?

When the bait is worth more than the fish it is time to stop fishing.

Nine Lives.

When they were organising the American Legion there were some heated debates on various organization points. One delegation had a membership idea that it wanted put through. The majority turned it down on the ground that it was un-American. That was too much for one returned veteran. He came up on both feet with a roar.

"Do I understand," he demandned, waving both arms, "that those of us that went across have died in vain?"

He was assured that such was not the case.

"Well, that's all I want to know," he said. "If I thought I had given up my life without result I would rise up in my grave!"

Exposure.

The world's war veterans were having their reunion down on the corner—the reunion that they have every evening after supper.

One lad was telling his experiences and concluded by saying: "I don't see how we ever lived through it. It's a wonder we didn't die from exposure."

"We had a pretty tough war of it over here in the camp," remarked a lad who had never been overseas. Then another veteran of the battle of Camp Taylor smiled and added:

"Yes, just look at Lieutenant (Hard Boiled) Smith. He is almost dead from the exposure he is getting over here."

Discovery of Diamonds.

An interesting discovery of diamonds was made in the Gold Coast of Africa last spring. The stones occur in shallow quartz gravels of the Abomo stream and adjacent ridge, near the village of Abomoso, Birrim river, 15 miles northwest of Kibbi in the district of Akim Abuakawa, northwest of Accra. The stones vary from $2.50 to $3 per carat for the smaller grade, $4.25 per carat for the medium grade and $7.25 to $8 per carat for the larger grade. Some of the largest are worth from $17 to $19.50 per carat.

Reasoning From Kittens.

Little Edward's twin sisters were being christened. All went well until Edward saw the water in the font. Then he anxiously turned to his mother and exclaimed: "Ma, which one are you going to keep?"—Blighty (London).

HEADACHE Often Caused by Acid-Stomach

Yes, indeed, more often than you think. Because ACID-STOMACH, starting with indigestion, heartburn, belching, food-repeating, bloat and gas, if not checked, will eventually affect every vital organ of the body. Severe, blinding, splitting headaches are, therefore, of frequent occurrence as a result of this upset condition.

Take EATONIC. It quickly banishes acid-stomach with its sour bloat, pain and gas.

It aids digestion—helps the stomach get full strength from every mouthful of food you eat. Millions of people are miserable, weak, sick and ailing because of ACID-STOMACH. Poisons, created by partly digested food charged with acid, are absorbed into the blood and distributed throughout the entire system. This often causes rheumatism, biliousness, cirrhosis of the liver, heart trouble, ulcers and even cancer of the stomach. It robs its victims of their health, undermines the strength of the most vigorous.

If you want to get back your physical and mental strength—be full of vim and vigor—enjoy life and be happy, you must get rid of your acid-stomach.

In EATONIC you will find the very help you need and it's guaranteed. So get a big 50c box from your druggist today. If it fails to please you, return it and he will refund your money.

This Year I Save

—o—

LAST year I got the biggest pay,
I guess, I ever got at all.
They raised me once if I would stay
And once for being best, last fall,
Of all the force. But not a cent
Is left. Gee whiz, I sure did slave!
Now every last red cent is spent.
B'lieve ME, this year I save.

I'VE been at my arithmetic
And figured out just where I stand.
It sure does make me doggon sick
To find I've worked to beat the band
And haven't got a dime to show,
Not even one greenback to wave.
No good to kick, but I'll say though,
B'lieve ME, this year I save!

FOR years I've spent the whole blamed wad,
It's what I thought I had to do
Because some fellows call you odd
When you would save. They don't care who
A chap may be, or what he gets,
If he keeps any, then they rave.
Well' let 'em rave. I've paid my bets.
B'lieve ME, this year I save!

Let Us HELP YOU.

Farmer's Institute Was Great Success.-- Splendid Interest.

The opening session of the Tri-Township Farmers' Institute opened at the M. P. Church at 10 o'clock, Friday morning. The attendance at this session was not large, owing to the funeral of Mrs. Hull; but those who were there were favored by hearing some excellent music given by the schools, under the direction of Miss Baschelier. Fred Ulm, Olen Waltz and Karl Hart, the three boys who received the highest averages in the pig feeding contest, each gave an excellent story of their experiences. J. W. Mertz, president of the Farmers' Federation of DeKalb County, presented them with the prizes given by the institute, checks for $15, $12 and $10, in the order given above, the money to be used in helping to pay their expenses to the boys' round-up at Purdue, this spring. After some organization business, adjournment was taken until 1:30 p. m.

The afternoon session opened with an attendance of 353. The music was furnished by the public schools of St. Joe. Wm. Blaker, of Butler, was called upon by Chairman, L. W. Yeiser to explain the advantages to be derived from the condensory that is to built at Butler. Mr. Blaker handled the proposition from every angle showing the profit to be derived from selling the whole milk. The farmer will receive larger returns for his labor in the saving of labor Where the farmers have been accustomed to the condensory they are realising as high as $238 per cow. This will induce farmers to have a breed of cattle noted for producing milk of a larger quantity. The speaker stated that the ready cash brought into the community would be much more than that produced from cream alone. The plan is that trucks will gather the milk each day and that some of the small towns near at hand would have stations for the collecting of milk or cream that might be brought in by farmers. A round table followed which brought out some of the personal things that some were wanting to know.

H. M. Widney talked of his experiences over the state and the things that appealed to him as community projects. He gave a fine description of the different sections of the state and to what particular line of farming they were more adapted for.

Miss Grimm, DeKalb county trained nurse, was present and was given an opportunity to speak. Said she was employed to serve the rural communities, for the city people were largely able to take care of their own health problems. She is going over the county studying conditions and will gladly visit any part of the county if needed. She has had seven years experience as trained nurse and in clinic practice—three years as Red Cross nurse, and the people are entitled to profit from experience she has had. Write her if your children seem to need attention, confer with her in case of the existance of tuberculosis, or its apparent existence and she will do all within her power to help or advise as to the best course to persue.

W. O. Lake handled the poultry side of the institute in fine shape having been engaged in the poultry business quite extensively for the past few years. He gave in a short time the fundamentals in the raising of poultry that all farmers are more or less familiar with. Mr. Lake said that you could feed for laying and get eggs for months and by careful studying that the molting season could be brought about in the proper time (August) so that the hens would be in proper shape for winter laying. In the molting season cut the supply of feed about one half and feed oil meal and grain. The best way for molting is to have the hens confined to a small coop for a few days before turned out. Diseases are bound to visit flocks, and for cholera Mr. Lake advises the use of the following compounds:—1 pound Spanish Brown, 2 ounces Catacum, 2 ounces Black Antimony 2 ounces Fenugreek. Use the above mixture once a day, one spoonful to each 20 hens in dry mash. For rupe use the following: 3 ounces Camphorated oil, 3 drops of carbolic acid and ½ ounce of turpentine placed in drinking water so that the bill will become saturated when drinking. Almost instant relief is insured if taken in time.

A full house was present for the evening session in being wholly home talent with the exception of Morris Widney, of Auburn, who favored the audience with some of his humorous songs. Miss Gladys Kain and Miss Basbelier rendered two fine duetts. George Hart and Mervin Place each sang two solos and Minnie Walker gave a funny reading, all of which added to the spicyness of the program.

J. W. Mertz, President of the Farmer's Federation, gave a talk of considerable length explaining the organization and as to their future activities. The maid purpose is that the farming industry may keep pace with the rapid progress of the world. Better farming conditions. Work for better schools, roads. To see that the wise expenditure of public money is carried out. To see that proper men are elected to office. 26 states are now fully organized and looking after the farmers interests.

Clyde Hart gave a short talk on his garden. Five hundred varieties of vegetables was grown last year for the purpose of displaying at the Hicksville fair. In this garden he raised 50 varieties of beans. Because of the late hour he did not go into any details.

Saxe Hudsell sang a solo for the closing of the first day's session.

The Saturday morning session was fairly well attended due to the extreme change in the temperature. R. L. Thompson was the first of the state speakers to appear on the program, with his subject, crop rotation and farm management, well in hand, he gave the audience a splendid talk. He said, most farmers farmed as though the fertility of the soil was inexhaustable, that most men delighted in taking off the crops, but failing also in giving to the soil anything for the production of the next crop, and that the slogan for "safe and sane agriculture" was proper at this time.

Crop rotation is not sufficient to build up the soil, but that lime and fertilizers were the other necessities along with this process.

There are three basic principals necessary for good production, drainage, lime and legumes, the latter being derived from the clover crop. In speaking of the failure of a crop, Mr. Thompson said that a greater loss was sustained by the failure of the clover crop, than any other, because not only of the dollars and cents lost in the crop, but that the soil was being robbed of the legumes, which is so necessary to the production of a good crop. A 30-bushel per acre wheat crop could be lost with less injury to the farmer than a stand of clover The soil needs renovating in order to produce well, and this is done by the rotation of crops and it is of wonderful assistance in the renewing of the fertility.

Soil should not be left to the sun continously and to avoid the leaching, catch crops should be sown as rye and soy beans.

Mrs Ogg was the next to appear on the program, treating the subject, "The art of getting things done", in a very excellent and skillful manner. The illustration of an artist was used. Unless he saw the picture he was about to paint before he begun, his production would be worthless. Too many women go about their work without a vision of how they are to proceed or when they expect to finish the task. The points of inter-

INDIANA NEWS

Marion.—Reduction by one-half of the number of counties in Indiana, and the consolidation of the government of Marion county and the city of Indianapolis were advocated by R. E. Tracy, director of the bureau of government research of the Indianapolis Chamber of Commerce, speaking before the citizenship school of the Franchise league, here.

Wabash.—After all outstanding road bonds and interest on them are paid this year, Wabash county will have $1,623,280.50 to spend for additional roads, according to figures announced by the county auditor. Only hard surface road contracts will be let this year by the county commissioners, and it is expected that work will be started on approximately 50 miles of main highways in the county.

Seymour.—The thick coating of ice on fruit trees insures a big fruit crop next summer, according to the belief of many farmers. They say that whenever trees are incased in ice as they were recently, the scale and insects which attack the blossoms are killed. Local housewives are doubtful about the benefit from a big fruit crop unless they can buy sufficient sugar to save it.

Muncie.—As part of the policy of retrenchment of expenses adopted by Mayor John Kelly, the board of police commissioners announced the dropping of ten policemen from the rolls and also that two vacancies on the force as now constituted would not be filled, making a total reduction of twelve in the force. The remaining policemen will be on duty ten hours a day instead of eight, but each will receive $20 a month additional pay.

Terre Haute.—Citizens of Clinton have appealed to Jack Beattie, superintendent of police here, asking him to take hold of the law enforcement in Clinton, and clean up the "blind tigers" of the place. In a letter to Beattie it is said that there are more than 100 of these places in Clinton where liquor is sold freely, most of them being operated by foreigners. It is alleged that drunkenness on Saturday night is as common as under the old system, when saloons were permitted to be open.

Petersburg.—Following the action of the American Coal company of Bicknell, in leasing 2,000 acres of Knox county coal land, other coal companies are leasing land east of this city along the survey of the old Straightline railway. The Pike County company will sink a shaft at Atlas mine No. 3 early in the spring. The Gladstone Coal company has leased several hundred acres during the last month. The Pike County Coal company will build a number of houses for miners next summer.

Indianapolis.—Governor Goodrich reappointed the following persons to succeed themselves as members of state boards or commissions: Eph Inman, Indianapolis, board of trustees, Central Hospital for the Insane; Dr. Frank B. Wynn and Charity Dye, Indianapolis, and Lew O'Bannon, Corydon, state historical commission; Jess C. Andrews, Westport, board of trustees, state prison; J. T. Akin, Sullivan, board of trustees, Southern Hospital for the Insane; Dr. Andrew J. Rhodes, Lincoln City, and Dr. J. C. Jolly, Lake, Nancy Hanks Lincoln memorial commission.

Indianapolis.—When delegates to the state convention of the proposed Labor party of Indiana meet in this city February 13 to effect the organization of the party they may be confronted with a well-defined movement within their own ranks opposing the naming of candidates for state offices. It is expected that the opposition will be strong enough to block any attempts along that line. The new party is backed by the Indiana State Federation of Labor. At the last convention of the federation in August, 1919, action was taken which led to the calling of a convention to form the Labor party.

Indianapolis.—Women voters in Indiana are going to have one less worry than the men, for the present at least. Section 2 of the tax law provides that "a poll tax shall be assessed upon every male inhabitant of this state between the ages of twenty-one and fifty years." Fred A. Sims, chairman of the state tax board, looked into this matter of poll tax after he had received many inquiries from all parts of the state relative to the paying of a poll tax by the new electorate, which expects to have its "say" soon. There is nothing in the law now, Mr. Sims said, which provides for the assessment of this tax on women voters. Action of the state legislature is required to change the tax law.

Gary.—Public improvements costing more than $200,000 were authorized by the Gary board of public works and plans also were made to begin other work soon. Repaving of many streets in the city is included in the program.

Frankfort.—Dr. M. S. Canfield of this city, treasurer of the Indiana state board of medical registration and examination, has announced that hereafter, service in the army, navy or marine medical corps may be accepted as time credits for students who wish to take the examination to practice medicine in the state.

Brownstown.—Several schools in Hamilton township, this county, are closed as a result of a smallpox epidemic. It is said that at least fifty cases in the township have been reported.

Lafayette—David Sheets of Benton county, was elected president of the Indiana Co. Highway Superintendents' association, at the annual convention here in connection with the Purdue University road school. Frank Moore of Lafayette was elected vice president and J. F. Brown of Bloomington secretary-treasurer.

Indianapolis.—Breeding of fur-bearing animals may be carried on during closed seasons under new regulations which have been promulgated by the state conservation department through the fish and game division. The new plan provides for state supervision of breeding places and the issuance of state licenses to prospective breeders.

Bloomington.—A program of international importance will be given as one of the outstanding features of the observance of Indiana university's centennial year May 5, 6 and 7. It was announced that the program, when completed, will include men of world renown. Representatives of the various universities and colleges have been invited to attend.

Bedford.—About $35,000 has been paid this winter for Lawrence county furs and the amount will probably be increased before the close of the season on February 2. One Bedford buyer has paid out $20,000 for furs, all of which he sent to Boston, Mass. The fur-bearing animals in this county are skunk, mink, muskrat, coon, opposum and an occasional fox.

Evansville.—The executive committee of Evansville college announced that $350,000 will be spent this year on four new buildings. These buildings, to be ready for occupancy by September 1, will be the administrative, including the chapel, library and available recitation rooms; science hall, with laboratory and recitation rooms; a girls' dormitory, and a gymnasium. Plans for these buildings will be drawn at once.

Indianapolis.—A state conference on the training of teachers will be held February 5, O. H. Williams, state supervisor of teacher training courses, announced. The state teacher training board of education, recently drafted tentative minimum requirements for the new two-year and four-year teacher training courses to be established under the new teacher training law. The board wishes to submit the tentative drafts to a conference of persons interested before finally adopting them.

Indianapolis.—Following a discussion of proposed legislation providing for the licensing of real estate dealers, the board of governors of the Indiana Real Estate association, meeting here, decided to put the task of working out details of such a bill in the hands of a committee. G. D. Gerhart of Kokomo, president of the association, named the following: Louis L. Bart, Fort Wayne, chairman; J. Edward Morris, C. B. Durham and Scott Brewer of Indianapolis and Roy M. Friedley of Muncie.

Kendallville.—The final awards made in the five-acre corn-growing contest in Noble county show that John W. Moorhouse of Jefferson township is the winner with an average yield of 71.8 bushels. The four other contestants made the following record: Joe Seaburg, York township, 66.79 bushels; Amos Fulk, Allen township, 59.42; B. F. Haines, Allen township, 55.57; George Ball, York township, 38.88. The average yield for the five contestants is 58.49, while the average for the whole county is only 31 bushels an acre.

Indianapolis.—Gov. James P. Goodrich has announced his decision not to be a candidate for the Republican nomination for president of the United States. Expressing gratitude to friends who have circulated petitions to place his name on the presidential preference ballot in Indiana, the governor says it is evident at this time that if he should become a candidate "others would come into the state, as they have a perfect right to do, and contest with me for the support of my own state." This, the governor says, would make it impossible for him to conduct outside Indiana the sort of campaign that is "necessary in order to afford any reasonable hope of success."

Petersburg.—Because of the sugar shortage, growers of watermelons and canteloupes will increase their acreages this year, in hopes that the scarcity of sugar will help bolster the market on melons and canteloupes. The acreage will be 50 per cent greater, and Petersburg will again become a great shipping point for melons this year. Petersburg was formerly one of the biggest shipping points for melons in southern Indiana, but when the price four years ago caused the shippers great monetary loss, the melon industry was tabooed. Last year a few growers again engaged in the business and made big returns. Much tobacco will be planted in southern Pike county. The tomato acreage will also be increased in Pike county.

Seymour.—Value of real estate, which changed ownership in Jackson county last year, totaled $2,015,915, an increase of $500,000 over 1918, according to a report filed by the county recorder. Mortgages to the amount of $800,000 were satisfied during the year.

Lafayette.—More than 1,000 boys and girls will attend the annual boys and girls' club roundup at Purdue university May 8 to 6. Most of the visitors will be the winners of the pig, calf, corn growing, canning and other contests in township and counties.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Teacher of English Bible in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1920, Western Newspaper Union)

LESSON FOR FEBRUARY 8

PETER AT LYDDA AND JOPPA.

LESSON TEXT—Acts 9:32-43.

GOLDEN TEXT—The prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up.—James 5:15.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL—Luke 5: 17-26; 8:40-56.

PRIMARY TOPIC—What a King Woman Did.

JUNIOR TOPIC—What Peter Did at Lydda and Joppa.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Beauty and Influence of an Unselfish Life.

In order to grasp the significance of this lesson, we should recall the condition which prevailed in the church as suggested in verse 31. Three characteristics are outstanding:

I. Freedom From Persecution.

Saul, the ringleader of the persecuting forces, had just recently been converted, thereby disorganizing their forces, allowing the church to enjoy a breathing spell. This period of rest did not result in its growing lazy, indifferent, worldly, and forgetful of God, but in growth in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord Jesus.

2. Spiritual Growth and Development.

The real meaning of the word "edified" is "builded up." This does not mean merely that the members were being instructed and comforted, but that strenuous efforts on the part of the individual members, as well as the body as a whole, were being made for the advancement of the divine life. The word "edify" contains the metaphor of some grand building or structure. As suggested by another, this metaphor involves (1) a foundation. This is Jesus Christ—no other dare be laid (I Cor. 3:12-16). (2) A continuous progress. This means that a Christian's activities are purposeful and that the work he undertakes moves forward with the proper progress. (3) Persistent effort. This means that the present day's work begins the foundation upon which tomorrow's work must be built. Thus day by day his life is being raised higher and higher, as each separate round of material is being laid by strenuous efforts. (4) A completion. Finally the work is done, the building is completed, the top stone is brought forth and placed.

3. Outward Growth.

Building up within the church causes the whole work to be admired and respected by those without, inducing them to come and identify themselves with the cause. There can be no forward movement without unless there be a corresponding movement within.

Our lesson today is the record of two stupendous miracles. They are the greatest signs wrought since the day of Christ. The dreadful malady of palsy is vanquished, and a corpse is retenanted by the departed soul. The occurrence here of this miracle is in keeping with the movements of the church at this time. The Lord had promised these signs as they went forth with the gospel message. They were given as encouragements to the disciples, to convince them that the gospel did not lose any of its power by being spread, but rather that its power increased. As the church goes everywhere preaching the Word there will be a corresponding manifestation of power.

I. The Healing of Eneas (vv. 32-35).

This man's needy condition appealed to Peter, just as men today should appeal to us in their semi-dead state. Like his Master, Peter could not refuse the needed help. In this he did not direct attention to himself, but confidently appealed to the power in the name of Christ: "Jesus Christ healeth thee." The man who had kept his bed for eight long years immediately arose and made his bed. When the Lord heals it is done instantly. Peter wisely kept this miracle from being the end by making it the means to the end. That end was the preaching of the gospel. This brought most gratifying results, for "all that dwelt in Lydda and Sharon saw him and turned to the Lord."

II. The Raising of Dorcas (vv. 36-43).

This woman was full of good works and alms-deeds which she did, not talked of doing. She was a practical Christian woman of the kind that gets down to the practical way of showing her love by doing deeds of helpfulness. Her death was a real loss, as was evidenced by the mourning of those who had been helped. When this good woman fell sick and died the disciples sent for Peter. Peter put them all forth. At his command her soul came back to live in her body. This again caused them to believe on the Lord.

THANKFUL HE DIDN'T STOP

After Such a "Break" There Was Only One Bright Spot Left in Drummer's Memory.

For many years I had been calling on a good customer of mine in a small town in Iowa. In charge of the millinery department was a scrawny, gawky "lady-in-waiting," who had given me cause for considerable annoyance by her spinsterly propensities.

Once I made that town after a prolonged absence, and missing this woman I breezily inquired of the proprietor what become of her.

"She went off and got married," replied the proprietor.

"Got married!" I exclaimed, "Whoinell would marry her?"

"I did," was the quiet reply.

I allowed no grass to grow under my feet, but quickly packed my grip and departed, never to return to that store again. Only one bright memory remains with me now—I never stopped to apologize.—Exchange.

"That's no way to challenge," said the officer. "Sing out when you halt a man. Put some music into your voice. Now, I'll approach again, and see how you do it."

When the officer got within 30 feet, the negro, keeping time with his feet, sang out: "Boom, tiddy-boom-boom! Halt! Who's there? How's that for music, boss?"—Detroit Free Press.

He had just vacated one house on the street for another farther down. A few days later he came hurrying home, and when he came to the old place went in as usual. Passing into the living room he sat down, but when he came to himself he was gazing at three total strangers. "Oh, I beg your pardon!" he exclaimed, to their amusement. He departed hastily, but the joke leaked out to his great embarrassment.

MEANT TO SERVE AS BEACON

Statue of Liberty at New York Is Not Fulfilling Original Purpose of Designer.

The statue of Liberty, in New York harbor, is electrically illuminated—that is, so flooded with light as to be rendered brightly visible at night.

Originally, however, the idea was to make it serve as a beacon, and for this purpose the "flame" of the lady's torch was cut at the sides, the openings fitted with glass, and nine duplex arc lamps placed inside.

Thus was obtained a light which, upheld at a height of 305 feet above the water, was visible 24 miles out at sea, or ten miles beyond the anchorage of the outside lightship. Its maintenance was assigned to the government lighthouse board.

But the lighthouse board declared that it had little or no usefulness as an aid to navigation, its value being purely sentimental, and in 1902 the light was extinguished, the business of illuminating the statue being handed over to the war department.

Must Be a Fine School

The six-year-old granddaughter of Judge D. W. Henry of Terre Haute had started to school in the training school of the Indiana state normal. William C. Ball, who lives across the street from the little girl, is trustee for the Indiana state normal and a great friend of the little girl. One morning, when her mother was taking her to school, she noticed Mr. Ball going up the steps to the main building. Looking up at her mother she said: "Gee, this must be a fine school if Mr. Ball goes to school here."—Indianapolis News.

GOOD ROADS

ROAD WORK IS FACILITATED

Effect of Amendments Passed Last February Is Shown in Report of Secretary Houston.

Amendments to the federal aid road act passed last February have greatly facilitated the work of putting the country on a good roads basis, in the opinion of David F. Houston, secretary of agriculture. These amendments, in brief, increase from $10,000 to $20,000 per mile the amount of federal funds that may be expended by one road and considerably broaden the definition of what constitutes a rural post road. The act as it now stands, says Secretary Houston in his annual report, places only three limitations on the type of road which may be built, as follows:

"That the roads shall be 'substantial in character.' This means that the road must be so constructed that it will carry the prospective traffic with such maintenance expenses that the total annual charges will represent a reasonable expenditure for the public service rendered by the highway. It is to the interest of the states that the roads on which federal funds are used be substantially constructed, because the law requires them, or their civil subdivisions, as a prerequisite to receiving further funds, to maintain properly all roads built with federal aid. There is nothing in the law which restricts types of construction between narrower limits than those established by sound finance and good engineering practice.

"That the amount contributed from the federal treasury is connected with any road shall not exceed 50 per cent of its cost or $20,000 a mile. The main thing is to build a road that will stand the traffic in the particular section of the country where it is constructed. The conditions in certain regions may require a heavy, comparatively high-cost type of road, while in others a lower cost type may meet all the requirements. Sentiment is growing throughout the country, even in the newer sections, in favor of more substantial roads.

"That the road must be a 'rural post road' as defined in the act as amended; that is, 'any public road a major portion of which is now used, or can be used, or forms a connecting link not to exceed ten miles in length of any road or roads now or hereafter used for the transportation of the United States mails.' Under the original wording of the law federal funds could be expended only on roads upon which the United States mails now are or may hereafter be transported.'

"Following the amendments to the act the regulations governing its administration and the standards for plans, specifications and estimates were modified, and one of the most successful former state highway engineers in the country was placed in charge of the federal aid road work. He has at his disposal a large staff of local and district engineer aids, and no pains will be spared to provide any further federal assistance that may be needed. An advisory committee, composed of representatives of the state highway department, selected at the request of the department, by the American Association of State Highway Officials, with due regard to geographic considerations, also has been appointed to work in intimate touch with the federal bureau, meeting with its officers at stated periods and at such other times as may seem desirable."

A Scene Typical of Nation-Wide Activity in Good Road Building—Good Roads, Secretary Houston Declares in His Recent Annual Report, Are a Prerequisite to the Orderly and Systematic Marketing of Farm Products, for the Establishment of Satisfactory Rural Schools and for the Development of a Richer and More Attractive Rural Life.

CONSTRUCTION COST VARIES

Mostly Due to Availability of Proper Materials, Where Concrete Roads Are Built.

The cost of concrete roads vary considerably, due mostly to the availability of proper materials. If good clean sand and hard durable pebbles or crushed stone can be readily obtained close to the road to be improved, the first cost is materially decreased. On the whole, however, the cost is slightly below the costs of other modern types.

IF BACK HURTS USE SALTS FOR KIDNEYS

Eat less meat if Kidneys feel like lead or Bladder bothers.

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean, and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is harmless to flush clogged kidneys and stimulates them to normal activity. It also neutralizes the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is harmless; inexpensive; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everybody should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean, thus avoiding serious complications.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.—Adv.

Looked Like ——!

"We have heard a lot about the boys of the A. E. F. whose pay was a long time coming, and of course no one blames them for kicking," said Senator Penrose, "but in justice to the military paymasters, it must be said that they, too, had their troubles. Like the case in Company B.

"Beg pardon," said the sergeant, "but what is your name?"

"Name!" echoed the private, who had just scrawled his cognomen on line 13 of the pay roll. "Don't you see my name on that blank?"

"Yes," said the sergeant. "That is what aroused my curiosity."

CREAM FOR CATARRH OPENS UP NOSTRILS

Tells How to Get Quick Relief from Head-Colds. It's Splendid!

In one minute your clogged nostrils will open, the air passages of your head will clear and you can breathe freely. No more hawking, snuffling, blowing, headache, dryness. No struggling for breath at night; your cold or catarrh will be gone.

Get a small bottle of Ely's Cream Balm from your druggist now. Apply a little of this fragrant, antiseptic, healing cream in your nostrils. It penetrates through every air passage of the head, soothes the inflamed or swollen mucous membrane and relief comes instantly.

It's just fine. Don't stay stuffed-up with a cold or nasty catarrh—Relief comes so quickly.—Adv.

NAME "BAYER" ON GENUINE ASPIRIN

Take tablets only as told in each "Bayer" package.

BAYER

The "Bayer Cross" is the thumb-print of genuine "Bayer Tablets of Aspirin." It protects you against imitations and identifies the genuine Aspirin prescribed by physicians for over eighteen years.

Always buy an unbroken package of "Bayer Tablets of Aspirin" which contains proper directions to safely relieve Colds, Headache, Toothache, Earache, Neuralgia, Lumbago, Rheumatism, Neuritis, Joint Pains, and Pain generally.

Handy tin boxes of twelve tablets cost but a few cents. Druggists also sell larger "Bayer" packages. Aspirin is the trade mark of Bayer Manufacture of Monoaceticacidester of Salicylicacid.

The Newspaper in North Africa.

"Extra!" shouted in the streets of Algiers or any other North African town would not bring the people of the streets crowding about the newsboy, but would send them hurrying as much as it lies in an Arab to hurry, to the "office" of the public reader. Forced Honesty.

Dick—I picked up a quarter today and gave it to the owner.

Father—That's a good honest boy.

Dick—Yes. I couldn't help it. The man that dropped it had me by the ear.

Work that has not a cent in it may be the best paying job in the world.

Accounting for the Weight.

"So you are playing with your soldiers, Willie?" said the caller.

"Yes, ma'am."

"You handle them as if they were quite heavy."

"They are heavy just now, ma'am."

"What makes them so heavy just now?"

"Why, they're on their way back from the war, and they've got a lot of lead in 'em, ma'am."

Two games this week by the K. of P. boys. Thursday evening Waterloo and Saturday evening Ft. Wayne Moose. You will see something good.

The fourth number of the high school lecture course was held Saturday evening and it proved to be the best program given thus far. DeJeu proved to be a wonder in his line and each performance received a hearty applause. With the aid of local talent many of his feats were made more mystifying and were made to fulfill every hope a hundred fold. The program was so varied that the audience was kept wondering what was to happen next, thus the interest was exceptionally keen. He was supported in a strong artist on the Piano Accordian which filled in the program splendidly. The next number, a popular lecture, will be held at the M. P. Church on Wednesday evening of next week as announced from the platform. Please take notice as to this number and let the people give the school a good audience.

Farmers' Short Course

Farmers' regular short course, Auburn, Ind., February 10-11-12-13, four big days of simple and practical instruction in both agriculture and home making. Every phase of the farm work will be discussed by competent men from Purdue and the housewife will also have practical demonstrations along the line of canning meats, household conveniences, planning and the serving of meals, childrens clothing and food, home furnishings and home nursing. Special conferences will be held to discuss soil, poultry, dairying, potato growing and sheep raising. The Purdue staff is at your service. Use them so that their say in your midst may be of most value to the community. Won't you plan ahead so that home duties may be cared for in a way that will permit of attendance of men, women and the older boys and girls at all sessions of the Short Course. Please do your utmost to be there promptly at starting time of each period. Let's make this a real school, the best of its kind for the season.

Titan 10-20 Kerosene Tractor.

REMEMBER this when you buy a tractor—Harvester service is a reliable and very important thing you get "thrown in" when you buy the tractor named above. It safeguards your entire outfit—Power, Machine, Hitch! Later on, if you need a tractor part you will get it with the same dispatch and certainty of perfect fit that you have experienced in connection with your binders and mowers.

Titan 10-20 kerosene tractor is built to operate from start to finish on low-priced kerosene (coal oil), or distillate. It does more than simply run on kerosene—it delivers its full-rated horse power or does any kind of work within its capacity on any kind of oil fuel above 39 degrees Baume.

This means that at the present prices of gasoline and kerosenn in this locality you will save fully one-half your fuel costs over a tractor of equal horse power operating on gasoline. Getting down to a dollars-and-cents basis, if a Titan 10-20 is used, you will be able to make a saving of $1,000 on fuel alone in five years of 1,000 hours work each.

He leaves besides the parents, two sisters and one brother, Miss Florence, a teacher of the Braybrook school; Miss Ella, a nurse at the Hope Hospital at Ft. Wayne, and Arthur, a returned soldier, who is now at home. The funeral was held Wednesday afternoon, from the Scipio Church. Interment in the Scipio Cemetery. Mrs. Hemrick is quite ill also.

In the opening game at the new auditorium Spencerville went down to defeat to the Ossian Athletes by the score of 30-21. Inability of the locals to locate the baskets and their ignorance of playing on out-of-bound courts was largely responsible for their defeat.

The large basket ball court was not completed until late Saturday afternoon, and it was feared it would be impossible to play the game there, but with the co-operation of the townspeople, carpenters and electrician Hart of St. Joe, the contest was staged, although the locals had no chance for a practice to familiarize themselves with the floor.

The playing court is 40 ft. by 60 ft., out of bounds and with suspended baskets, which gives the locals one of the finest courts in the state. The large auditorium has a balcony at the east end and with space on all sides for spectators, gives ample seating capacity for an immense crowd. Manager Steward will put his team through some strenuous workouts this week which will give them snap and team work to retain their reputation as one of the fastest and best teams in northern Indiana. Plans are being laid to bring some of the best independent teams in the state for the entertainment of basket ball lovers. Among the teams that will doubtlessly appear in the near future are Auburn Y. M. C. A., Waterloo White Stars, Reading, Mich. Independents, Montpelier, Ohio Athletes, Zanesville and a rubber game with Ossian.

BAD BREATH
Often Caused by
Acid-Stomach

How can anyone with a sour, gassy stomach, who is constantly belching, has heartburn and suffers from indigestion have anything but a bad breath? All of these stomach disorders mean just one thing—Acid-Stomach.

EATONIC, the wonderful new stomach remedy in pleasant tasting tablet form that you eat like a bit of candy, brings quick relief from these stomach miseries. EATONIC sweetens the breath because it makes the stomach sweet, cool and comfortable. Try it for that nasty taste, congested throat and "heady feeling" after too much smoking.

If neglected, Acid-Stomach may cause you a lot of serious trouble. It leads to nervousness, headaches, insomnia, melancholia, rheumatism, sciatica, heart trouble, ulcer and cancer of the stomach. It makes its millions of victims weak and miserable, listless, lacking in energy, all tired out. It often brings about chronic invalidism, premature old age, a shortening of one's days.

You need the help that EATONIC can give you if you are not feeling as strong and well as you should. You will be surprised to see how much better you will feel just as soon as you begin taking this wonderful stomach remedy. Get a big 50 cent box from your druggist today. PUTTING RURAL COMMUNITIES ON MAP BY CO-OPERATION IS MOST EXCELLENT PLAN

Many Country Neighborhoods Are Coming to Realize the Value of Community Gatherings From a Commercial as Well as a Social Standpoint.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Communities, as well as firms and individuals, can reap legitimate profits through advertising. In her day Rome was a big advertiser and kept at it so persistently that eventually all roads led to that metropolis. From the standpoint of legitimate municipal publicity, America has several Romes. But this sort of co-operative advertising is not monopolized by the big centers. Indeed there are scores of communities—rural and semirural—that have put themselves on the map in big red letters. Their fame has not been restricted by their small size. The secret lies in their emphasizing some local product which the community is well suited to produce, and getting all interested persons to do their very best in that line.

A purse is trash compared with a good name, according to Shakespeare, and many towns recognizing the inestimable value of a good name have built up reputations that have lined the purses of those forming the community. For example, Monroe county, in southern Wisconsin, has built up a national reputation for the fine quality of its cheese. Not the least factor in winning and keeping leadership in this line has been the annual cheese day, a splendid community event at which quantities of the delicious product of the region are given away in sandwiches and in other forms to thousands who share in the occasion.

What Monroe county has done with cheese, Carrizo Springs, Tex., has done with strawberries. The whole countryside in the vicinity of this village joins in honoring its favorite product each season. Distinguished citizens come from miles around to take part in the festivities. The governor of the state counts it a privilege to be present.

Plowing Made a Fine Art.

That the humblest of farm tasks can be honored and exalted by community effort and the community in turn greatly profit thereby is shown by the record of the Wheatland plowing match in northern Illinois. This annual event, instituted something like half a century ago along lines followed by the founders' ancestors in Scotland, attracts annually 10,000 to 15,000 people. Here plowmen of all ages are divided into classes, the members of which compete for prizes offered for the best work done with riding, walking and tractor plows. The reputation for skill in agriculture created by this annual event has been worth an incalculable amount to the farmers of this region, and partly because of it Wheatland farms and Wheatland products are considered among the best in the whole Mississippi valley.

The orange growers of California have learned a similar lesson. Each year they hold a magnificent orange festival which is one of the big events of the Pacific coast, attracting as many as 25,000 people, some of them from distant states. The rivalry for honors has done much to raise and maintain high standards among the orange growers of the region.

A community celebration of a somewhat different character but equally effective in its advertising power, is the Ground-Hog day picnic at Punxsutawney, Pa. At this novel annual event farmers, politicians and former residents to the number of many thousands gather to share in eating a splendid repast, the principal feature of which is ground-hog meat. The meat is cooked in barbecue fashion and invariably wins the praise of the celebrants. Speeches and informal hearty greetings of old friends occupy the afternoon. While this event is not designed to advertise a farm product, its distinctive character and the fine spirit of hospitality that obtains puts Punxsutawney and the surrounding country on the map.

Texas Turkey Drives Famous.

The little town of Cuero, Tex., has won fame from ocean to ocean because of its turkey drives. Drivers of turkeys within a radius of 100 to 150 miles bring in flocks of birds on foot. The fowls travel at a slow rate during daylight and at dusk instinctively huddle together, while their drivers camp by the roadside until dawn, when the journey toward Cuero, a Mecca of turkeydom, is resumed. The culminating feature of this event is the turkey parade in which all of the drivers lead their flocks through the principal streets of the town. On a recent turkey day no less than 28,000 birds were in the procession. Following the parade the turkeys are loaded on cars and shipped to markets in all parts of the country.

There are thousands of communities which might undertake a celebration similar to these cited. In some cases the spring is the appropriate season, in others the fall or summer is the logical time. The first need is for an association or individual to gather together persons interested in promoting this idea. The winter days, when the farm work is less strenuous, offer an opportunity for preliminary conferences. The office of farm management of the United States department of agriculture will be glad to offer any inquirers suggestions regarding the best methods of promoting such events.

HELPS IN MARKETING WOODLAND PRODUCTS

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Get prices for various wood products from as many sawmills and other wood-using plants as possible.

Before selling, consult neighbors who have sold timber, and benefit from their experience.

Investigate local timber requirements and prices. Your products may be worth more locally because transportation is saved.

Advertise in papers and otherwise secure outside competition for your product.

Secure bids, if practicable, both by the lump and by log-scale measure.

Be sure that you are selling to responsible purchasers.

Get a reliable estimate of the amount and value of the material before selling.

Market the higher grades of timber and use the cheaper for farm purposes.

Remember that standing timber can wait over a period of low prices without rapid deterioration.

Use a written agreement in selling timber, especially if the cutting is to be done by the purchaser.

CUT BADLY DISEASED TREES

Excellent Forestry Practice to Use All Inferior Specimens in Wood Lot for Fuel.

It is an excellent forestry practice to cut out the badly diseased, crooked, overcrowded, inferior trees in a wood lot for fuel wood, giving more growing space to the straight, promising young trees, according to forestry specialists of the United States department of agriculture. In some cases, such as in stands of old pines, a few large trees should be left for seed to restock the land, unless the area is to be cleared. In many sections of the country the present high prices of coal have made profitable a renewal of the wood fuel industry so that many farmers are finding it worth their while to clear out the less desirable trees in cordwood or shorter lengths.

PROBLEMS FACING STRICKEN WORLD

Shall Chaos or Reconstruction in Europe Follow the Great World War?

CHANGE OF SOME SORT SURE

Returning Soldier Feels He Has at Least Earned a Better Chance Than He Has Hitherto Been Granted.

Article III.

By FRANK COMERFORD.

Europe wears an anxious look. One thought is arousing her from the stupor of her misery. She opens her eyes in wide amazement when she notices and notes the striking change that has come over her children. It is puzzling her, although she well knows what they have gone through, how patiently and uncomplainingly they suffered. It isn't strange to her that they have changed, when she remembers the peace of the years before the war, the quiet, sane lives they lived, and the four years in which they lived in wet, foul sewers called trenches, slept in tombs on the edge of a strip of hell called No Man's Land, breathed the smell of burning flesh, saw their pals "go west," buried their dead, grinned at pain, laughed at death. Nerves of steel could not stand what they have gone through without being changed by it.

They have put on mufti again. It is strange to them. The quiet streets are dull. The demobilized soldier feels the letdown. The tenseness over depression sets in. During the war he didn't have time to think of anything except the job ahead of him. Every minute, every move was life or death to him. Now he realizes for the first time what he has gone through, wonders why he is alive. Two thoughts possess his mind; one the memory of every minute of the days and nights of the war—the other, of what is ahead of him, what is he going to do with his life! He is at a strange crossroads. The word "job" doesn't mean much to him. It isn't that he is lazy. He has to pinch himself to realize that it is over and that he is back from the war.

Earned Right to Better Place.

Between the whizz of machine bullets and the shriek of shrapnel he spent his time thinking, and his thoughts were not all about the war. He never got used to the war, but he learned to forget it. He has brought more than souvenirs and memories from his experience. He has brought home thoughts, ideas and ambitions from the trenches. Many a night, looking over No Man's Land, listening to the "banshee" of the war, he thought and resolved that if he ever came back he wanted, and would have, a better chance in this queer thing called Life. He feels that he has paid for a place, and he has paid. He has earned the right to a decent place in the world, for which he fought. He helped save the world and he looks to that world to save him from a meaningless machine existence. If it doesn't he has made up his mind to use force. He is willing to work, wants to work, but he insists on being part of his work, rather than his work being all of him. He sees, feels and measures things from an intensely human angle. He feels his humanness. The war emphasized the value and meaning of the human being. It was life or death. He is alive. He wants a human interest in his work.

Hundreds of demobilized soldiers in different parts of Europe, in different words, in different languages, have said to me: "If the world isn't going to give us a better chance than it gave us before the war, then the world wasn't worth fighting for. When we fought, they told us it was to make the world safe for democracy and to make life worth while. We thought this meant us and ours. We have learned that life isn't only a question of a job and enough to eat, we want to be treated like human beings. A man wants to feel that his work means more to him than just wages. He spends most of his time at work, the rest of it is spent with his family and in sleeping so he will be able to work the next day. Why shouldn't he have an interest in the business, and why shouldn't the business have an interest in him? We don't want to run the business, all we ask is a say in it, a friendly say in it. Some people think that to be fed is to be free—it isn't. Being free means being treated like a human being."

I have found many good honest men and women who have lost interest in work. They say, "We don't get a fair share of what we make. We fight among ourselves for jobs because we have to or starve, and they pay us as little as they can." I am not reasoning or arguing this question. I am stating a fact which indicates the state of mind of millions of men and women in Europe who did their bit for civilization during the past four years.

Fair Hearing Must Be Granted.

Calling these people bolshevists doesn't silence them nor solve the problem. Such tactics irritate and deepen the unrest. Their grievance must be given a fair, patient hearing. Their attitude of mind must be reckoned with if we hope to get back to normal living. I have heard some say that these people must be given to understand that they must work or starve. No law or government in the world is powerful enough to compel people to work. This is particularly true of the people today. To think of using force is foolish, suicidal.

We have had enough of force during the last four years and the farther we get away from the idea of beating one another into submission the better off we all shall be. The present unrest is positively dangerous. It isn't like any unrest we have ever had before. It is the restlessness of human beings who have been face to face with death. We need a lot of calmness and common sense. By kindly conference we must try to understand each other, and by just compromise help each other. Of one thing I am sure, and that is, if an effort is made to use blind, brute force on the working people of the world, the present unrest will be set in motion, a whirlwind will break upon the world.

The plain, open road back to happiness is co-operation. If we stop for a moment and realize what we have been through, and the changes that have come upon us while we were going through it, we will find getting together easy. Unrest blocks the road. It fetters the will to work. We must face the truth, and the sooner we do, the better. The world is broke. The war has bankrupted Europe. One thing, and one thing only, will bring us back to sane, normal living. It is work. Sympathy and understanding will do more to secure peace, stimulate work, than defiance, challenge and threats.

A normal world is one in which men live and work together in peace, where all men have a chance to be happy. This means an interest in work, a joy in working—living to work, rather than working to live. Men must have food, clean wholesome food, and enough of it to do their work without exhaustion. Men must have clothes. Not only the quantity and quality necessary to protect their bodies from the weather, but clothes that satisfy the normal instinct for appearing clean and neat. Decent clothes sustain self-respect. Men without them are less normal and moral.

All Need a Playtime.

There must be a time between the end of the day and the beginning of sleep in which men can know and enjoy their families. The man who is so used up by his day's work that he falls asleep at his supper table isn't playing fair with his wife and children, and his employer isn't playing fair with him. All men are boys, even after they have gray hair. This quality is probably the finest and best in them. They need a playtime, a recreation time. They lose something and the world loses more when they do not get it. It is not enough that bodies are fed, minds must not be starved. Light is the right of every human being with eyes. Education is light. The human race must have light. None of us were intended to live in darkness. Children are entitled to a school time, a jump-the-rope time, a top time, a play time. A child who enters manhood or womanhood without ever having known a childhood goes through life with something missing, something lost. The creed of the changed world is that while the world doesn't owe anyone a living, it is obligated to give every human being a chance to make a decent living. The new commandment is that this chance must be given.

I found these thoughts planted in the unrest in Europe. They are strongly, deeply rooted in the consciousness of the people. They are growing. Men and women are gardening, cultivating, protecting these ideas. Any effort to uproot or destroy these flowering thoughts will be resented and fought by the gardeners. They are not weed thoughts—they are the blooms of hope and they belong to the poor. They will fight and die before they will see these hope growths trampled under foot. This is the only garden they have. The blood of the dead fertilized it. The living care for it.

Words.

"And now," concluded the super orator, as he bowed to the frenzied applause of the common people, "if I have made any point clear to this intelligent audience I will feel that I have failed of my purpose. However, the greatest of mortals is prone to err, so, in justice to the great issue at stake, I trust that anyone who understands what the League of Nations really is will ask such questions as will enable me to obscure such parts of it as may be clear to you now."

* * * Silence. * * * More silence. * * * And then some.

"Ah! Your silence is flattering, indeed. If you will now dispense with shaking my hand, I will bid you adieu, as I must save my energy for the speech I am to deliver tomorrow before the former munition makers on 'How to Combat the High Cost of Living.'"—Life.

Little Drops of Water.

It has been stated that people are as ignorant of the size of the sea as they are of matters dealing with astronomy.

Few are aware, for instance, that the Pacific ocean covers 68,000,000 miles; the Atlantic 30,000,000 miles, and the Indian ocean, Arctic, and Antarctic 42,000,000.

To stow away the contents of the Pacific it would be necessary to fill a tank one mile long, one mile wide, and one mile deep, every day for 440 years. Put in figures, the Pacific holds in weight 924,000,000,000,000,000,000 tons.

The Atlantic averages a depth of not quite three miles. Its waters weigh 325,000,000,000,000,000,000 tons, and a tank to contain it would have each of its sides 480 miles long.

WESTERN CANADA CORN

Wins First Honors at Kansas City.

While visiting the Canadian Government Information Bureau at Kansas City, where there is on exhibition a very creditable display of Canadian products, my attention, says a writer in the agricultural press, was directed to a few ears of Dent corn, bearing the modest inscription,

"This Northwestern Dent corn took the first prize at the Soil Products Exposition recently held in Kansas City, Mo., and was grown by John Hamilton of Kelwood, Manitoba."

Kelwood, Manitoba, lies about twelve hundred miles north of Kansas City, and it was quite pardonable that these Canadians should so proudly parade the fact that they had been able to carry off for their corn display the blue ribbon that for years the old "corn-growing" states had looked upon as being practically their own, and for which they were strong contestants in the recent show.

I asked Mr. Hewitt, agent in charge of the Canadian Government office at 2012 Main Street, Kansas City, what the winning of the prize means for Canada. His reply was that it means the "corn belt" is moving northward, and in a few years to the fame that Canada has already achieved as a wheat, barley and oats producing country, will have to be added that of growing the best corn in America.

"Why," he said, "twenty years ago a friend of mine was attracted at the Minnesota State Fair by the number of those who were examining some corn growth north of Crookston, Minnesota. It was not the large ear produced farther south, but it was an even ear and perfect kernel. The interest centered in it was the fact that it had been grown so far north. That was twenty years ago. Today, the traveler on any of the railways in that section of the country may see field after field of corn. In many portions of Manitoba," he continued, "out into Saskatchewan and Alberta, the growing of corn is receiving much attention, at presently mainly for fodder, but within a short time, with acclimated seed a maturing corn of good quality may reasonably be expected. Already the number of silos in use in Western Canada indicates that the progressive farmers there look forward to the day when corn will be one of their most important crops.

"Corn lands in South Dakota are said to be selling as high as $250 per acre, and if corn has been the means of placing these lands at this price what may be expected of Western Canada lands, when the day comes that corn will be grown as successfully there?"

It was not in corn alone that Western Canada carried off the honors at the Soil Products Exposition. The awards won by Western Canada were 40 first, 29 second, and 26 third prizes. These included 1st, 2nd and 3rd prizes for hard spring wheat; the sweepstakes for wheat and the cup offered by Canadian Pacific Railway for the best half-bushel of hard spring wheat; 1st, 2nd and 3rd prizes and sweepstakes for oats; 1st, 2nd and 3rd prizes for barley; and 2nd and 3rd prizes for oats.

It is interesting to note that the sweepstakes for wheat and first prize for hard red spring wheat have been won by Saskatchewan exhibitors seven times in the last eight years, Manitoba winning one year.

Potato classes have some interesting successes for Western Canadian exhibitors, who won four firsts, three seconds and three thirds. Exhibitors from these provinces also made fine showing in the vegetable classes, winning among other prizes the premium prizes for cabbages, cauliflowers, pumpkins squash and watermelons. —Adv.

Which I thought I was—considering; but I didn't mean to let him see I thought so. Without waiting for any more compliments I finished, "You see, you'd discovered you couldn't get in while I was in, so if you wished to get in, you had to come while I was out—and I gave you the chance. Perfectly simple."

"A mere decoy—such as anybody might use," Billy tossed at him.

"I hope you're convinced—it was a mere decoy," said I, pointing to the letter in his hand.

"You have convinced me," he replied bitterly, looking at his handcuffs. "Permit me to congratulate you, madame. You are se first person—man or woman—in Europe or America—who has caught De Ravenol in a trap. Madame, you are clever—you are brave—you are a so sagacious intellect. And now, madame, permit me to ask you, what are you going to do wis me?"

It wasn't so much what he said as the way he said it that drove a sudden chill through my bones. I'd been asking myself that for several minutes; but as monsieur put it, it was—well—like pulling up a fishing line when you think you've got a bite and finding you've got a piece of a forest in tow. I had to say something, however, and this was the thing that seemed called for:

"Give you up to the police."

Monsieur rose unsteadily to his feet and holding out his manacled hands to me—and he was really impressive in spite of his being so rumpled and sloppy—he slowly uttered: "Madame, before you call in se police, I have somesing of great importance to yourself to communicate."

He paused. I nodded.

"ZOSE DIAMONDS WHICH HAVE BEEN STOLEN BELONG TO ZE EMPEROR OF GERMANY."

With those words monsieur actually turned the tables on us! It was at once his statement of our mistake and our misfortune. Billy says he "saw warships carving Atlantic waves." I saw an army with banners. And behind all their immediate significance, stood an ironclad background that spelled determination. A minute before we had been dealing with a man; now we were dealing with a power.

I am free to admit that neither Billy nor I doubted the truth of the statement once it was uttered—there was an atmosphere about monsieur and his manacled hands that carried conviction; and while many details were still unexplained, his statement did explain the diamonds. Which was the main thing, for I'd always said they never belonged to any but a crowned head. There are some things in this world much too large for private parties to carry the responsibility of. And so completely was I captured by an adequately explained ownership that I was almost ready to pull the diamonds from their hiding place at the bottom of the sideboard drawer and send them back—per monsieur—to the Emperor William with my compliments, when Billy burst out, "Where's your proof?" in a way that struck me as irreverent, not to say rude.

Monsieur repressed a sneer and replied that certain proofs would be forthcoming at the proper moment; and that meanwhile, throwing himself upon our mercy and to illuminate the mistake we'd made, he would tell us everything—and would start with the legend of the so precious stones.

Once upon a time, about the fourteenth century, or so, there lived in one of the states comprising the now United Fatherland, a very powerful grand duke or kinglet, with two grown sons; and in another neighboring province the size of Greater New York lived another very powerful duke, who boasted a beautiful daughter.

Those were the days when war was cheaper than peace. But since a war between these two kinglets would inevitably lead to the total extermination of both parties and leave nothing to show for their prowess but heaps of fire-scorched stones and a few half-witted peasants—who had no right to be alive, anyway—these wise kinglets bethought them that by uniting their forces—and incidentally a son and a daughter—they could together conquer the surrounding territory for as much as ten square miles.

Now, Oscar, the prospective bridegroom, was busily engaged in a dramatic border war with a powerful duchy the size of Nantucket, so there was naught for it but to dispatch the handsome younger brother, Fritz, to plight his brother's troth by proxy.

The dates were set, and all seemed moving along its appointed course, when post-haste comes a trusty messenger and delivers himself of the tale he has ridden all day to bring—that Oscar has been smitten through the helmet, thereby losing a nose, an upper lip and a chin; and was now in the throes of dissolution.

Consternation reigned in the castle, broken by the sobs of the fair Elfreda, the shy glances of the bereaved brother—who would become the heir apparent—and the wise silence of the old kinglet.

It was not long before a decision was reached satisfactory to all persons—except Oscar, lying in his tent comforting himself with thoughts of the grief of his beautiful betrothed, whom he had never set eyes on; for the two young people, Fritz and Elfreda, knowing that a marriage between the families was greatly to be desired, and warmed with a high sense of duty to the fast-departing Oscar—and it may be, a natural shrinking on the part of the lady from the embraces of a husband minus an upper lip, a nose and a chin, and plus some sixty various and sundry other wounds and scars to boot—hastened the ceremony and were united by the castle priest in the bonds of holy matrimony before the sun rose.

Imagine the messenger's feelings on arriving at the castle and finding Oscar, instead of lying at peace in the family chapel with solemn candles at his head and his heels, making a fast recovery by the aid of his devoted mother in spite of his nose and his chin and his lip!

Still, the news of the unpremeditated marriage was a tonic all around—especially to the messenger. Oscar cut off his head and hung it out of the window to air and then promptly got well in a way that gave him grim satisfaction and his mother considerable uneasiness for her darling; and no sooner was Oscar able to sit his horse than he directed his attention and his army against her whom he was pleased to call "faithless" and the brother whom he designated as "an unholy bandit."

Then did the fair lady call unto her her own private scribe and she indited a beautiful letter in her own hired handwriting, and in it she told the noble warrior that the mistake was hers—as she saw by his gloriously scarred face—and she took all the blame and offered herself and her blood as a sacrifice in the appeasing of his righteous wrath. Then she called her most faithful maid-of-all-work and said: "Lady-in-waiting, I deliver this into thy keeping. Now fetch me my golden goblet, lock the door and ask no questions."

And with this attended to, Elfreda, stationing the lady-of-all-work in the proper attitude with the goblet in readiness to catch her heart's blood, plunged a dagger in her bosom and died.

The faithful lady-in-waiting obediently caught the blood as it fell—seven great drops. But, oh, miracle—when she looked into the golden goblet what did she behold? Seven drops, unmixed as when they fell from the gaping wound of her beloved mistress—seven glorious blood-red diamonds!

But she was strictly honest. The letter and the diamonds, still in the golden goblet, were conveyed to Oscar at the appointed hour, and at sunset the two brothers united their tears above the bier of the beautiful Elfreda.

Such was the legendary origin of the most wonderful diamonds in the world—a collection created by miracle; and thenceforth, in keeping with their mystic origin, they assumed a peculiar role in the history of nations, binding bargains and sealing treaties of peace.

But now the later legends had endowed the stones with occult powers which were imparted to their possessors—the renewal of youth, wealth, untold energy of mind and spirit.

A century after the stones were taken to Venice and cut and their real glory was revealed to the world; and at last they excited the envy of Bismarck and came into the possession of the emperor, grandfather to the present William, thence to William the present.

To this legend Billy and I had listened with unblinking interest. Monsieur told it in the sustained manner of one immured to secrets of state. It was he who broke the spell of our silence by asking me for a glass of water.

I carried the water to him and turned away my eyes while he held the glass with his two hands to his lips.

"That's quite a yarn," observed Billy, blowing out a cloud.

"Yarn?" questioned monsieur.

"Story—tale—narrative," Billy explained. "Une histoire," on which monsieur brightened and declared: "C'est une veritable histoire."

"True when it happened," translated Billy. "But what I don't see is, where you come in on the diamond deal."

"I?" said monsieur, giving me a look that asked: "Is there anything I have not beautifully explained?"

"Yes—you; I don't seem yet to see where you belong in this veritable histoire," returned Billy, looking about for an ash tray, but driving at his point—"I don't see what part you play in it at all? Granted that the diamonds belong to the Emperor William—now, then, what are you doing with them?"

"I?" again he looked at me. "I am trying to find sem for ze Emperor William."

"All right. But what are you doing with them—in America?" Billy's tone was severe. "That is what you have to answer."

Billy looked the man straight in the eyes, defiantly, and I thought, for just the fraction of a second, that he quailed under the boyish honest stare.

"Yes, sir," continued Billy, as monsieur did not immediately reply, "there's quite a gap between the emperor's owning them and your having them. Very possibly I am lacking in imagination, but to be quite frank, I can't see the connection."

It was to me monsieur appealed. "Ah, madame, what more can I say? I am at your mercy—" and he held out his manacled hands.

I hardened under Billy's look at me and replied coolly: "I think you'd better tell us how you came by the diamonds. I can't see the precise connection between the Emperor William and yourself."

Monsieur appeared to choke back a number of emotions and then declaimed, "Madame must pardon me, but zose—are secrets—of state!"

He did it really magnificently—altogether the great man, the confidant of kings, and that—on top of the rest—convinced me of his sincerity. Before I could reply, Billy pulled my sleeve and demanded: "Where's an ash tray?—I'm getting this stuff all over your best rug. Get me a plate or something out of the kitchen," and with his eyes he said: "Leave this man to me for a minute, will you?"

I stepped into the kitchen and heard Billy say to monsieur in a low voice: "I see I don't need to point out to you the position you're placing yourself in by refusing an explanation as to how you came to have those diamonds in your possession. There's only one thing left for me to think."

He paused and I thought, "Heavens! Is he going to accuse monsieur?" And he did.

"YOU STOLE THEM."

I was rooted to the floor. The reply came like a shot—"Monsieur!" and De Ravenol leaped to his feet. The two men had given and taken a mortal blow—for monsieur, in his single word, had returned as good as he got and they now measured each other.

"That's Quite a Yarn," Observed Billy.

Billy broke the silence and recalled me with: "Say—where's that ash tray?"

The scarlet that had leaped to monsieur's cheeks faded as I entered the room. He stood. He towered. Yet he spoke with humility.

"It is not as De Ravenol I explain how it is I am seeking ze diamonds zat belong to ze Emperor William—it is as ze emperor's messenger to se court of Mexico. And yet—it is as plain De Ravenol—se fazer of Claire whom you know—zat I implore you to keep my confidence zat I give you now at se peril of my life."

He paused, and we both felt constrained to assure him we would keep his confidence, and he proceeded.

"I have ondertook sis secret mission for which se emperor have select me from all his friends—as he have select me, I may call myself his friend—and I have dedicate myself to it wis all my zeal.

"Since Napoleon I, Europe has seen no like der Kaiser Wilhelm—he is warrior and conqueror in his heart, even as zey were—we have now ze concert of powers sat prevent to one man to own se whole of Europe any more.

"And se emperor looks ahead for se future of his people and he say: 'How do zey be fed in hundred years? Ze fields of all ze faserlands—ze science of all se faserlands will not do it. But wis money, my people may buy seir food as zey will—beef and wheat from se whole world. Wis industry—manufactures—commerce—we have se money. But sat our commerce does us some valuable good, we must make some alliances for sis purpose. England have set her seal on India, her best on Africa and her hand on Canada; but she have not touch ze Latin nations—she owns not Mexico—she controls not yet ze somo-day Panama canal. Zere we have great strategic point for future development sat England have not got hold of.' In Mexico, zen, se Emperor William sees some bright future for se faserland.

"Now ze madame president of Mexico is young; she have great beauty and she rule her venerable husband wis sat beauty—as have women at all times. So once she have hear ze legend of se seven blood-red diamonds. Above all ozzer sings in ze world she desire soze diamonds and she have communicate her wish to der kaiser and he have seen in her wish some way to his own for se faserland.

"To sis end he have arrange treaty wis Mexico which make Mexico a sister state of ze great German alliance he have in mind. To sis end, also, he have commissioned me—"

The rest of what monsieur said just then was lost on me, for there had swooped on me a lightning stroke of understanding—the whole nefarious scheme of Germany and the emperor lay bare to my inner eye. Mexico—the Panama canal—these were the strategic points of a world conquest such as history had never witnessed. Germany in possession of Mexico, with half a million troops massed on our border—why, she could flippantly tread on the lion's tail any day and go to war and say to us: "Help England—and lose Texas, Arizona, New Mexico and California." With half a million troops in Mexico, Germany could spank us into almost anything!

And Mexico, with her almost untouched resources; with her hot-blooded troops under German discipline for twenty years—for ten—for five!

But I could stop it! For the lever that was to set the scheme in motion was thumb-tacked to the bottom of my sideboard drawer—the seven blood-red diamonds!

Monsieur's voice had reached a stop. My resolve was taken.

"Never!" was the one impassioned word I uttered.

Billy echoed it—"Never!" His thoughts had flown with mine and had seen the impending calamity which we two, out of the world, could now prevent. Then, drawing himself to his full height, he gave forth our ultimatum to the nation at large: "You just go back and tell your Emperor William that he can never have Mexico or the Panama canal."

CHAPTER XIII.

Monsieur Appeals to Me.

The effect of our words on monsieur was the last thing we could have foreseen. He had been standing all this while. He sank heavily into his chair, buried his face in his hands—and wept! Billy raised disgusted eyes to the ceiling, inviting it to come down with a noise and end the unpleasing spectacle of a man crying tears on a rug. Then catching my commiserating eye, Billy communicated his ideas on the subject with a little sneer of his lip and a little shrug of his shoulder. The next instant, he had seized me by the arm and pulled me along the hall whispering: "While he's on the weep we can talk," and he thrust me inside the bedroom door, himself remaining on the sill with an eye to the dining room.

Monsieur continued to weep—possibly he thought we'd left him out of consideration for his emotion.

"Say—this is the very deuce of a hole," Billy began in a rapid whisper, "the very devil of a hole. What we must do is to go to Washington tomorrow—"

"But, Billy—"

"Well, tonight, then—we can catch the midnight train and be there the first thing in the morning."

"I won't. At least, not now. Do please listen. I won't do anything till I've seen Mrs. Delario—"

"What the good of wasting time seeing her?" he interrupted. "Here's a case where hours count—minutes—seconds, for all we know. How'll she help, anyway?"

"That's not the question. She entrusted them to me—so she's the one to take them back to first—and then if she says—"

"Oh, you know what she'll say," he argued. "Women are always that way—don't want any trouble. Now, you take the bull by the horns—go to Washington tonight."

"No. I'm responsible to her."

"How can you be—when she only found them where the girl must have put them? He'll confess that, too, when he gets over his weeps."

"Oh, well, since you've got 'em, I suppose you'll do as you like for all of my advice," Billy said glumly, stuffing his hands in his pockets. "But if you'll take my advice, you'll not waste time over anything—it's too serious."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Furs and Feathers.

From the dawn of human history furs and feathers have been used to satisfy our taste and need for clothing and adornment. Our most primitive ancestors were connoisseurs in the plumage of birds and the pelts of animals and admired them for their possibilities in furnishing himself and his family with raiment and adornment, and so do we.

Keep Out the Moisture.

A very effective agent for moisture-proofing wood has been found in an aluminum leaf coating. This coating practically insulates the wood against any change in atmospheric conditions, and is particularly valuable for use where accurate form and balance must be maintained, as would be necessary in an airplane propeller.

Nasty Colds

Get instant relief with "Pape's Cold Compound"

Don't stay stuffed-up! Quit blowing and snuffling! A dose of "Pape's Cold Compound" taken every two hours until three doses are taken usually breaks up a cold and ends all grippe misery.

The very first dose opens your clogged-up nostrils and the air passages of the head; stops nose running; relieves the headache, dullness, feverishness, sneezing, soreness and stiffness.

"Pape's Cold Compound" is the quickest, surest relief known and costs only a few cents at drug stores. It acts without assistance. Tastes nice. Contains no quinine. Insist on Pape's! Ad.

If You Need a Medicine You Should Have the Best

Have you ever stopped to reason why it is that so many products that are extensively advertised, all at once drop out of sight and are soon forgotten? The reason is plain—the article did not fulfill the promises of the manufacturer. This applies more particularly to a medicine. A medicinal preparation that has real curative value almost sells itself, as like an endless chain system the remedy is recommended by those who have been benefited, to those who are in need of it.

A prominent druggist says "Take for example Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a preparation I have sold for many years and never hesitate to recommend, for in almost every case it shows excellent results, as many of my customers testify. No other kidney remedy has so large a sale."

According to sworn statements and verified testimony of thousands who have used the preparation, the success of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is due to the fact, so many people claim, that it fulfills almost every wish in overcoming kidney, liver and bladder ailments; corrects urinary troubles and neutralizes the uric acid which causes rheumatism.

You may receive a sample bottle of Swamp-Root by Parcels Post. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and enclose ten cents; also mention this paper. Large and medium size bottles for sale at all drug stores.—Adv.

UP A SINGIN'!

Tomorrow will be clear and bright, if you take "Cascarets" tonight

Feeling half-sick, bilious, constipated? Ambition way below zero? Here is help! Take Cascarets tonight for your liver and bowels. You'll wake up clear, rosy, and full of life. Cascarets act without griping or inconvenience. They never sicken you like Calomel, Salts, Oil or nasty, harsh pills. They cost so little too—Cascarets work while you sleep.—Adv.

The Chinese were the first people in the world to use steel needles. The Chinese needles slowly made their way westward until they were brought into Europe by the Moors.

Catarrh Cannot Be Cured

by LOCAL APPLICATIONS, as they cannot reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a local disease, greatly influenced by constitutional conditions. HALL'S CATARRH MEDICINE will cure catarrh. It is taken internally and acts through the Blood on the Mucous Surfaces of the System. HALL'S CATARRH MEDICINE is composed of some of the best tonics known, combined with some of the best blood purifiers. The perfect combination of the ingredients in HALL'S CATARRH MEDICINE is what produces such wonderful results in catarrhal conditions.

This Year I Save

—o—

LAST year I got the biggest pay,
I guess, I ever got at all.
They raised me once if I would stay
And once for being best, last fall,
Of all the force. But not a cent
Is left. Gee whiz, I sure did slave!
Now every last red cent is spent.
B'lieve ME, this year I save.

I'VE been at my arithmetic
And figured out just where I stand.
It sure does make me doggon sick
To find I've worked to beat the band
And haven't got a dime to show,
Not even one greenback to wave.
No good to kick, but I'll say though,
B'lieve ME, this year I save!

FOR years I've spent the whole blamed wad,
It's what I thought I had to do
Because some fellows call you odd
When you would save. They don't care who
A chap may be, or what he gets,
If he keeps any, then they rave.
Well' let 'em rave. I've paid my bets.
B'lieve ME, this year I save!

Let Us HELP YOU.

est can be summed up shortly as follows:

Have a vision of your task.
Put thought into work.
Systematize.
Plan.
Don't do your work carelessly
Have rooms convenient.
Don't work without kitchen utensils.
A housewife can't do everything and conserve her strength.
Have modern appliances for doing the drudgery.
Save yourself but hurry and quit worry.

The afternoon program opened with special music by a number of the school children after which Mr Thompson conducted a questioneer on the Breeding and Feeding of Hogs as an introdnction to his talk A number of questions were handed in and he explained them fully as he saw it. The Big Type Polands were his favorite breed. 20 per cent grain rations are saved by pasturage. From 10 to 13 bushels of corn is required to produce 100 pounds of Pork.

The speaker began by saying that too many farmers were not particular whether they had the pedigree of their hogs or not. A pedigree is as essential as a deed to the land you are living on said Thompson as it is only to show that you have the permission to use the land and that no one can come along and make you move, just so with a pedigree it is the history of the changes and developments made in that particular breed and it is necessary that the farmer knows what he has. A few points in the care of the sows at the farrowing time that is worth considering. Corn is not a fit feed for breeding hogs. Keep living quarters clean, have good air, pure water and plenty of it and besides a well balanced ration.

Mrs. Ogg followed with a talk on Americanization, showing what was needed to be done in the way of caring for the foreigner. While this subject does not affect this community directly, yet we must face the situation as it is coming to us soon. The foreigners will make good citizens when they are made to learn our language and to know what America stands for.

The officers elected for next year are as follows:

Chairman, H. O. Waltz.
Vice Chairman, W. O. Lake.
Secretary-Treas., C. H. Hart.

The program committee consisting of O. K. Shull, Mesdames F. B. Leighty and T. A. Northrup were appointed by the new chairman.

The membership secured for the next institute is 112. The total attendance was 782. There was five sessions and the attendance was as follows at each session; 96-348-178-65-95.

A Word to the wise About Coal

We have been fortunate in securing shipment of coal during a time when coal and cars are very scarce. Do not think because we have a good supply on hand, now that we can get all the coal we want. It is still very hard to get and the car situation is becoming worse every day. Play safe and put in your supply to run you through the winter while we have it on hand. Your next door neighbor Defiance, Ohio, has been without light or gas, due to the town being out of coal.

Don't overlook that ground feed for your Hogs and Cattle. A full line on hand—get it before our supply runs out. Just received a carload of salt.

Obituary

(Intended for last Week.)

"Leaves have their time to fall.
And flowers to wither at the north wind's breath,
And stars to set—but all,
Thou hast all seasons for thy own, O Death."

Sarah Ann, daughter of Samuel and Joanna (Braerley) Widney was born in Concord Township, DeKalb County, Indiana, on November 8, 1840.

Samuel and Joanna Widney came to this county in 1836 from Franklin County, Pennsylvania and were among the earliest pioneers in this part of the country. On arriving at where St. Joe now stands, the family stayed with the Blairs until the log cabin could be erected on the land entered by the father, northeast in the forests.

To Samuel and Joanna Widney were born seven children: Jane, Charles, John, Joseph, Mary, James and Sarah Ann, the subject of this sketch, all of whom have now passed away.

On December 29, 1859, Sarah was united in marriage to Henry Hull the son of Hiram and Sarah (Sloane) Hull, and started their pioneer life on the old place where Clarence H. now lives. To this union were born three sons: Joseph A., who lives just north of the old place, Clarence H., who lives on the old place and Delbert L., who lives at Colorado Springs, Col.

In December 1890 the parents moved to St. Joe where on September 11, 1910, the husband and father passed away. Since that time, Grandma, as we all called her has lived alone or in company with some of her children, grandchildren or friends. She began failing nearly two years ago and finally passed to the Great Beyond on January 28, 1920, aged 78 years, 2 months and 20 days. She leaves to mourn her departure the three children, four grandchildren, two great-grand children and a multitude of relatives, friends and neighbors.

Grandma was the good friend of everyone always willing and wanting to divide what she had with her friends and neighbors. She united with the Lutheran Church at St. Joe in 1891, under pastorate of Rev. S. Nelson.

We may still love the departed, they are ours as ever, and we are theirs. But should we not drown our sorrows in the flood of light let through the rent vail of the sky where Jesus entered, and to alleviate our lonliness, gather to us other friends to walk life's way, knowing that every step brings us nearer to the departed and their sweet eternal home where Death never enters and partings are never known.

The funeral was held at the Lutheran Church, Friday morning at ten o'clock, her pastor, Rev. A. K. Mumma, officiating. E. R. Kinsey, funeral director.

CARD OF THANKS.

We wish to express our gratitude to the neighbors and friends for their kind service during the illness and death of our dear Mother, also for floral offerings.

Joseph Hull,
Clarence Hull,
Delbert Hull and Families.

Among those from out of town who attended the funeral of Mrs. Sarah Hull were: Will Hull, of near Auburn; Mrs. Emma Sleats, of Benton Harbor, Mich.; Morris Widney and wife, and Mrs. Cora Smith, of Auburn, Mrs. C. A. Patterson and Mrs. Hellis Dilley, of Ft. Wayne.

Catherine Vansile was born in Ashland County, Ohio, July 5, 1837, departed this life in Fort Wayne, Indiana, January 28, 1920, aged 82 years, 6 months and 23 days.

She united with the Lutheran Church at Spencerville at the age of seventeen years. On June 24, 1859 she was united in marriage to Enoch Hursh. To this union was born nine children. Five of whom survive, three daughters and two sons, namely, Mrs. Evaline Mitchell, St. Louis, Mo., Mrs. Lizzie Hay Spencerville, Ind., Mrs. Hannah Jane Rolfe, Jackson, Mich., Ezriah Hursh, Spencervill and Lloyd H. Hursh of Fort Wayne.

Four children and the husband having preceded her to the better world. She was left to care for this large family of children on March 7, 1877. She was a kind and loving mother always ready to help in time of need and will long be remembered by those who knew her.

On April 24, 1883 she was married again to Harrison A. Hursh. He also preceded her. She leaves to mourn her departure five children, twenty-one grandchildren, twenty-two great-grandchildren, five step children, four sisters, one brother and a host of other relatives and friends.

The funeral was conducted in the Leo M. E. Church by Rev. A. K. Mumma Friday afternoon and burial at the Spencerville cemetery.

GIRLS! A MASS OF WAVY, GLEAMY BEAUTIFUL HAIR

Let "Danderine" save and glorify your hair

In a few moments your can transform your plain, dull, flat hair. You can have it abundant, soft, glossy and full of life. Just get at any drug or toilet counter a small bottle of "Danderine" for a few cents. Then moisten a soft cloth with the Danderine and draw this through your hair taking one small strand at a time. Instantly, yes, immediately, you have doubled the beauty of your hair. It will be a mass, so soft, lustrous, fluffy and so easy to do up. All dust, dirt and excessive oil is removed.

Let Danderine put more life, color, vigor and brightness in your hair. This stimulating tonic will freshen your scalp, check dandruff and falling hair, and help your hair to grow long, thick, strong and beautiful.—Adv.

BREAKS YOUR COLD IN JUST A FEW HOURS

"Pape's Cold Compound" instantly relieves stuffiness and distress

Don't stay stuffed-up! Quit blowing and snuffling! A dose of "Pape's Cold Compound" taken every two hours until three doses are taken usually breaks up a severe cold and ends all grippe misery.

The very first dose opens your clogged-up nostrils and the air passages of the head; stops nose running; relieves the headache, dullness, feverishness, sneezing, soreness and stiffness.

"Pape's Cold Compound" is the quickest, surest relief known and costs only a few cents at drug stores. It acts without assistance, tastes nice, contains no quinine—Insist upon Pape's!—Adv.

ONLY WAY ASPIRIN SHOULD BE TAKEN

Look for name "Bayer" on tablets and follow directions in package.

The Bayer Company, who introduced Aspirin, tell in their careful directions in each package of genuine "Bayer Tablets of Aspirin" that to get the best results one or two glasses of water should be drank after taking tablets.

"Bayer Tablets of Aspirin" to be genuine must be marked with the safety "Bayer Cross." Then you are getting the world-famous Aspirin, prescribed by physicians for over eighteen years.

Each unbroken "Bayer" package contains proper directions for Colds, Headache, Toothache, Earache, Neuralgia, Lumbago, Rheumatism, Neuritis, and for Pain generally.

Handy tin boxes of twelve tablets cost but a few cents. Druggists also sell larger "Bayer" packages. Aspirin is the trade mark of Bayer Manufacture of Monoaceticacidester of Salicylicacid.—Adv.

BOSCHEE'S SYRUP.

A cold is probably the most common of all disorders and when neglected is apt to be most dangerous. Statistics show that more than three times as many people died from influenza last year, as were killed in the greatest war the world has ever known. For the last fifty-three years Boschee's Syrup has been used for coughs, bronchitis, colds, throat irritation and especially lung troubles. It gives the patient a good night's rest, free from coughing, with easy expectoration in the morning. Made in America and used in the homes of thousands of families all over the civilized world. Sold everywhere.—Adv.

PROBLEMS FACING STRICKEN WORLD

Shall Chaos or Reconstruction in Europe Follow the Great World War?

NEW, GREAT FORCES AT WORK

Demand for New Order of Things Is Universal and Reactionaries Merely Swell the Rising Tide of Discontent.

Article IV.

By FRANK COMERFORD.

The most obvious thing in Europe is the changed attitude of the people, and yet there are many, particularly in the conservative, employing class, who refuse to see. There are none so blind as these. While they close their eyes and minds to the obvious, the change goes on. It is not idle rhetoric to say that new great forces are at work. Of course you cannot see the forces any more than you can see the grass growing, but you can see the effects. You can measure the character of the forces.

Everywhere I found people talking about a new Order. Men separated by hundreds of miles are thinking and talking the same ideas. It startled me to hear the same ideas up in the Balkans that I had heard in France and England. I did not meet any one who was able to give me a clear, complete meaning of the phrase, but it is on the lips of everyone. It has a meaning, and time will produce a plan. The people are forward looking—they are thinking, waiting for something to happen. They have faith that it will happen and that it will bring great good to the human race. Every one seems confident that some great compensation must and will come out of the siege of suffering through which they have passed. If they were not so earnest, so sane, so determined about it I should have interpreted their enthusiasm as fantasy.

A meaningless minority of reactionaries scorn and scoff at all talk of a new Order. These are the backward-looking men of big business, the standpatters in politics. They are out of touch with the times; they think the real world is the little circle in which they live. They are the barnacles on big business. They smugly set down all talk of change as bolshevism. Fortunately the real leaders of business are breaking away from this point of view. Progressive, human and open minded, they see and know that unrest is a problem and that it must be solved. They are paying heed to the complaints of the workers. They admit that there is justice back of the complaints. Instead of arguing coercion, they are talking concession. They know a change has come, they want to meet it.

New Order Must Come.

A new Order will come. The one question that is bothering the minds of men who are awake to the change is, will it come through revolution or through evolution. The greatest friend of revolution is the stubborn employer who refuses to see the change, accepts things as they are, and insists upon the use of force as the only cure for unrest.

Money is a gross thing when compared with human life. To mention Europe's financial losses in the same breath with her dead and wounded, seems sordid, but it is an everyday world and in it money has its logical place. Since the war some people are thinking that money has had too important a place in the world. It has been charged with pushing man out of his place, but bills must be paid and Europe needs money. The war cost billions and billions of dollars. Millions of men had to be clad and shod, billions and billions of cartridges and shells, rifles, cannons, airplanes, ships, were made. Europe owes the money. How will she pay it; where will she get it? It is a question that even the wisest and most optimistic of men in Europe hesitate to answer. Some wonder, is there an answer?

Europe has borrowed until her interest charge today is almost as large as her whole cost of governmental administration was a few years ago. I heard Lloyd George say that England faced a yearly interest charge of three hundred million pounds. Another official told me that this interest charge that England must pay each year is nearly one hundred million pounds a year larger than the cost of administration was at the time of the Boer war. Only the other day her interest was due on some loans from the United States and she was forced to default, and our government charged the interest to the principal and passed the day of payment on. In the meantime the pound is going down in value. When I was on the Continent it had reached $4.14. Today it is under $3.87, and steadily going down.

France is in even a worse plight. The banks are loaded with government paper. She has made no provision by taxation to pay her debt. I was told on every hand that any effort to impose a tax would bring on a revolution. It is said that her debt has reached the startling figure of $640 for every man, woman and child in the country. When I left Cherbourg to sail for America a regulation had been put into effect prohibiting any one leaving France from taking money with him, either metal or paper money, in excess of a thousand francs, and on that day you could buy almost nine francs for an American dollar. Can France pay? The figures prove France insolvent. Her officials and her men of prominence say she cannot pay. Her war debt is enormous.

Poverty on Every Side.

Italy is as bankrupt as France. A forced loan temporarily held the lira from losing all of its value. Her war debt threatens the throne.

In the new Balkan countries we find no gold reserve, little but poverty. In Czecho-Slovakia the government closed the borders for ten days, commanded the people to bring their money to the banks where stamps were put on the bills. When they brought their money they were given 50 per cent of it back and receipts for the balance. In this way the government cut down the volume of paper money 50 per cent. Even after this was done in the city of Prague I bought kronens for less than two cents a piece.

In Poland every kind and species of paper money is in circulation. Her frontiers have not been fixed by the peace table, and the profiteers in money smuggling have dumped the worthless paper of Europe into Poland. In October I was in Warsaw and my recollection is that the mark was worth about two cents in American money. Poland has no metal money. She hasn't a gold reserve. Her struggle to get credit to keep her people from dying by the millions from hunger and cold is pitiful.

Austria is penniless, proverty-stricken. Vienna is a city of ghosts, listless, pepless, human beings. They drag their feet after them. Their heads are bent between their shoulders. The kronen was worth a cent when I was there in September, and even at that price there was practically nothing to buy. Austria in her extremity, her people starving, petitioned the peace table for the privilege of selling her art treasures and heirlooms. The plea was to exchange them for bread and coal. Necessity prompted the plea. The peace table refused the permission, holding that these things of value might be the only collateral out of which the allies could collect the indemnity.

Europe's debt is her crown of thorns, as her dead is her cross. Unrest is her Calvary. A new Order is her hope—her resurrection.

Facing Gigantic Task.

Europe is not dying; she is exhausted, tortured, confused. She is trying to find herself. She is putting all of her remaining strength into the effort. The task before her is stupendous. She must rebuild her house. She must nurse her wounded, care for her cripples. She has counted her losses, inventoried her possessions.

The past must bury its dead. Tomorrow is for the living. Today she is planning for the tomorrow. She must repair her house, put it in order. To understand her work, to know her plans, to feel her problem, it is necessary to know her thoughts.

Unrest is frightening her. Fear is keeping her from work. It is causing her to worry. With all her soul she is pleading to the rich and powerful to become as little children again, her children. She is telling them that the fate of the family is at stake, that they must make concessions to their more unfortunate brothers. She is trying to make them understand that they are brothers. Many of them have forgotten the relationship. When she urges them to stop wrangling and quarreling she is pleading for their common good, the family welfare. She is warning against the danger of justice too long denied, of unrest too long pent up. She is translating the mutterings and mumblings of the discontented. She knows the complaint in their hearts, she sympathizes, she understands.

This was Europe as I saw her in her black rags arising from the war.

Greatest American Humorist.

On the 30th of November, in 1835, Samuel Langhorne Clemens (Mark Twain) was born at Florida, Monroe county, Mo. Mark Twain first was a pilot on the Mississippi river. At the age of twenty-seven he began his literary career as city editor of a newspaper, the Enterprise, in Virginia City, Nev. He is the best known of American humorists, and his works have been widely translated. During his life-time Mark Twain lectured a great deal in this country and in Europe. He had a great charm of personality and was beloved by all who knew him. He died at Redding, Conn., April 21, 1910.

Shoemakers' Wax a Liquid.

It is not always possible to draw a very clear line of demarcation between a liquid and a solid. Shoemaker's wax, which is so brittle that the fragmentation obtained when a sheet of it is hit by a bullet resembles that in the case of the very brittle metal antimony, is actually a liquid. To show this place leaden bullets upon a sheet of shoemaker's wax and then support the whole upon corks. At the end of a month the corks will be found floating upon the sheet of wax instead of beneath it and the bullets will be at the bottom as in a liquid.

Judging by the heavy patronage in other such places, the new house may be filled at the chief performances. The public is seeking professional entertainment as never before.

THRIFT GARDEN PLANS ARE DUE

With Food Prices Still Soaring It Behooves People to Raise Own Vegetables.

HELP PRODUCTION OF FOOD

Prepare Plat in Advance So That the Right Things Will Be Planted in Proper Places at Right Time—Cuts Food Bills.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Members of the East Potomac Park Garden club, at Washington, D. C., paid themselves last year 90 cents an hour in vegetables as a result of their efforts on 40 by 100-foot garden plots. There were 300 of these home gardens, producing an average return of $84 worth of vegetables, or at the rate of $840 an acre. Not half bad, when it is considered that the average acre of farm land in the United States yields a gross return of a little less than $40. The all-important point, however, is that 300 families, or 1,500 people, were fed with fresh vegetables during the summer, and a supply was canned or stored for winter use.

Thousands upon thousands of home gardens were an important factor last year in supplying food, and it is important that many more thousands of gardens be placed in 1920. With food prices still soaring, it behooves every householder to plant a garden and grow his own supply of vegetables. The job of producing food for the nation has been well taken care of by the farmers, but the spare hours of industrial workers are now needed to supplement the efforts of the farmers, say specialists of the United States department of agriculture. The man or woman who works in the store, office, or factory cannot be of much direct assistance to the farmer, but can at least spend one or two hours every day in the cultivation of a vegetable garden in a back yard or vacant lot.

Home gardens are especially needed in densely populated sections, where the people are largely dependent upon transportation facilities for bringing their food to them. Every foot of suitable land in and around large cities should be made to produce its quota the coming season.

Time to Plan the Garden.

During January, while the southern gardener is planting peas, onions and potatoes the middle states gardener is looking over seed catalogues, and the New England and Minnesota gardeners have just settled down for a hard winter. It is just as important that the New England gardener be making his plans during January as that the southern gardener be planting his peas, onions and potatoes. Three months may constitute the growing season in certain parts of the extreme northern United States, and it is important that the northern gardener have all his plans made and be ready to make the most of the time at his disposal.

A Forecast of What Careful Planning Now Will Mean Next Summer.

Looking back over last season's garden experience, anybody can see just where improvements could have been made in his methods. Most home gardeners did not have a definite garden plan to begin with, and simply rambled along through the summer, doing things as they called for attention.

Plan of Work.

This season there should be a "plan of work" for all garden operations. You may depart more or less from this plan, but you should start right, anyway. The winter is the proper time to make plans and build castles. With a mental picture of last year's garden, proceed with the aid of pencil, rule and paper. Plan just what you are going to do in your garden this season.

First of all, the plan must conform to the size and shape of the garden plot. If only a small piece of land is available, careful planning is necessary in order to provide for the crops that you want to grow. Last year, perhaps, too much space was devoted to lettuce and radishes, and not enough to beets, carrots and beans. Some of the crops did very poorly because they were shaded by the corn and pole beans, and the cucumbers and squashes ran all over the late beets and carrots. Now, with your pencil, rule and paper, work out a plan whereby all, or most, of these difficulties will be avoided. Provide for crops and intercrops, also a succession of crops, so that the little garden plot will give maximum results.

Schedule of Work.

After the garden plan is made, and you know, or think you know, just how the garden will look after it is started, the next step will be to formulate a scheme of work providing for doing things at the proper season and time. This does not mean planting certain crops at the right time of the moon, but at the right season and when all conditions are favorable. The best gardeners believe that moonshine is just moonshine, anyway, and that real sunshine and some other things, such as fertilizer, good seeds, and plenty of work, are the essential requirements for growing a good garden.

With the lengthening of the days, it will not be long until work can be started in the garden. In the meantime seeds should be procured, a few tomato and cabbage plants should be started in a window box, and the first steps should be taken toward the planting of a thrift garden.

All over the country various organizations are studying ways and means to promote thrift and reduce the high cost of living. Begin now to plan a thrift garden for 1920.

WAYS TUBERCULOSIS MAY BE INTRODUCED

Easy Matter to Transmit Disease to Healthy Herd.

Various Means by Which Infection Is Spread Is Outlined by Department of Agriculture—Disorder Develops Slowly.

Tuberculosis may be introduced into a healthy herd, says the United States department of agriculture, by any of the following means:

By the addition of an animal that is affected with the disease; therefore animals should be purchased only from herds known to be free from tuberculosis, or from herds under supervision for the eradication of the disease.

By feeding calves with milk or other dairy products from tuberculous cows; this frequently occurs where the owner purchases mixed skim milk from the creamery and feeds it to his calves without first making it safe by boiling or pasteurization.

By showing cattle at fairs and exhibitions; reports have indicated that numerous herds become infected through mingling with infected cattle at shows or by occupying infected premises.

The shipment of animals in cars which have recently carried diseased cattle and which have not been disinfected properly.

Community pastures; pastures in which tuberculous cattle are allowed to graze are a source of danger.

In most cases the outward appearance of the animal bears no relation to the degree of infection. The disease frequently develops so slowly that in some cases it may be months or even longer before any symptoms are shown; therefore be on the safe side and have your herd tested.

FORECASTS OF GREAT VALUE

Weather Bureau's Predictions of Weather Aid Shippers of Various Farm Products.

The weather bureau's various forecasting services are of particular value to growers of produce that is shipped in the winter, says the United States department of agriculture. Supplementing the general forecasts which appear in the daily papers and on cards conspicuously posted the bureau issues, among other forecasts, special warnings on which shippers place much dependence. These tell of the approach of cold waves and permit carriers of perishable stuffs to give them the necessary additional protection, or to delay shipment until milder weather. One result of this special service to shippers, transportation companies, and allied interests is that buyers are less subject to uncertainty as to the arrival of shipments, since the hazard of shipping in cold weather is reduced. Another result is a reduction in the amount of foodstuffs that is injured by cold.

"I didn't enjoy one day of good health for more than two years," says Mrs. C. E. Wildes, 746 E. Georgia St., Memphis, Tenn. "At first I had nothing more than backache. Afterwards terrible attacks of pain left me weak and limp. My arms and limbs ached. My feet felt weighted with tons of lead. I couldn't walk without a cane and had to be carried to bed every night. I couldn't do a bit of work and kept my people busy rubbing my aching limbs. Sometimes my whole body became rigid. My feet were swollen twice their normal size.

—14—

"Billy, dear, do listen to reason for half a second. What are we going to tell the president? We haven't got the whole story even yet out of him"—I pointed in the direction of the dining room—"and there mustn't be any gap in it. We've got to see Mrs. Delario and get her evidence—we've got to see Claire—"

"He'll make her say anything."

"You and I can break her down under cross-examination. You see, we haven't a thing but his word—"

"And the diamonds," Billy interrupted. "I'm taking your word for those—you didn't see fit to show 'em to me."

His tone was a trifle sarcastic, indicating that there might still be some legitimate doubt as to the existence of the stones in question, in spite of all the adventure over them; but I ignored it and went on: "He made one slip—I saw it at the time, and now I can't remember what it was. It went slap out of my head and it was important—something about . . . No, I can't remember. It was a sort of key to something else—"

"Can't you think?" urged Billy. "Every little detail's important now. And lordy-lord—what a story, and my scoop!"

The reporter was romping around in Billy's inside, determined to push the story to a finish; while romping around in my insides was my natural caution. Why should we do anything to warn the Emperor William? He might deny everything and say he never even heard of the diamonds! Yes, one false step would make Billy and me the laughing-stock of diplomatic circles throughout the world. We must get all our proof before we divulged the secret on which the fate of our nation depended.

The net result of our hurried colloquy was that we returned to the dining room and silently relieved the still-sorrowing monsieur of his handcuffs. Which done, Billy presented him with leave of absence from our society in the words:

"Monsieur, you are free to go," and added a courtly bow.

I bowed also. Thus we signified with all the manners we possessed that the interview, pleasing as it had been, was at an end.

Our action—simple enough to us and in line with the plan we'd just mapped out for getting at the truth—left monsieur as dazed as anything we'd done; inexplicably, we had abruptly set him adrift, without threats or explanations and without—the diamonds. I smiled and said, quite as though he'd been drinking tea with me: "I'll say good night to you, monsieur." With that, I held out my hand.

Monsieur did not rise. He did not take my offered hand. He stared—a really frightened, childish stare, first at me, then at Billy. He had been dismissed—every second he longer remained marked him a trespasser. Yet he remained, glued to his chair and dumb. Speech seemed to have deserted him. Twice he essayed it, but the words stuck in his throat and he looked to us to help him out.

"Billy Dear, Do Listen to Reason."

The clock chimed the four-quarters to nine and then the hour. Monsieur spoke.

"I have place myself in your position as American and I appreciate your feeling," he began, and he went on to tell us as a man he grieved for us; how as a would-be friend he grieved for us; how as the emperor's messenger he grieved for us; and how I—in the innocent carrying off of a slipper from the customs house—one of a pair in which his daughter had, at his command, secreted a box of diamonds belonging to the emperor—had brought myself within the circle of implacable, all-seeing, all-avenging and never-ending wrath, whether the diamonds were lost, strayed, stolen from me, or drowned in the sea; wrath that would follow me and my name forever, world without end, amen.

"All right, let it," I replied curtly.

"But would it not be better to consider?" urged monsieur. "Ze wrass of ze emperor is terrible. Consider, madame, I beg you to consider. Zose diamonds zat you have found in zat slipper you have se misfortune to carry off. Consider to give zem back."

"They were not in the slipper I carried off."

Monsieur positively jumped. "Zey were not in zat slipper?"

"No—on my word of honor as a gentlewoman, monsieur, I tell you those diamonds were not in the slipper I carried off."

"Mon Dieu!" he said under his breath. "Madame Delario must have zem—in spite of her denial—in spite of zat I search ze entire house—and herself—and find also ze slipper in her wardrobe as she would not leave it if she find zoze diamonds."

"But she may not have found them—they may have fallen out, and got lost—"

"Impossible—impossible," he interrupted. "I have examine bose zoze slippers—you see it is zis way: My daughter have glue ze box in one, safe, and on an evening you tell Madame Delario to wear zoze slippers and Claire have but just time to remove ze box and she returns it to ze uzzer slipper. It is zat little accident—and some words from yourself—zat convince me it is yourself who has found zose diamonds—"

"No, monsieur. When you accused me of robbing Claire of jewelry I hadn't the least idea what you meant. I suppose you accused Mrs. Delario of the same thing? Didn't you accuse her of taking jewels from Claire—just as you did me—without specifying what kind of jewels?"

"Oui—yes. Naturally, I do not specify, for ze reason if she find ze diamonds, she know to what I refer; but if you have find zem, I do not tell for what I seek."

"Well, that's it, I do believe!" I exclaimed in the tone of having discovered the key to the whole difficulty. "You said jewels and she thought you meant what we should mean by it—as we use the word, we think of pins, bracelets, pendants, made-up articles, you understand."

"Ah, so zat is ze way of it!" he cried, popping off his chair in a hurry. "I see it is some error of idiom of ze language zat cause all ze trouble. I go immediately to ze estimable Madame Delario and explain all to her."

He took up his hat, which Billy had picked up off the floor after the scrimmage and laid on the dining-room table.

"Oh, monsieur—you a diplomat!" I flipped off. "And you think you can go to an American citizen after such accusations as you've made and say: 'It was all a mistake,' and settle everything?"

"But I apologise for ze mistake," he urged, as though his sweet apology paid for everything he'd done and brought forth a box of diamonds on a salver, here-they-are-thank-you-for-taking-them.

I laughed. "Suppose she won't accept your apology?" I asked, and before he got a reply, I added: "She probably won't even see you—not after the way you treated her."

"I bet she doesn't even see you," Billy supported, seeing my drive. "What are you going to do?" He was anxious to make monsieur commit himself.

Monsieur twisted his hands nervously and I kept the ball rolling by observing slyly: "You have just told us that the most profound secrecy must be maintained, so you cannot call in the police. But there is one thing you can do—" I paused.

He asked breathlessly, "And zat is—?"

"Go straight to the president and lay the whole case before him."

Monsieur looked as if he'd fall in a faint at my feet.

"Ze president—mon Dieu!" He used his handkerchief over his face. "Madame—in pity—out of se kindness of your so kind heart—I srow myself on your mercy—I, De Ravenol—and I ask you to help me in se recovery of zose diamonds in secret. I ask it for se sake of Claire. I ask on my knee—"

And the man was actually preparing to do it, too! But I, not being used to that sort of demonstration and seeing it as anything but a compliment that he felt he had to go such lengths to propitiate me—for I like to think myself at least decently approachable on common humane grounds—responded to his near-kneel with a peremptory, "Don't do it!" and a look and gesture that showed him he could save the histrionics. "How can I help you?" I questioned.

"It is a case for—diplomacy—in dealing wis se lady; and I ask—as a so great favor—zat you see Madame Delario and discover se truse from her, if she have find se little box—and persuade her to her duty to return it."

The net result of the remainder of the interview was that monsieur promised to relieve both Mrs. Delario and me of all espionage immediately—dismiss his solitary detective who was shadowing me—bring Claire to the house the next evening for a full confession of her part of the smuggling; while I promised to see Mrs. Delario the first thing in the morning and use all my influence with her.

"I think that is all—this evening," said I sweetly, giving him the hint to go.

I at once got Billy's coat and hat from my wardrobe, where they were hidden, and coming through the hall I managed to signal him to go along with monsieur.

They left together—apparently on the best of terms.

"Tomorrow I'll decide about going to the president," thought I, turning out the lights. "I've got everything all my own way now and nothing is going to happen tonight—that's one thing to be thankful for." And with these and similar fatuous maunderings and self-congratulations I tumbled into bed without even bothering to lock the kitchen door.

CHAPTER XIV.

"The Jewels Are Mine."

To this day I've never quite recovered from the astonishment and chagrin when on waking up in the morning I reviewed the case with a refreshed mind and realized with what ease De Ravenol had imprisoned both Mrs. Delario and me in our own homes and had us quaking in our boots in fear of our very lives!

Monsieur had managed Mrs. Delario even better than he had me—he had merely left a detective in her house to watch her by day and lock her up by night. In fact, she'd actually invited the detective in proof of her innocence; for when monsieur had accused her of stealing jewels she saw in her mind's eye—just as I did—trinkets, jewelry; and the idea that he was referring to seven unset diamonds caged in her slipper never entered her head.

"You have accused me of a shocking crime—a crime that offends every principle of decency as well as morals," she told him with spirit, "and I now insist that you convince yourself of my innocence before you leave the house. Here is the key to my bedroom—here is the passkey to all the other rooms. Have your man watch me while you examine everything—everything—and then you must get a woman to search me."

This unsolicited action, her flat denial and his finding the slipper where she'd carelessly dropped it in her wardrobe threw the scent on me. In two hours monsieur convinced himself that she did not have the diamonds and knew nothing about them, and he then requested her—as the proof of her noncomplicity—to let him lock her in her room and send for me! And she didn't dare to refuse!

And there you have, simple as simple could be, the whole of it. I had her side of the story when I saw her Sunday morning as monsieur's messenger. But I had enough of the story before I went to her to feel pretty well chagrined; yet sad, too, as I thought of the disappointment I had in store for her when I told her that Emperor William owned her "find" and how the diamonds came to be in her slipper.

I confess I didn't like very much the way she'd lied to me about the uncle abroad who had left them to her. Still—it was an understandable lie: since she'd found the diamonds and didn't know who owned them she felt they belonged to her as much as if they'd been left her in a will.

Mrs. Delario herself admitted me; gave a gasp when she saw who it was, and whirled me into the seance room and locked the door on us before we exchanged a syllable.

We sank into chairs. I felt as if a tidal wave had swept from under me and left me not even hanging up in a coconut tree but sitting still in peaceful security. It was she who got us down from the high peaks to the levels where conversation can go afoot without falling off, by asking, "And how are you—after it all?" to which I replied, "But how are you—after it all?" and we both laughed.

Her laugh died away into an indignant frown. "You never heard anything like it," she cried. "He came here with a detective—and it wasn't five minutes after you got out of the house, Monday—and accused me—me!—of stealing Claire's bracelets!"

"Bracelets?" I echoed.

"Yes—me."

I said "Oh," slowly. I hadn't expected she'd grind the word jewels quite so fine.

"Did you ever hear anything quite so outrageous?" she rushed on. "To come here and say I robbed his child of jewelry! I don't believe she had any jewelry, anyway—it was all a trumped-up story to get something out of me; but I was so indignant—" and she poured out the whole tale.

"Well, it's all over," she concluded "I didn't care how much monsieur searched—I knew I hadn't robbed Claire, and I knew that so long as you had my diamonds they were safe I didn't worry after the first day or so."

She said "my diamonds," and now I had to tell her!

"Mrs. Delario there seems to be a misunderstanding about those diamonds," I began suavely.

She gave a start and asked, "How, misunderstanding? You mean they're not worth all you said? Well—you didn't tell me positively they were worth—that." She seemed to hesitate at "a million dollars," which is what I said.

"Oh, yes—I still stick to that—that's the worst of it: they are worth it—that's what made them shining targets for that thief."

"Thief!" she cried. "You say 'thief,' too! Then he was, after all!" She was very much excited, and repeated the word several times with a kind of joy and ran on rapidly: "I wouldn't tell you what I thought about him, but I knew he was a thief. I knew it in Paris—I knew it in Antwerp—it was in Antwerp—after I'd made all the arrangements to bring Claire over—that I heard it clairaudiently, 'De Ravenol is a thief.' I knew it here—in this very room—the first time he came." And then she smiled at me benignantly: "And thanks to you he didn't get my diamonds, so we're safe—Claire's safe—she'll never know the truth about her father from me.

"Claire never had any jewelry—the whole accusation was trumped up to get the chance to rob me. But how under the sun did he know I had those diamonds?"

"He says he put them there—or at least Claire did—in your slipper," I blurted.

Her hands flew to her heart. "Never!" she cried. "Never in the world!"

"And he says they're his," I persisted, feeling I'd got my opening at last. I put it that way partly to disabuse her mind of the idea that monsieur was a thief; partly to save her from the too sudden shock of the Emperor William. I saw I'd have to let her down gradually.

"They're mine," she returned vehemently. "I swore to you they were mine. I swear to you again—now—here—in the sight of God—they are mine. Consider—" her tone was all appeal now, "if they had not been mine—if I had stolen them from Claire—would I have shown them to you? Would I have asked you to help me dispose of them?"

I was forced to admit, "No—of course not"—I had already taken that into consideration.

"Yes—I grant you that you honestly believe they're yours," I admitted. "But what I've got to know is, how they came to be yours."

She told me then, hesitating no longer, the unbelievable story—unbelievable by every modern standard and from every scientific point of view, explaining why she'd prevaricated in the first instance about her uncle. It wasn't, after all, quite what you'd call by so harsh a name as lying.

Best Preparation for Writer.

"Read the Bible for illumination, knowledge and power," said Dana; "'Gulliver's Travels' for detail, and Robert Louis Stevenson for style." Any man or woman who will make a study of the Bible, and who will analyse "Gulliver's Travels" and sing Robert Louis Stevenson into his heart, will become a good writer, provided there is also natural talent to start with.

LESSON FOR FEBRUARY 15

PETER AND CORNELIUS.

LESSON TEXT—Acts 10.

GOLDEN TEXT—The same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon him.—Rom. 10:12.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL—Acts 15: 1-35; Gal. 2:1-21.

PRIMARY TOPIC—God's Love for Everybody.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Peter Wins a Roman Captain.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Overcoming of Prejudice.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Significance of the Conversion of Cornelius.

The conversion of Cornelius broke down the "middle wall of partition" between the Jews and Gentiles (Eph. 2:4).

1. Cornelius (vv. 1, 2).

1. His official position (v. 1). He was a Roman officer over a company of 100 soldiers, perhaps of about the same rank as a captain in the American army.

2. His character (v. 2). (1) A devout, pious man. His heart was filled with godly fear. (2) He was a praying man; he observed the Jewish hour of prayer. (3) He was charitable; he gave much alms. (4) He was respected by his family.

The Lord chose Cornelius for the transition of the Gospel to the Gentiles because of his character and position. No Jew could find any fault with him. He was a good man, but not a saved man.

II. The Supernatural Preparation for the Transition of the Gospel to the Gentiles (vv. 3-33).

1. Two visions were given. (1) The vision of Cornelius (vv. 3-8). While engaged in prayer an angel of God instructed him to send to Joppa for Peter, who would tell him what to do. The angel told him that Peter lodged with Simon, a tanner, to show Cornelius that Peter was not the strictest Jew. The calling of a tanner was regarded as unclean by the strict Jews, and the tanners were commanded to dwell apart. Cornelius sent at once for Peter. He was living up to the best light he had, so he received more. (2) The vision of Peter (vv. 9-16). This took place while Peter was praying (v. 9). If one would receive visions from God, let him pray to God; for the heavens are open to those who pray. He saw a certain vessel containing clean and unclean animals let down from heaven, and heard the command: "Rise, Peter; kill, and eat." Peter protested that he had never eaten any unclean thing. God replied: "What God hath cleansed, call not thou common." This vessel let down from heaven and taken back indicated that both Jew and Gentile were accepted on high.

2. Messengers from Cornelius (vv. 17-22). Peter was greatly perplexed over what he had seen, but not for long; for messengers from Cornelius made inquiry at the gate for him. The spirit informed Peter of the matter and bade him go, nothing doubting.

3. The meeting of Cornelius and Peter (vv. 23-33). (1) Peter took six witnesses along (v. 23). He had the good judgment to know that on a matter of so great importance he must have witnesses. This was proved at the Jerusalem council in the consideration of the question of the reception of the Gentiles into the church (11:1-18). (2) Cornelius waiting for Peter (v. 24). He called together his kinsmen and near friends. (3) Cornelius about to worship Peter (vv. 25, 26). Peter repudiated this act and protested that he was but a man. The true man of God not only dislikes, but refuses to be worshiped. (4) The reciprocal explanation (vv. 27-33). Peter explained to him how God had taken from him his Jewish prejudice and asked that Cornelius state the purpose of his having sent for him. Cornelius explained how God had appeared unto him and instructed him to send for Peter.

III. Peter's Sermon (vv. 34-43).

1. The introduction (vv. 34, 35). He showed that God is no respecter of persons, but that in every nation those who fear God and work righteousness are accepted of him.

2. The discourse (vv. 36-43). In the discourse he touches briefly upon the mission of Jesus, showing that by means of his baptism and anointing with the Holy Spirit he was qualified for his work as mediator. He then exhibited the work of Christ (1) in his life (vv. 36-39). (2) In his death (v. 39). (3) In his resurrection (vv. 40, 41).

IV. The Holy Spirit Poured Out (vv. 44-48).

This was a new Pentecost. As the Gospel was entering upon its widest embrace the Spirit came in new power.

Power of Faith.

Christianity has its best exponents in the lives of the saints. It is only when our creeds pass into the iron of the blood that they become vital and organic. Faith if not transmuted into character has lost its power.—C. L. Thompson.

Says Dodd's Kidney Pills Wonderful Remedy

Mrs. Della Olson, of New London, Wis., like many others, knows after experiencing the use of Dodd's Kidney Pills that they are unexcelled. Here is what Mrs. Olson recently wrote us:

"I suffered with rheumatism for years. There was a gravel deposit in the urine and I had frequent headaches. I had dark circles around my eyes and was always tired. I bought a box of your Dodd's Kidney Pills and am glad I did, for I secured quick relief and think they are a wonderful remedy."

Mighty few people realize in time that kidney trouble is making its advances upon their health. They put off treatment—they say, "Oh, I'll be all right in a day or two." And the malady tightens its grip. Result: Bright's Disease, hospital treatment, doctors' bills—often death.

When you have backache, dizziness, pain in loins, stiffness in stooping or lifting, spots before the eyes, sediment in secretions, rheumatic pains, or swollen joints, immediately start toning the kidneys by the regular use of the remedy endorsed by hundreds of users—DODD'S kidney Pills.

If your druggist does not carry these, order direct, sending us 60c in stamps and mention your druggist's name.

Mrs Orpha Carper Dead

Pneumonia, resulting from an attack of influenza, caused the death Monday evening at 5 o'clock of Mrs. Orpha Draggoo-Carper, 32 years old, and wife of Milton Carper of east of Auburn. Her death is the first out of fourteen children.

Mrs. Carper had been sick about a week. Her condition was not considered serious until Saturday night when pneumonia developed and she grew rapidly worse until death came. She leaves three little children. She was born October 22, 1887, in Concord township, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Draggoo. Her mother died some years ago but her father survives her. She was reared in Concord township and spent her entire life in the county. In 1909 she was united in marriage to Milton Carper and for the past four or five years they have lived east of Auburn. At the present time they are on the John Bunge farm.

She was a member of the Methodist Protestant Church at Concord but she was an attendant at the Methodist Church in Auburn. She leaves to mourn the loss of a kindly mother, a dear wife and a good friend, her husband, Milton Carper; three children, Lloyd Clayton, age 9 years; Ruth Marseille, 7 years old and Mary Josephine, 2 years old. Besides these of her immediate family thirteen brothers and sisters, Mrs. Mary Bartlett of Fort Wayne; Mrs. Dema Hull of near Spencerville; Mrs. Cora Kellar of near Butler; Mrs. Ruth Provines of east of Auburn; Mrs. Bertha Brown of near Auburn; Will of Morristown, N. J.; Mrs. Hattie Johnson of near Concord; Delbert proprietor of the store at Concord; Orange of Norten, Kan.; John of Beulah, Mich.; Lloyd of Concord township; Mrs. Sadie Coyle and Frank, at Auburn.

The funeral will be held at the M. E. Church in Auburn, today, (Thursday,) leaving the house at 10:00 o'clock. Interment in Woodlawn cemetery.

Notice of Sale of Drainage

Melvin J. Herrick, et. al. Drain.

Notice is hereby given that I, John D. Smith, Superintendent of a certain public drain known as the Melvin J. Herrick et. al. Drain, established by the order of the Board of Commissioners of DeKalb County, Indiana, on the petition of Melvin J. Herrick et. al., will, on Saturday, February 21st. 1920., at ten o'clock A. M., at the Office of the Surveyor of DeKalb County, Indiana, in the City of Auburn, DeKalb County, Indiana, let at public out cry to the lowest and best bidder the work of constructing said drain and all laterals, arms, spurs and branches thereto in accordance with the Report of the Drainage Commissioners therein, which report is now on file in the Office of the Auditor of DeKalb County, Indiana. Said work to be construction will be let as a whole. Said work to be completed at such time as can be agreed upon between the superintendent of construction thereof and the contractor or contractors. Said superintendent of construction reserves the right to reject any and all bids. The successful bidder must be prepared to give a bond in an amount and with surety satisfactory to said superintendent of construction at the time of said sale and before the contract will be awarded.

Dated January 28th., 1920

Titan 10-20 Kerosene Tractor.

REMEMBER this when you buy a tractor—Harvester service is a reliable and very important thing you get "thrown in" when you buy the tractor named above. It safeguards your entire outfit—Power, Machine, Hitch! Later on, if you need a tractor part you will get it with the same dispatch and certainty of perfect fit that you have experienced in connection with your binders and mowers.

Titan 10-20 kerosene tractor is built to operate from start to finish on low-priced kerosene (coal oil), or distillate. It does more than simply run on kerosene—it delivers its full-rated horse power or does any kind of work within its capacity on any kind of oil fuel above 39 degrees Baume.

This means that at the present prices of gasoline and kerosenn in this locality you will save fully one-half your fuel costs over a tractor of equal horse power operating on gasoline. Getting down to a dollars-and-cents basis, if a Titan 10-20 is used, you will be able to make a saving of $1,000 on fuel alone in five years of 1,000 hours work each.

THE HOUSEWIFE—
Experiences of Ohio Women

Findlay, Ohio.—"My experience with Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription during expectancy has been all that could be desired. I was so weak and sickly that I could scarcely do my own housework for months before my second child came, and I was nauseated all the time until I started to take 'Favorite Prescription.' The first bottle gave me so much comfort and strength that I decided to continue its use through the entire period. My baby weighed ten pounds and I had practically no suffering; was ill only a little over an hour. This was so entirely different from my first experience that I would never dare go thru expectancy without the aid of 'Favorite Prescription.'" —Mrs. Orean Radabaugh, 516 South St.

Bryan, Ohio.—"I consider Dr. Pierce's medicines of the very best. I have taken the 'Favorite Prescription' as a special tonic when I was run-down and it was excellent, giving perfect satisfaction. And during the time that my children were small I relied a great deal on Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser for advice when they would become sick, and it saved many spells of sickness in my family and doctor bills, too."—Mrs. Harriet Easterly.

Conneaut, Ohio.—"I have the greatest faith in Dr. Pierce's remedies because I took the 'Favorite Prescription,' and it was only a short while before I was feeling better and eventually I was cured of my trouble, for I never had a recurrence of woman's weakness afterward. I have taken 'Favorite Prescription' since, whenever I have felt the need of a special tonic, and also the 'Pleasant Pellets' when in need of a laxative, and not once have I been disappointed."—Mrs. Phebe Farlin, 404 Washington St.

Teamster's Life Saved

"Peterson Ointment Co., Inc. I had a very severe sore on my leg for years. I am a teamster. I tried all medicines and salves, but without success. I tried doctors, but they failed to cure me. I couldn't sleep for many nights from pain. Doctors said I could not live for more than two years. Finally Peterson's Ointment was recommended to me and by its use the sore was entirely healed. Thankfully yours, William Haase, West Park, Ohio, care P. G. Reits, Box 198."

Peterson says: "I am proud of the above letter and have hundreds of others that tell of wonderful cures of Eczema, Piles and Skin Diseases."

LESS MEAT IF BACK AND KIDNEYS HURT

Take a Glass of Salts to Flush Kidneys If Bladder Bothers You.

Eating meat regularly eventually produces kidney trouble in some form or other, says a well-known authority, because the uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish; clog up and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region; rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity; also to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts cannot injure anyone; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus avoiding serious kidney disease.—Adv.

All the world's a fruit basket and the big fruit is always on top.

COAX 'EM

Stop Whipping Bowels Into Activity, but take "Cascarets"

Put aside the Salts, Pills, Castor Oil, or Purgative Waters that irritate and lash the bowels into action but which do not thoroughly cleanse, freshen and purify these drainage organs, and have no effect whatever upon the liver and stomach.

Keep your "insides" pure and fresh with Cascarets, which thoroughly cleanse the stomach, remove the undigested, sour food and foul gases, take the excess bile from the liver and carry out of the system all the constipated waste matter and poisons in the bowels which are keeping you half sick, headachy, and miserable.

Cascarets tonight will make you feel great by morning. They work while you sleep—never gripe, sicken or cause inconvenience. Cascarets cost so little too.—Adv.

Shave With Cuticura Soap

And double your razor efficiency as well as promote skin purity, skin comfort and skin health. No mug, no slimy soap, no germs, no waste, no irritation even when shaved twice daily. One soap for all uses—shaving, bathing and shampooing.—Adv.

OPEN NOSTRILS! END COLD OR CATARRH

How to Get Relief When Head and Nose Are Stuffed Up.

Count fifty. Your cold in head or catarh disappears. Your clogged nostrils will open, the air passages of your head will clear and you can breathe freely. No more snuffling, hawking, mucous discharge, dryness or headache, no struggling for breath at night.

Get a small bottle of Ely's Cream Balm from your druggist and apply a little of this fragrant antiseptic cream in your nostrils. It penetrates through every air passage of the head, soothing and healing the swollen or inflamed mucous membrane, giving you instant relief. Head colds and catarrh yield like magic. Don't stay stuffed-up and miserable. Relief is sure.—Adv.

PUBLIC HIGHWAYS

CLEAR SNOW FROM HIGHWAYS

Motortrucks Given Passageway for Carrying Coal and Various Other Supplies.

In an effort to keep all lines of supply open for uninterrupted traffic during the winter months, and to thus aid in minimizing the discomforts of the public, an appeal is going out to highways authorities throughout the country where snowfall is heavy, to keep the roads clear of snow.

Emphasis is placed upon the fact that the transportation of coal and other fuel is more important in winter than in summer, and that it is equally as important to keep rural mail routes and main market roads free from snow as it is to keep railroad tracks clear.

Officials connected with highway work anticipate a prompt response to this appeal. They report a decided increase in the interest of the public on this matter of prompt removal of snow from highways, not only to meet the necessity of keeping all sources of supply and communication in effective operation, but as a means of protecting the public's investment in roads.

If there were little or no demand for traffic during snow weather, highway authorities state the cost of snow removal would be justified. Snow melting on the roadbeds tends to soften the subgrade and loosens the base under the wearing surface. Evidences of these damages may be seen after heavy snows in the late winter and early spring.

When snow is not removed on trunk highways, traffic gradually breaks its way through when thaw begins. The traffic will create one or two sets of ruts or tracks. The constant tracking in the same rut produces disastrous results to the road surface, making repairs difficult and expensive.

ACTIVITY IN HIGHWAY WORK

Up to July 1, 1919, State Bonds Aggregating $224,800,000, Had Been Authorized.

Aside from money to be used co-operatively under the federal aid road act, aggregating nearly $680,000,000, some states will expend large sums, and their several subdivisions will provide large additional amounts.

"It is interesting to note that up to July 1, 1919," says the secretary of agriculture in his annual report, "state bond issues aggregating $224,800,000 had been authorized and approved by popular vote and that provision has been made for voting next year on proposals for the issuance of additional state road bonds to the extent of approximately $314,000,000. During the present and the next fiscal year there will be made available for road improvement at least $1,000,000,000. Certainly few laws, if any, have produced greater results, either in terms of expenditures for a good purpose or in terms of helpful legislation and machinery, than the federal aid road act. It seems clear, in the circumstances, that the principal limiting factors in the 1920 program will be those of rail transportation for, and production of, suitable road materials, the contractors' organizations available, and the labor supply."

SENTIMENT FOR BRICK SEEN

Adherents of This Type Claim Defects Are Caused by Poor Concrete Foundation.

During the last couple of years there has been a growing sentiment for construction of brick pavements on bituminous foundations. The adherents of this type claim that some of the defects of the brick pavement are caused by the defect in the concrete foundation. They claim that the bituminous base would be more resilient.

LIFE'S LITTLE JESTS

ICONOCIASM.

"So you are just back from England?"

"Yes, and terribly disappointed."

"What happened?"

"I have always thought England a romantic country and none of its sports more picturesque than fox hunting."

"Well?"

"I saw an English squire following his pack in a flivver."

Out to Pasture.

"Give you $10 for this old auto, colonel."

"It is not for sale."

"But this junk is merely cluttering up the yard."

"Out of my sight. I used to turn a faithful old horse out to pasture. Why should I think less of my faithful old car?"

A Bright Idea.

"That photographer has a bright idea."

"What is it?"

"To print his pictures on a phonograph record of the voice."

"What's the idea?"

"To be able to say that his portraits are speaking likenesses."

BACK AND FORTH.

"How could you have walked as many miles when you've been in all day."

"What with the children playing in the back yard and a family moving in across the street I haven't had a minute's rest."

"It's not such a bad world after all."

"What's happened? Has somebody paid a bill you thought you'd never collect?"

"Oh, that's been patched up."

Woman.

"Jones' wife found a bottle washed up on the seashore and she was disappointed because it didn't have a love note in it."

"And how about Jones?"

"Oh, he was disappointed because it didn't have a drink in it."

And It Did.

"That imbecility is not on the wane, perusal of the following lines will amply demonstrate."

Up-to-Date Riches.

"Jones has secured his pile, all right."

"Plenty of the long green, has he?"

"Long green, nothing! I was referring to his coal pile."

Natural Propensity.

"How was it you managed to teach your parrot such long learned words?"

"Why, it was quite natural for a parrot to take to polly-syllables."

A Modest Hope.

"I haven't heard any mention of you as a favorite son."

"No," replied Senator Sorghum. "After some of the comments my constituents have made about public expenses, I'll be glad to get by without being mentioned as a prodigal son."

His Status.

"Who was this great god Pan who was always hypnotizing people by playing with pipes?"

"I guess he was the boss plumber of the ancients."

Simply Worn Out

How Many Women Are Like This?

Can anything be more wearing for women than the ceaseless round of household duties? Oh! the monotony of it all—work and drudge; no time to be sick; tired, ailing, yet cannot stop. There comes a time when something "snaps" and they find themselves "simply worn out," and to make matters worse, have contracted serious feminine disorder which almost always follows the constant overtaxing of a woman's strength.

Then they should remember that there is no remedy like Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound—the experience of these two women establishes that fact:

Cedar Rapids, Ia.—"After the birth of my last child I had such painful spells that would unfit me entirely for my housework. I suffered for months and the doctor said that my trouble was organic ulcers and I would have to have an operation. That was an awful thing to me, with a young baby and four other children, so one day I thought of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and how it had helped me years before and I decided to try it again. I took five bottles of Vegetable Compound and used Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash and since then I have been a well woman, able to take care of my house and family without any trouble or a day's pain. I am ready and thankful to swear by your medicine any time. I am forty-four years old and have not had a day's illness of any kind for three years." —Mrs. H. Koenig, 617 Ellis Blvd, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

Sandusky, Ohio.—"After the birth of my baby I had organic trouble. My doctor said it was caused by too heavy lifting and I would have to have an operation. I would not consent to an operation and let it go for over a year, having my sister do my work for me as I was not able to walk. One day my aunt came to see me and told me about your medicine—said it cured her of the same thing. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and used Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash and they have cured me. Now I do my own housework, washing and ironing and sewing for my family and also do sewing for other people. I still take a bottle of Vegetable Compound every spring for a tonic. I recommend your medicine to others who have troubles similar to mine and you can use my letter if you wish."—Mrs. Paul Papenfuss, 1325 Stone St., Sandusky, Ohio.

GETS ALL BUT THE GOBBLE

Showing How a Chef Who Really Knows His Business Can Dissect a Turkey.

Ever ask Charlie Baer, Claypool hotel chef, how to carve a turkey when turkey is 60 cents a pound and you want to save everything but the gobble? Ever ask Charlie? Go at it this way:

"Charlie, I've invested my life's savings in a turkey. I want to make that bird pay."

"Oh, yes, yes," Charlie answers. "Yes, yes."

Then he grabs a turkey and a butcher knife—turkey in the left hand, knife in the right! Zippy! Off comes a leg! Zippy! Off comes the other leg! Zippy! Off comes one wing! Zippy! Off comes the other wing!

Then all you have to do is to draw the knife gently through the white meat.

"And you can make soup out of the neck and sauce out of the giblets," said Charlie.

See? That's how!

Help! Help!

Another horrible pun has been perpetrated—this time in the South. An exchange, whose name we withhold to save it from the fury of the mob, remarks: "The orgy of high prices will continue as long as the people are willing to pay the orgynists."—Boston Transcript.

Volubility Not Wanted.

When you find people who can say volumes about nothing you can usually put it down they are short somewhere. A man with ideas that count seldom wears out his vocabulary trying to advertise the idea. He lets the ideas stand on their own feet. The fact is he doesn't need to do so much for a thing that can stand alone. And what's more, ideas have a way of being able to deliver pretty strong argument. When they are founded on truth there is no way of getting back of them. The fact that others refuse to accept them does not discount them. They stand on their own merits to be recognized and used when people learn to appreciate their value. History reveals the fact that her biggest men were men of small speech.

A Heart Affair.

STATE NEWS

Indianapolis.—Some of the trappers in Indiana are advocating a change in state laws relative to killing and taking fur-bearing animals, according to letters reaching the state conservation commission. Chief objection to the law is that mink and muskrat can be trapped from November 1 to April 1, while raccoon, fox, opossum, skunk and other fur-bearers are trapped between November 20 and February 2. This frequently produces conflict between trappers and the regulations, for while it is lawful to trap mink and muskrat to April 1 it is unlawful to take other fur after February 2, and not infrequently these animals will be caught in traps set for animals lawful to trap until April. Often the captured animal is badly injured and must be killed. Thus the trapper is liable to arrest unless he destroys the fur.

Indianapolis.—Householders of Indiana who have been getting by on small personal tax returns in the past by listing all the household goods or farms implements in a lump sum are due for a jolt when the 1920 assessing period starts. In the new sample return forms that have been mailed to all assessing officers in the state by the state board of tax commissioners there appears for the first time an itemized schedule of 89 household articles, and another list of farm implements. In making the return the householder or farmer will be required to set out the value of each piece of furniture or implement.

Michigan City—Thomas M. Batchelor, Albert C. Batchelor, James H. (Red) Parker and Dan Trkulja were taken from the state prison here to Crown Point for new trials. The four men were arrested last June following an attempt to hold up the First State bank in Tolleston, a suburb of Gary. Herman Uecker, the cashier, was shot and killed at the time and C. E. Phillips, the assistant cashier, was slightly wounded. The men entered pleas of guilty to murder charges and were sentenced to die.

Washington, D. C.—Charles P. O'Leary, census supervisor at Terre Haute, was the first of the Indiana census supervisors to send in results of the census enumeration in Indiana. O'Leary's returns, it was said at the census bureau, were received only two days after the returns from a part of Manhattan, which were the first to be received. Allowing for the difference in time it takes Indiana returns to reach Washington, O'Leary's returns were only one day behind the first to be received.

Noblesville.—The Hamilton county board of education has voted not to adopt the salary scale for teachers recommended by the state superintendent of public instruction. Walter Harger, county superintendent, told the board that there will be plenty of teachers in the county next year and that there are nearly enough applicants enrolled to fill every place in the county during the terms of 1920-21.

Kokomo.—As a result of a decision in the Grant circuit court at Marion the stockholders in the Farmers' Mutual Live Stock Insurance company of Matthews are not liable for claims that have long been pending against the defunct company. A large number of farmers in Howard, Tipton and Grant counties had taken out policies, and as a consequence were stockholders. All of these were made parties to the suit.

Goshen.—The influenza epidemic situation here has become so serious that the city board of health issued a drastic order prohibiting public funerals and forbidding persons in any stage of influenza to be in churches, theaters or any other public or semi-public places. Within 36 hours 15 residents of Elkhart county died of influenza or pneumonia. Many Goshen factories are being operated with difficulty.

Petersburg.—Insects have attacked a number of large locust groves in this county and have killed many of the trees that had been set out years ago to be used for posts in the coal mines. Farmers say the insects are multiplying because of the scarcity of birds that preyed on these pests. The sapsucker and the woodpecker that once abounded in this part of Indiana have almost disappeared.

Washington.—For the first time in its history the Daviess circuit court was convened for the February term without a single case on the criminal docket. Divorce suits and personal injury damage suits against coal mining companies are in the majority on the civil calendar. The probate and civil dockets contain the average number of proceedings.

Anderson.—County Auditor Hardie informed the county commissioners that he had been advised unofficially that the state tax board would allow no more bond issues for paved roads in Madison county. Seven petitions for roads are pending before the commissioners.

Indianapolis.—The annual report of the state board of charities on those in county poor asylums, made public by Amos W. Butler, secretary, shows that on August 31, 1919, the 92 county poor asylums and the Marion County Asylum for the Insane were caring for 3,188 persons of whom 2,025 were men and 1,113 women. Of this number, 290 men and 365 women were feebleminded, 268 men and 212 women insane, and 61 men and 110 women epileptic. One hundred and one of the epileptics were also insane or feebleminded.

Indianapolis.—With the favorable decision of the Indiana appellate court sustaining the horizontal increases in assessments made by the state board of tax commissioners, there remains no litigation of prime importance affecting the 1919 assessments or the taxes to be collected this year. The court decision disposes of eight similar cases in other counties. The counties in which attacks on the increases have been made in the courts are: Allen, Clay, Clinton, Dekalb, Johnson, Tippecanoe, Vigo and Whitley. Had the higher court sustained the Marion superior court in rejecting the horizontal increases it is said suit against the increase would have been filed in virtually every county in the state.

Shelbyville.—The Shelby county farmers, through their county organization, are demanding a standard test for wheat, and have arranged for a representative of the government agricultural department to hold a meeting here soon with the farmers, threshermen and grain dealers to discuss the matter. The farmers desire that the wheat be graded the same at the machine as at the elevator, and say that in the past the same test has not been made. Many grain dealers are co-operating with the farmers in the movement. The County Farmers' association has also decided to put on a corn test here, in order to provide better seed.

Indianapolis.—This city was chosen for the next convention of the Associated Building Contractors of Indiana, who closed their second annual session following the election of officers. A. J. Hoffman of Evansville was re-elected president and C. C. Pierson of Indianapolis was re-elected secretary. Other officers elected were Max Irmscher of Fort Wayne, first vice president; Charles Morrow of Muncie, second vice president, and O. A. Roello of Terre Haute, third vice president.

Jeffersonville.—Late sown wheat has benefited by the recent ice glaze, according to some farmers. Since the ice has gone the late wheat has been coming up and looks in fair condition. Early wheat on the other hand has been damaged. It is estimated that the crop in this county will not be one-half of last year's yield, and perhaps not more than one-third. Oats will be sown in many places where wheat has not come up.

Terre Haute.—The first suit to test the constitutionality of what is known as the "shotfirers law," enacted at the last regular session of the state legislature, was brought in the superior court by the Glendale Coal company of this city. A perpetual injunction to prevent Perry S. Douglass, prosecuting attorney, from bringing criminal action against operators or their employees for violation the law is sought.

Indianapolis.—Officers and directors of the Indiana Tuberculosis association were elected at the closing session of a two-day convention in conformity with the recommendations of the nominating committee as follows: Dr. Gardner C. Johnson, Evansville, president; Dr. Alfred Henry, Indianapolis, vice president; Mrs. Ella B. Kehrer, Anderson, recording secretary; James W. Lilly, Indianapolis, treasurer.

Vincennes.—Vincennes will be one of the seven district bases in Indiana for the reconstruction and maintenance of 600 miles of highways under the new system planned by the Indiana highway commission, according to H. R. Kroh, field secretary of the Hoosier State Automobile association. The Vincennes territory runs to Evansville and Sullivan and 50 miles east.

Goshen.—Since Goshen has been advanced from a city of the fifth class to one of the fourth class, powers of the common council have been so reduced that the body has voted to meet only once a month, instead of twice a month as heretofore. The city is now practically managed by the board of public works.

South Bend.—Americanization is to be carried to aliens in South Bend by the organization of schools in the factories of the city. Heretofore the schools have been established in connection with the public school system, and classes have been conducted in the buildings of the school of the city with excellent success.

Evansville.—A petition for a 50 per cent increase in the salaries of the teachers in the public schools here has been signed by more than 250 teachers.

Winchester.—Drilling for oil will start soon on 34 acres of land near Winchester. One well will be drilled on the Anderson Lasley farm and another on the Vanlandingham farm. A Minneapolis syndicate has put up half the money for the work and the rest is local capital.

Shelbyville.—Stockholders of the Shelby County Fair association, at the annual meeting held here, voted unanimously to ask the Shelby County Farmers' association to co-operate and affiliate with the fair association, in an effort to make the annual fair a greater mecca for live stock and farm products produced in the county.

Indianapolis.—John G. Brown of Monon, president of the Indiana Federation of Farmers' Associations, returned from Washington, D. C., where he attended a series of conferences with the government officials. He said that he took up with the car service department of the United States railroad administration the car shortage situation which has been troubling Indiana farmers in moving grain, live stock and in obtaining fertilizer materials. He was promised all relief possible under the circumstances.

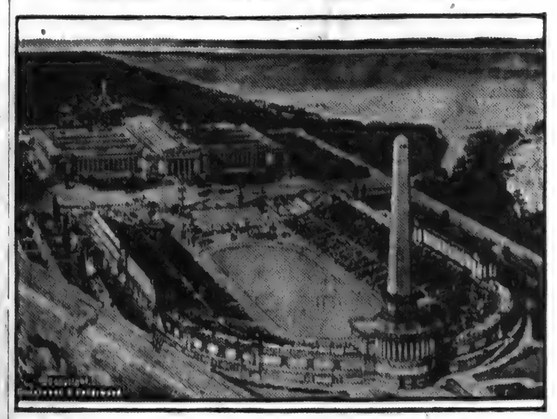
CHIEF OF HOME ECONOMICS

The head of the office of home economics, department of agriculture, a division which advises the American housewife how to preserve and prepare food for her table, is C. F. Langworthy, a bachelor. He has been engaged in the work for more than twenty-five years.

Literal.

Last summer my father and I picked cherries on shares at an old neighbor lady's. This lady's grandson, aged seven, told my brother that my father was picking cherries over at grandma's. "Is he picking on shares?" asked my brother. "No, he's picking on a ladder," answered the small youth.—Exchange.

CHICAGO TO HAVE A GREAT STADIUM



This is the accepted design for a great stadium which will be built by the South park commission of Chicago in Grant park just south of the new Field museum. It will cost $1,500,000 and will seat 100,000 persons.

WINTER FUN FOR DUTCH CHILDREN

These three Dutch children are having as much fun with their old-fashioned sled on a duck pond as do American little ones with their bobsleds and skates.

GAY AND POPULAR RESORT

Biarritz, in Southern France, Noted as the Scene of European Frivolity and Fashion.

One of the gayest and most popular watering resorts of Europe is Biarritz in France, about forty miles from the Spanish border. Its nearness to Spain has colored its language and architecture somewhat, giving it the picturesqueness of both countries. It is a beautiful place, with its cream-colored, red-roofed villas, dark pine trees, winding walks and crescent of white sandy beach guarded at either end by high, rocky bluffs, rising abruptly from the sea. Before the war it was the scene of frivolity and fashion, rivaling Monte Carlo in its gambling, dancing and display. It was a favorite resort with one of England's more playful kings in his lighter moments. Indeed, its main street is called Rue Edouard VII in honor of him.

The war brought a sudden change of mood to Biarritz. Its gambling casinos and hotels were turned into hospitals for wounded French, and later American soldiers. Grim convoys of warships passed close to its shores on their way through the Bay of Biscay. Numerous ships were torpedoed in sight of the shore by the German submarines lurking along the Spanish coast. The coast was heavily mined, and from time to time the detonation of a mine would shake the town.

Quite to the Point.

"I had a sharp dispute with my husband,"

"What about?"

"Pin money."

JUST THE THING FOR PRINCE

Conditions Being in Europe What They Are, Press Agent Had Decidedly Good Idea.

I assisted the other day at what may prove to be the springs and origin of the next great international marriage. The press agent for an organization which deals in philanthropy for Europe was talking:

"I want to bring Prince Doalotski over here next year," said he. "I think I can marry him to some nice American girl."

"That'll be nice," I said. "Especially for the prince."

"That's right," said the press agent, seriously. "There isn't a royal family in Europe that is open to him just now. He could not get into some of them—he ain't such a much of a prince, you know—and it would not pay him to marry into some of the others. They have no money or thrones or palaces or anything left."

"So you think it would be a good idea for him to marry into some well-to-do factory family over here?"

"Sure," said the press agent.—New York correspondence of the Kansas City Star.

Never Took the Ax.

To a small son's insistent inquiry as to where he was going each morning when he left for his work a lawyer always said: "Over to the courthouse. I got an ax to grind with a fellow over there." Little son wrinkled his brow every morning over this answer and one morning he said:

"Well, it's funny I never see you take the ax with you."

MILLIONS
Suffer from
Acid-Stomach

Millions of people suffer year after year from ailments affecting practically every part of the body, never dreaming that their ill health can be traced directly to acid-stomach. Here is the reason: poor digestion means poor nourishment of the different organs and tissues of the body. The blood is impoverished—becomes weak, thin, sluggish. Ailments of many kinds spring from such conditions. Biliousness, rheumatism, lumbago, sciatica, general weakness, loss of power and energy, headache, insomnia, nervousness, mental depression—even more serious ailments such as catarrh and cancer of the stomach, intestinal ulcers, cirrhosis of the liver, heart trouble—all of these can often be traced directly to acid-stomach.

Keep a sharp lookout for the first symptoms of acid-stomach—indigestion, heartburn, belching, food repeating, that awful painful bloat after eating, and sour, gassy stomach. EATONIC, the wonderful modern remedy for acid-stomach, is guaranteed to bring quick relief from these stomach miseries. Thousands say they never dreamed that anything could bring such speedy relief—and make them feel so much better in every way. Try EATONIC and you, too, will be just as enthusiastic in its praise. Make your life worth living—no aches or pains—no blues or melancholy—no more of that tired, listless feeling. Be well and strong. Get back your physical and mental punch; your vim, vigor and vitality. You will always be weak and ailing as long as you have acid-stomach. So get rid of it now. Take EATONIC Tablets—they taste good—you eat them like a bit of candy. Your druggist has EATONIC—50 cents for a big box. Get a box from him today and if you are not satisfied he will refund your money.

The editor was at Lafayette Monday at the bedside of Wm. Quance who is now at the St. Elizabeth hospital, suffering with a severe attack of pneumonia, but was better at this writing. For those anxious to know of his condition, the attending physician said that he saw no reason why he should not get well as far as he was able to judge at that time. His fever was dropping slowly and he is now able to cough up the mucus from his lung. He is in room 215.

Chas. Miser was taken to Fort Wayne Satirday for a slight operation in the ear resulting from his last sickness of a few weeks ago. After he was out a few days his head began to hurt him back of his right ear until his parents became alarmed and upon examination the physician decided there was a pus formation that was causing the trouble. He is doing nicely and it is hoped that he will be out soon.

W. Chapman, Dr. S. D. Wiles, Donald Snyder, Geo. Ridgway, Arden Morr, Harvey Hull, were present at the public reception tendered all returned soldiers of the community at the school house on last Friday evening and a good crowd was also present to partake of the many good things that the people brought to eat. The program as published in our last issue was some what disarranged by the illness of a number of the participants. In all cases the chairman substituted from those who were present and all was well. The Hart Orchestra from Hicksville furnished music for the occasion while the crowd was gathering and also appeared on program at intervals. The event was given by the Selective Service men and was a final round-up of the soldiers. The soldiers were served at a special table while the rest of the crowd were served cafeteria style. The array of eatables was immense and surely the people had a good time and a good feed.

Fordyce Daub returned to Hicksville Monday to resume work after being off duty on account of sickness.

Merritt Milliman is still confined to his home as the result of injuries received from a fall on the ice last week, when he broke one of the small bones in his right ankle and the ligaments being torn loose. It will undoubtedly be a few weeks before he will be able to go to work.

Who Could-n't Win?

That's an easy question to answer. The answer is that St. Joe has some bunch of rooters who make their appearance at most every K. of P. basket ball game. Who couldn't win a game with such a loyal bunch of fans pulling for a victory. It sure did help the K. P.'s to score the tie-off win over the Fort Wayne Moose, in the fastest game of basket ball ever witnessed on the local floor, score, 38-20. Every player on the K. of P. team was there with the goods, fact is they all 'starred' last Saturday evening. The K. of P's. desire to thank everyone of you rooters for your interest in their team and in return for your loyalty they promise you some real basket ball the remainder of the season. Again we thank you. Ben.

Stewart Long Wed. Evening.

The last number of the high school lecture course was held on Wednesday evening at the M. P. Church and even though the lights did play off there was a fairly good crowd present to hear Stewart Long in his address on "Reaching the Goal." He used as his picture the story of the foot race in which one person was the center of attraction because of determination to win in the race, never taking notice to the one who is always present with a discouraging word, always having his eyes turned toward the goal for which he is running. His story was told beautifully and in a way that all will remember. His illustrations were pert and to the point. The course contained but the one lecture and Stewart Long will be remembered as the great climax of the course.

Many People Poisoned

Scores of people meet death each year by a slow process of poisoning that is going on within our bodies. This poisoning is caused by the liver and kidneys failing to perform their proper function. Poisonous matter accumulates within the body and health declines. The unsightly liver splotches, billiousness, headache and dizziness, bad taste in the mouth, coated tongue, a pain in the back or under the shoulder blade, a tired or achy feeling are some of the most common symptoms of this poisoning. If this poisoning it not expelled and the cause removed the resisting power is finally gone and life pays the penalty. Are you of the heedless class or are you safeguarding your health? If you want health you must keep the liver, kidneys and bowels active. Glando Tonic is what you need to restore this activity and expell the poisons. Keep on the safe side and use a reliable remedy. Glando Tonic is put up in a treatment form and guaranteed to do the work. Ask your druggist for a large $1 treatment. Take it as directed and you will be surprised to know how much poison was stored up within your body. When the liver is inactive a mucus or slime collects within the stomach and bowels which hinders digestion and the assimilation of food. This is called catarrh of the stomach or bowels. Glando Tonic outs this slime and mucus and removes it. A nauceated feeling is sometimes experienced when this mucus is breaking loose but as soon as it is removed from the bowels, you will feel fine, the complexion clear, the appet te return and you will want to tell others of your wonderful cure.

Glando Tonic is sold by druggists or may be secured by sending direct to the Gland-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Indiana.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Much Interest In Short Course.

The short course furnished by Purdue Agricultural Experiment Station to the people of DeKalb county, held at Auburn, last week, was well attended despite the bad roads and so much sickness in the various towns and townships. While the greater benefit of demonstration of this character comes to the immediate neighborhood where they are held, the good influence and information given out, reaches out to the remote sections of the county. The talent sent this year was exceptionally good and those who attended cannot help but be more appreciative of the great work Purdue is doing for the agricultural interests of the state, and of course it naturally follows that the counties most benefited are those which co-operate through their county agents. DeKalb is fortunate in this respect, as Mr. Arehart is recognized over the state as a very efficient official. A large number of Indiana counties are now clamoring for county agents and other states are bidding high for our men.

On Tuesday afternoon, the matter of getting more corn per acre was thoroughly gone into and a practical lesson in corn judging and seed corn selection was given. The ladies' portion of the program was exceptionally good. Greater efficiency and better equippment for the home was the watchword and the ladies were able to show the wonderful results obtained through a better knowledge of how best to do things that will benefit all members of the household.

The corn judging was completed on Wednesday and Concord came in for a share of the awards. In the mixed corn class F. L. Milliman, Jay Rickett and L. W. Yeiser all from this township, received the first, second and fourth premium ribbons respectively. William Tritch received first on white corn and L. N. Chapman of Waterloo carried off the honors in the yellow corn class.

Thursday was given over to dairy cows and hogs. The judging was exceptionally beneficial and the matter of balanced rations was given much attention. The big banquet at the Commercial club rooms Thursday evening was attended by about two hundred fifty farmers and their wives and about fifty of Auburn's citizens and business people. Toastmaster Mounts presided credibly and G. I. Christie of Purdue, one of America's foremost agricultural experts gave the principal address. Prof. Christie is always interesting but he was at his best Thursday evening.

Friday's program was carried out as planned and as a result we can hope for better potato production from now on.

A course of the character of those put on by Purdue are not available for every community, but St. Joe, with the great interest they have always taken in institutes, could successfully hold one next year. Now is the time to think about it and begin to plan for a big week about the first of December.

Anniversary of Coburntown Church.

The Anniversary services were held under most trying conditions, Sunday, February 15th. Sickness prevented many from being in attendance and the day was one of the coldest of the year. Considering everything the attendance was much better than expected, while the spirit of the gathering was equal to that of former years. There was a fair attendance at Bible School and morning service when the pastor, T. A. Manley, gave a most interesting and helpful sermon on "The Faith of Our Fathers." He emphasized the fact that the faith of our fathers was not of the hot house variety, but that it was as rugged as the men themselves who came to make their home among the tall timber, felled it and made the swamp lands of this section yield their increase to the needs of the human family.

After a most bounteous dinner prepared by the ladies of the church a program was given in the afternoon presided over by Mr. Clyde Hart. It was different from the one planned but was nevertheless interesting. Mr. Frank Scholes gave a most interesting talk on Coburntown when he was a boy. He took the audience back sixty years ago and told of the character and spirit of the people who made up the community in that early day. His talk was interspersed with little bits of humor and fine sentiment. Mr. Laney Gee and Mr. Saxe Hadsell followed with brief talks on incidents of interest. The talks were concluded by a few well chosen remarks by the pastor, who said that all the things that had been said were a challenge to the interest, zeal and spirit of the youth of today.

Singing by the congregation, a solo by Priscilla Borthwick and two solos, "God is Love" and "The Blind Ploughman," which were splendidly rendered by Mr. Jess Klopfenstein of Fort Wayne made the program complete.

Everyone went away feeling that it had been good for them to be there and that the day had been profitably spent.

Obituary

Jonas E. Howey, was born March 15, 1857, in Allen County, Indiana, and departed this life at his late home near St. Joe, DeKalb County, Indiana, February 13, 1920, aged 61 years, 10 months and 28 days.

He was the son of William and Cathrine (Hirsh) Howey and was married to Mary F. Benner, February 6, 1878. To this union was born five children, two of whom died in infancy, and three sons; George W. of Butler, Edward living at home and Russell of Logansport, survive.

He was converted when a young man and united with the United Brethren Church at Union Chapel, of which church he remained a member.

He has been a sufferer for the last year, and especially in the recent past, as the dreaded disease, dropsy asserted itself. Recognizing that the end was drawing near, he declared that peace was made with God and he was ready for the summons. His wife, also much afflicted, is left to journey alone through the remainder of life. Besides the immediate family, there are left to mourn, two sisters and one brother.

The funeral was conducted from the Newville U. B. Church, Rev. L. G. Bears officiating, Monday at 10 A. M. E. R. Kinsey, director. Burial in River View cemetery.

PROBLEMS FACING STRICKEN WORLD

Shall Chaos or Reconstruction in Europe Follow the Great World War?

IMPERATIVE NEED FOR ACTION

Twelve Months Since the Signing of the Armistice Practically Wasted —Call for Aid From America Must Be Heeded.

Article V.

By FRANK COMERFORD.

The signing of the armistice ended the fighting. The signing of the peace treaty brought peace, but neither of these acts restored devastated Europe. The great job ahead is the work of reconstruction, and when I write the word "reconstruction" I have not in mind the mere rebuilding of the war-stricken areas of France, Belgium, Italy, Poland and Russia. Gigantic and important as this task is, necessary as it is, it is only a small part of the work of real reconstruction. Hundreds of thousands of square miles make up the actual war zone, the ground marched over, the territory under shell fire. Millions of acres of land that once yielded food in response to the touch of the plow have for the past four years been tilled by high explosives.

Belgium was literally looted, pillaged and ravished. Almost the entire state was violated. Nearly one-eighth of France, her industrial section, was crushed. Buildings were destroyed, factories dismantled. Sixty thousand square miles in Poland were laid waste. Italy suffered terribly. The ground is filled with high explosives, undischarged mines and shells. Every day since the work of recovery and restoration began men working in this zone have been blown to pieces. Billions of feet of barbed wire and millions of tons of metal make a dangerous wilderness out of what was once a highly productive area.

Cities and villages are jungles of twisted, broken, torn wood, iron, brick and stone. I have walked through these villages and have stood stunned by the completeness of the destruction. The streets are uneven and lumpy with brick and stone and plaster and glass, aisles of wreckage. Roofless houses with walls gutted and torn, heaps and piles of broken building material; jagged, ragged pinnacles, masses of debris meet the eye. Had I not known of the war and come upon one of these unsightly, shapeless masses of material, I should have thought nature had entered into a mad conspiracy, combining and concentrating all of the powers of a cyclone, a tornado and an earthquake, and spilled their fury on these mangled, dead villages.

Sights to Wring the Heart.

Picture the refugees returning to these villages—coming back home. What the sight must have meant to them. I have seen them, their faces gray as the gray ruins, standing in the midst of their destroyed homes. I have seen them picking their way over piles of stone and brick through great openings made in the broken walls. I saw in their eyes homesickness, a hurt of heart I never shall forget. Old men and old women and little bare-legged children; now and again a boy with a worn, soiled uniform, some limping on crutches, others wearing an empty sleeve. One thought surged through my mind until it almost sickened me—War. The land of the war zone must be reclaimed. These acres are needed now more than they were before the war. The world's food supply is low. Hundreds of miles of trenches must be filled up. Trees must be planted, the ground must be cleaned of shells, cleared of barbed wire; villages, cities, must be rebuilt; sewer systems must be installed. The mess must be moved. It is a big job.

One great misfortune is that although 12 months have come and gone since the signing of the armistice, no general comprehensive plan of reconstruction has been started. Here and there small sections of the devastated regions are being partly reconstructed. Temporary provision is being made for the homeless. This is all well and good, but intelligent, economical, efficient and speedy reconstruction demands a general plan and an organization big enough to put it over. The doing of this work requires vision and capacity for doing big things well. If the physical reconstruction is left to Europe it will not be finished in 50 years. Here is a chance for America. We have a faculty of doing things on a big scale and in a short period of time. Europe needs our help. If we are to give it eventually, why not now?

But the clearing up of the wreckage and the rebuilding is a minor problem compared with the other greater and more important question of reconstruction, the reconstruction of industry, the establishment of normal life.

The reclamation of the devastated area is, after all, only a matter of plan, time and money, and notwithstanding the fact that Europe is bankrupt today, the money must and will come. The barbed wire will be rolled up, the mines and shells will be dug from the fields, the villages will be rebuilt; everything that has been destroyed will be replaced. Physical reconstruction is the least of Europe's problems.

The great problem is the reconstruction of life. The war-devastated and disordered the life of the world. It threw everything into confusion; it left the scheme out of balance.

Only Road to Prosperity.

We live by work. Prosperity means production. Poverty is underproduction. Stripping economics of all its high-sounding jargon, the simple truth that everyone knows is that the world has only the things it works to produce.

It may not be amiss to state a few facts known by everyone which explain the meaning of production: We live on the earth. It is land and water. In the ground are minerals. The land grows crops. We need the minerals that are in the ground. We need the crops, but minerals in the ground, as well as the fertile soil, mean nothing until man by his work brings the mineral from the ground and makes the soil yield. We must have food, we must have clothing, we must have shelter, and the only way we can get these things is by working. If little work is done we have a shortage. There isn't enough food to go around, there aren't enough clothes, enough coal, and as a result the prices of all these necessaries go 'way up. But this is not so important as the fact that when there is not enough to feed the world some go hungry, others must starve. When there isn't enough coal, some are cold, others freeze. When there aren't enough clothes for everyone, some must be ragged and half-naked. Everything by which we live is the result of work. Stop work, and poverty follows. Work, and plenty results. Work is responsible for everything that goes to make life worth living.

To understand Europe's condition today, one must stop and realize that the war stopped production. The result is a shortage of everything. There isn't enough food, there isn't enough raw material, there isn't enough coal. The whole story is told in the word Poverty.

Only Cure Is in Work.

There is a cure; the prescription can be written in a single word. Everyone knows that word, but knowing the word and adopting the word are different matters. Before we can get back to normal life this word must find root in the consciousness of the people. We must realize that the world will continue sick and grow sicker unless this prescription is taken. Further, we must know that if we delay taking this remedy it will be a longer time before we get well. The prescription is work. Every effort should be made to make every man will to work. Every employer must not contribute to unrest and provoke idleness by refusing to negotiate with his men, and into this negotiation he should go with a friendly spirit and a willingness to compromise. The employer who meets labor with the thought in his mind that he is better equipped to fight than labor, because he has a surplus and can eat and be warm, while labor has been living from hand to mouth and will starve, is shortsighted. He had better get the idea out of his head that you can starve men into submission. There was a day when that was true, but that day has passed, never to come. The man who depends upon his ability to turn a key in the factory door and go off on a vacation, imposing his will on his workmen, will discover that these men stopped a certain "gent," late of Potsdam now of Holland, from doing this very thing to the world. He may wake up some morning to learn a new definition of the word "fight."

One thing that people do not realize is that the men who fought the world's fight for freedom are the men who are now complaining that they are not getting a square deal. Who made up the fighting men of the war, the rank and file of the armies that stopped the Prussian Push? Who were the great majority of the volunteers and the conscripted men numbering millions who went to the front for the allies? The teamsters, the shophands, the millworkers, the factory hands, the coal miners. These are the same men who are the center of the labor problem.

Mr. Employer, you are dealing with ex-soldiers. Please don't forget it. They fought for you. You wouldn't have any business today if it hadn't been for them, and when you think of the bond you bought, remember the blood they gave.

Applied Christianity.

The late Archdeacon Madden of Liverpool used to relate how on one occasion he separated two women, one a Roman Catholic and one a Protestant, who were fighting in the street. Afterward he asked the latter, whom he knew, how she, as a professing Christian, could justify her behavior, to which she replied:

"Well, sir, I was only obeying you. I have often heard you say 'Fight the good fight!' That other woman came into my house and she saw a picture of you on the mantlepiece. 'That's no priest,' said she. 'Nor no parson, neither! He's only an old quack.' Do you think I could stand that, sir? No! 'Touch not the Lord's anointed!' I says, and I ups with my fists and I hits her!"—London Post.

Smart Kid.

An Irish school inspector was examining a class in geography. He had propounded a question regarding longitude and received a correct answer. "And now," he said to the same boy, "what is latitude?"

The youngster hesitated a moment and then with a merry twinkle in his eye he replied. "Please, sir, we have no latitude. The British government won't allow us any."

LANSING RESIGNS JOB IN CABINET

Secretary of State Quits and President Accepts His Resignation.

POLK IS AD INTERIM HEAD

Wilson Charges Lansing With Assuming Prerogatives of the Chief Executive During the Past Four Months of President's Illness.

Washington, Feb. 16.—Robert Lansing resigned on Friday night as secretary of state.

Mr. Lansing left office because he was charged by President Wilson with assuming the prerogatives of the president during the period of the latter's illness in the past four months by calling and presiding over meetings of the cabinet.

His resignation, tendered in a letter under date of February 12, was accepted by the president Friday and became effective at once. Under-Secretary of State Frank Polk is the ad interim head of the state department and may be named as Mr. Lansing's successor.

The state department on Friday night issued a formal statement announcing the resignation of Secretary Lansing and giving the correspondence which passed between the president and his chief aid leading up to the breaking of relations.

The correspondence follows:

Wilson to Lansing.

"The White House, Feb. 7.

"My dear Mr. Secretary: Is it true, as I have been told, that during my illness you have frequently called the heads of the executive departments of the government into conference? If it is I feel it my duty to call your attention to considerations which I do not care to dwell upon until I learn from yourself that this is the fact. Under our constitutional law and practice, as developed hitherto, no one but the president has the right to summon the heads of the executive departments into conference, and no one but the president and the congress has the right to ask their views or the views of any one of them on any public question.

"I take this matter up with you because in the development of every constitutional system custom and precedent are of the most serious consequence, and I think we will all agree in desiring not to lead in any wrong direction. I have therefore taken the liberty of writing to ask you this question.

"Cordially and sincerely yours,

"WOODROW WILSON."

Lansing to Wilson.

"The Secretary of State, Washington, Feb. 9.

"My Dear Mr. President: It is true that frequently during your illness I requested the heads of the executive departments of the government to meet for informal conference.

"Shortly after you were taken ill in October certain members of the cabinet, of which I was one, felt that, in view of the fact that we were denied communication with you, it was wise for us to confer informally together on interdepartmental matters and matters as to which action could not be postponed until your medical advisers permitted you to pass upon them.

"Accordingly I, as the ranking member, requested the members of the cabinet to assemble for such informal conference, and in view of the mutual benefit derived the practice was continued.

"I can assure you that it never for a moment entered my mind that I was acting unconstitutionally or contrary to your wishes, and there certainly was no intention on my part to assume powers and exercise functions which under the constitution are exclusively confided to the president.

"During these troublous times, when many difficult and vexatious questions have arisen and when in the circumstances I have been deprived of your guidance and direction, it has been my constant endeavor to carry out your policies as I understood them and to act in all matters as I believed you would wish me to act. If, however, you think that I have failed in my loyalty to you and if you no longer have confidence in me and prefer to have another conduct our foreign affairs, I am, of course, ready, Mr. President, to relieve you of any embarrassment by placing my resignation in your hands.

"I am, as always, faithfully yours,

"ROBERT LANSING."

Wilson to Lansing.

"The White House, Feb. 11, 1920.

"My Dear Mr. Secretary: I am very much disappointed by your letter of Feb. 9 in reply to mine asking about the so-called cabinet meetings.

"You kindly explain the motives of those meetings and I find nothing in your letter which justifies your assumption of presidential authority in such a matter. You say you 'felt that, in view of the fact that you were denied communication with me, it was wise to confer informally together on inter-departmental matters and matters as to which action could not be postponed until my medical advisers permitted me' to be seen and consulted, but I have to remind you, Mr. Secretary, that no action could be taken without me by the cabinet, and therefore there could have been no disadvantage in awaiting action with regard to matters concerning which action could not have been taken without me.

"This affair, Mr. Secretary, only deepens a feeling that was growing upon me. While we were still in Paris I felt, and have felt increasingly ever since, that you accepted my guidance and direction on question with regard to which I had to instruct you only with increasing reluctance, and since my return to Washington I have been struck by the number of matters in which you have apparently tried to forestall my judgment by formulating action and merely asking my approval when it was impossible for me to form an independent judgment because I had not had an opportunity to examine the circumstances with any degree of independence.

"I, therefore, feel that I must frankly take advantage of your kind suggestion that if I should prefer to have another conduct our foreign affairs you are ready to relieve me of any embarrassment by placing your resignation in my hands, for I must say that it would relieve me of embarrassment, Mr. Secretary, the embarrassment of feeling your reluctance and divergence of judgment, if you would give your present office up, and afford me an opportunity to select some one whose mind would more willingly go along with mine.

"I need not tell you with what reluctance I take advantage of your suggestion, or that I do so with the kindliest feeling. In matters of transcendent importance like this the only wise course is a course of perfect candor, where personal feeling is as much as possible left out of the reckoning. Very sincerely yours,

"WOODROW WILSON."

Lansing to Wilson.

"The secretary of state, February 12, 1920.

"My Dear Mr. President: I wish to thank you sincerely for your candid letter of the 11th, in which you state that my resignation would be acceptable to you, since it relieves me of the responsibility for action which I have been contemplating and which I can now take without hesitation, as it meets your wishes.

"I have the honor, therefore, to tender you my resignation as secretary of state, the same to take effect at your convenience.

"Ever since January, 1919, I have been conscious of the fact that you no longer were disposed to welcome my advice in matters pertaining to the negotiations in Paris, to our foreign service, or to international affairs in general. Holding the views, I would if I had consulted my personal inclination alone, have resigned as secretary of state and as a commissioner to negotiate peace.

"I felt, however, that such a step might have been misinterpreted both at home and abroad, and that it was my duty to cause you no embarrassment in carrying forward the great task in which you were then engaged. Possibly, I erred in this, but if I did it was with the best of motives.

"I think, Mr. President, in accordance with the frankness which has marked this correspondence and for which I am grateful to you, that I cannot permit to pass unchallenged the imputation that in calling into informal conference the heads of the executive departments I sought to usurp your presidential authority.

"I had no such intention, no such thought. I further believe that the conferences were proper and necessary in the circumstances, and that I would have been derelict in my duty if I had failed to act as I did.

"I need hardly add that I leave the office of secretary of state with only good will toward you, Mr. President, and with a sense of profound relief.

"Forgetting our differences and remembering only your many kindnesses in the past, I have the honor to be, Mr. President,

"ROBERT LANSING."

Wilson to Lansing.

"The White House, Feb. 13, 1920.

"My Dear Mr. Secretary: Allow me to acknowledge with appreciation your letter of February 12. It now being evident, Mr. Secretary, that we have both of us felt the embarrassment of our recent relations with each other, I feel it my duty to accept your resignation, to take effect at once; at the same time adding that I hope that the future holds for you many successes of the most gratifying sort. My best wishes will always follow you, and it will be a matter of gratification to me always to remember our delightful personal relations.

"WOODROW WILSON."

CONDENSATIONS

Growers in the French Riviera, who ship millions of boxes of cut flowers annually, have learned that they keep fresh much longer if placed in cold storage a day or two before shipping.

At the request of the French government three women and one man have gone overseas to teach the French people how to can and dry food. They will especially instruct the teachers of French agricultural schools.

The legal maximum hours in Austrian factories are eleven a day. Work carried on in excess of eleven hours is regarded as overtime, and must be reported to the industrial authorities.

Safety is the leading feature of a new motor omnibus which cannot be started while the entrance door is open, while the door cannot be opened while the vehicle is in motion.

Many additional sugar mills are being erected in the Philippines, especially in Negros, where the milling capacity will be practically doubled.

LESSON FOR FEBRUARY 22

PETER'S DELIVERANCE FROM PRISON.

LESSON TEXT—Acts 12:1-19.

GOLDEN TEXT—The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them.—Ps. 34:7.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL—II Kings 8:17; Luke 22:39-46; Acts 16:25, 26; Heb. 1:14; James 5:16-18.

PRIMARY TOPIC—How an Angel Helped Peter.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Peter Delivered From Prison.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How Prayer Helps.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Things Wrought by Prayer.

I. Peter's Imprisonment (vv. 1-4).

1. By whom (v. 1). Herod, the grandson of the wicked Herod who slew the innocent children at Bethlehem.

2. The reason (v. 3). It was to gain the favor of the Jews. Herod was not a Jew, and therefore knew that his success was dependent upon having the good will of the Jews. He did not particularly hate the Church, but loved popularity. Herod, for the sake of popularity, assumed a deep sympathy for degenerate Judaism. Since the Church had developed into a successful rival of Judaism—indeed was already displacing it—he saw an opportunity to curry favor with the Jews by putting his hand forth against it.

3. The method (v. 4). Peter was arrested, put into prison and guarded by four quaternions of soldiers. A quaternion is a guard of four soldiers on duty at the same time. Four quaternions meant that a special group was on duty each watch of the night. It was the custom for two soldiers to be in the prison, one on each side of the prisoner, bound to his arms with chains (v. 6). The third one to watch outside the door and the fourth to be near the outside gate. Humanly speaking it was impossible to escape. However, they made one fatal mistake; they left out God.

II. The Church of God in Prayer (v. 5).

The Church was in a crisis; her situation was most grave. James, one of the pillars of the Church, was dead, and Peter, the most prominent of all, was in prison. In this desperate strait they did the wise thing; they betook themselves to prayer. There is nothing too hard for God. Theirs was a noteworthy prayer:

1. It was unto God, not unto men to be heard of men. This is a very common fault today. All true prayer is unto God.

2. It was united prayer. It was made by the Church. God hears the prayers of individuals, but there is peculiar power in the united prayer of God's people.

3. It was an intensely earnest prayer. It was more than unceasing prayer; it was the yearning desire of the soul as it stretched itself out toward God.

4. It was definite prayer. They specifically interceded for Peter. Their prayer was concentrated, definite and specific.

III. Peter Delivered by an Angel (vv. 6-11).

This occurred the night before Herod's plan to make a public display of him.

1. Peter sleeping (v. 6). The angel found Peter asleep. The Lord keeps in perfect peace those whose minds are stayed on him (Isa. 26:3). Again, he gives his beloved sleep (Psalm 127:2).

2. Peter leaving the prison (vv. 7-10). The heavenly light shone in the prison. The angel smote Peter on the side, the chains fell off, Peter put on his clothes, passed by one guard after another, through the iron gate out into the city.

3. The effect upon Peter (v. 11). Although the event was so wonderful to Peter, and at first he thought it a vision, when he came to himself he was assured beyond peradventure of a doubt that God had miraculously delivered him from Herod's wicked hands.

IV. Unconscious Unbelief (vv. 12-19).

1. The behavior of Peter and the Church (vv. 12-17). Peter went to the house of Mary and knocked. The knock was answered by Rhoda, who was so overjoyed on hearing Peter's voice that she forgot to open the gate and ran in and told them that Peter was at the gate.

2. The behavior of the soldiers (vv. 18, 19). There was great agitation among them over Peter's disappearance. This was a serious matter, since they were responsible for him. Not being able to account for Peter's escape, Herod commanded that they be put to death.

FIND WEALTH IN WINTER

Canadian Farmers Turn Winter Months to Good Account.

Large crops and good prices for the wheat, oats, barley and flax from Canadian farms have made the winter resorts in California at times resemble a meeting of a Canadian farmers' institute, but the practice among successful farmers of spending their winters holidaying seems to be on the wane. After all, nothing can be more tiresome than having nothing to do, and the farmers of Western Canada are now finding winter employment right on their farms which rivals the attractions of the sunny South.

Live stock is the explanation, according to a six-foot Westerner who dropped into the Canadian Government Information Bureau at 311 Jackson street, St. Paul. He was on his way back to Western Canada with a carload of selected breeding stock which had carried off blue ribbons at several state fairs in 1919. "We have found," said he, "that there is just as much pleasure and a great deal more profit in developing a herd of prize stock as in listening to the murmur of the sad sea waves. Where we used to grow grain exclusively now we are raising stock as well. The fact that steers raised in Western Canada took the grand championship at the International Live Stock Show at Chicago two years in succession shows how well we are getting along. And instead of depleting our bank rolls we add a tidy sum to them."

"But don't you find the life monotonous?"

"Not in the least. You see, we have a rural club which meets in our school house, where we thrash out all kinds of problems. Here we exchange ideas and also have occasional talks from government experts, and the man who goes abroad for the winter only realizes how much he has missed when at a summer picnic he hears an address by a neighbor that would do credit to a college graduate.

"It was at one of these meetings that we decided to import a prize-winning stallion, and today our district is raising some of the best draft horses in Canada. The carload of breeding stock which I am now shipping to my farm is indirectly the result of our club meetings. We are going to make that little corner of Saskatchewan one of the big stock centers of America. Why shouldn't we? Everything is in our favor—climate, fertility, cheap land, free grazing land adjoining lots of farms, creameries, government supervision. You know how energetic the northern climate makes a man? Well, it's just like that with stock. They get to be great, husky fellows, hardy and big-framed—and that counts on market day.

"Come up and see me some time," were his parting words as he left to catch his train. "I'll show you some of the finest land and live stock out of doors, and treat you to a real farm meal—everything but the coffee and sugar grown right on my farm. That counts some in these days of high prices."—Advertisement.

She Had Spoiled Daddy.

Her father gave Helen several things for Christmas which she wanted very much, and she kept kissing him to show her gratitude. A day or two after Christmas he brought home a belated gift which didn't particularly interest her, and she offered no gratitude.

"Come here and kiss me," said he, pretending to pout in disappointment.

"Oh, dear," sighed Helen, "I've got you so spoiled that you think kissings always go with givings."

SALTS IF BACKACHY AND KIDNEYS HURT

Stop Eating Meat for a While If Your Bladder Is Troubling You.

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it generally means you have been eating too much meat, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them, like you relieve your bowels; removing all the body's urinous waste, else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water scalds and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is a life saver for regular meat eaters. It is inexpensive, cannot injure and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink.—Adv.

The Core of the Afternoon.

Little Marjorie, who is three, told her mother the other evening that while the mother was uptown shopping in the afternoon the little girl had been taken by a servant to call on her father in the latter's office.

"What time did you go?" asked the mother.

"Oh, in the core of the afternoon," replied the little girl.

"Mother doesn't understand what you mean by the 'core' of the afternoon," it was explained to Marjorie.

"Why, I mean the middle," she said simply, as if wondering at the ignorance of grown folks.

She told me—as she had on the steamer—how she'd gone abroad to hunt new psychics for her seances and the circle meeting at her house, of which she was a sort of priestess, and how she had thus come in contact with the Duval girl. This girl had a "wonderful gift of prophecy," and at a private sitting with her had gone into a trance—and had given out that Mrs. Delario was "one of the chosen"—one of the disciples-elect of the Mystic Cult of the Crystal Sphere, whose headquarters were a lamasary in Tibet, and had then predicted that she was shortly to receive the "mystic sign of initiation" and a gift—conveyed through space by spirit influences—of seven blood-red gems, which she was at liberty to dispose of and convert into cash if she desired—the sacred masters not dealing in lucre but only its sublimated equivalents—and apply to her personal needs and the furtherance of her work for spiritualism.

On being pressed by Mrs. Delario to tell more—name the time and place of the gift—the girl had declared that the stones would be in a small oblong box which Mrs. Delario would "discover among her things when the time came," and that she would "receive them suddenly—secretly—without mortal knowledge of how they got there"—and they would probably be given to her in Paris. Beyond this the girl was unable to go.

But Mrs. Delario accepted the prediction and, greatly elated and excited, watched for the hour that was to mark her initiation into earthly wealth and occult glory. The hour did not come in Paris, and she returned to America a trifle disappointed but still expectant.

She unpacked. She found a slipper. Where could be its mate? Absentmindedly she thrust her hand into it and found—her gift!

"And you see the prophecy was fulfilled," she told me. "I had been chosen—as the Duval girl said. Everything came out precisely as she predicted—the diamonds really came to me in Paris, though I didn't know it at the time; there were seven; they were worth enough to make me financially independent, so I can go on with my work for spiritualism; they came without human knowledge; I found them among my things—every detail was correct."

It was a frank, straightforward story, told with a heat of conviction that I think prevented her reading the astonishment that must have kept growing in my face all the time.

It was amazing every way I looked at it; the thing that struck me most was how her memory had slipped one little cog and allowed her belief to roll smoothly off and land her—in Tibet! She thought the box had been sent to her in Paris, but she had worn her slippers on the steamer! I was about to remind her of this as the first step to what I saw was going to be a very painful revelation, when she burst out, "But how could he have known about the diamonds?—that I had them in Paris. The only way I can explain it is that either the Duval girl told him—and she was in a trance and wouldn't have remembered her prophecy—or he's a wonderful psychic himself. . . . But the audacity of the man—saying he put them in my slipper!"

It Was Amazing.

"Claire did," I corrected, by way of beginning.

"It's the same thing. What a lie—to say they're his!"

I hurried on: "Claire did it on the steamer—the night before we landed. That was how she had been set to smuggle them through the customs house. She didn't know what was in the box—she thought it a cipher on tissue paper to save her father's life, and if it was found on her he'd be put to death; but if it was found on you or me—all right—we couldn't explain, for we didn't know anything."

"And do you believe that?" Mrs. Delario demanded, her face a picture of amazement—at me!

With that I went through the whole story of my experiences with monsieur, adding no comments on her story, but telling only his and Claire's—and the legend of the diamonds.

It took a long time—it took a long nerve. While I talked I did not once look at her—I would not witness the defeat of her deep religious convictions and the dissolution of her hopes. I ended apologetically, "So you see, according to that, the diamonds really belong to the Emperor William," I could not bring myself to come out with it flat-footedly and say they positively did.

"Well?"

Her tone was so peculiar that I looked up quickly. And her face was a study. She was obviously puzzled, but amazement still held its ground—amazement at me; pity at me, too, for my credulity. And a moment before I had been almost ready to shed tears over her!

"He's cleverer than I thought," she commented. "Much. Oh, very much cleverer—if he can deceive you like that.

"And he's much more dangerous than I thought—he must have very powerful occult influences working with him, or very remarkable psychics on the earth plane who can get names and dates. And it all shows how careful I've got to be. . . . I'm glad you told me. I see how I must guard myself."

I experienced a strong revulsion of feeling toward her—her manner of taking what I'd told her gave me a positive shock. I'd wasted both my sympathy and my reasoning powers on her. And I saw the machinations she'd be the center of—the wrath of the Emperor William, that I'd been threatened with, hounding her, perhaps to death. I must save her from her own folly—I must convince her in spite of herself and for her own good. If I didn't De Ravenol would before he got through with her, and I hated to think what he'd do: he had too much at stake himself to care what happened to her.

"But wait a minute," I struck in boldly; "you're forgetting that you wore the slippers on the steamer—that knocks Paris: the diamonds could not have been in the slipper when you bought it—or while you were in Paris."

"Why, so I did," she admitted. And I thought for a second that she wavered—that I had given her belief a serious blow. But if I did it rebounded immediately. "And that makes it only the more wonderful!" she cried, and repeated it with delight at the clenching discovery. She did not notice my dry and somewhat disgusted, "It certainly does," but bubbled on: "It only goes to show their powers—their all-seeing, all-helping powers! They made me the gift in Paris, and then, seeing it might be discovered too soon—at a time the knowledge I possessed such wealth and was smuggling it—though I didn't know I was smuggling it—but I should have felt I ought to say something at the customs house if I had known it on the steamer—"

I cut in with positive violence: "You mean they—whoever they are—put the box in your slipper in Paris, then took it out on the steamer so you could wear the slipper—and then put it back after you had worn the slipper? You mean that?"

"Certainly. Why not?" she answered calmly.

I declare I could almost have sworn at her! "Why not!" I gasped.

"Why—not?" she repeated, looking at me darkly. "If they can put it there they can take it out—that is simple every-day reason. Why!—you yourself gave me the proof!—you told me it was once in the other slipper—the one you carried off!"

In the face of such arguments, seriously put, I was helpless.

"If they didn't, who did?" she demanded. "Remember—Claire never told you she did—that's what he says—and he's a consummate scoundrel, capable of any fabrication of the truth to gain his ends and rob a defenseless woman."

Her question and her face both challenged me—demanded the blow direct; but I ducked the issue in a general protest.

"But really, Mrs. Delario, you know—a million dollars' worth of diamonds don't—just happen."

"That's what makes it so wonderful that it did happen—and to me!—to humble little me, who never could have expected it." Her eyes glowed with mystic fire.

"To suspect would have been to doubt God's providence—his promises—everything. How could I? How dared I? I had prayed—the prayer had been answered—" she spoke very solemnly, and added: "I would not let myself doubt."

"But you hadn't prayed for diamonds."

"God—and the masters who carry out the supreme plan—answer prayers in their own way." She said it as if she were admonishing a child, and then snatched the next argument out of my mouth.

"Don't millions of Christian people pray every day, on their bended knees, 'Give us this day our daily bread'—believing they will get it from a divine source, and is it any harder for God to give the diamonds than a crust?"

I was defeated. She went on—in a rather unsteady voice—and told me what she'd thus far held back—the end of the prophecy, not yet fulfilled and that she nightly anticipated: the ultimate revelation and ordination: one of the masters was to wing an invisible flight through the air, straight from Tibet to the room where we sat, and to place upon her bosom the mystic seal—seven blood-red stains, in symbol of seven bleedings of the contrite heart purging itself of its seven deadly sins.

And this, in the last word, is what the diamonds meant to her—the fulfillment of the most passionately cherished aspiration of her life.

"He will come—he will follow his gift—it will draw him like a magnet," she finished joyously.

I was put to rout. The very unreasonableness of her belief constituted for it a sort of dignity. It commanded respect by its isolation and the storms of argument it had withstood.

I got out the box of diamonds and handed it to her. She came out of the inner light in which she'd been silently basking. A shadow crossed her face. She started back—but I thrust them into her hand. And with that I rose.

"You don't mean—" she began.

"I can't discuss it any further today," I said, and I hastened out of the house. It was absolutely the only thing I could do.

CHAPTER XV.

An Important Ownership.

When I left her house this was my situation with Mrs. Delario—she'd given birth to the incorrigible belief that a million dollars' worth of diamonds had been presented to her by an unknown lama in Tibet; sent her through the air; glued into the toe of her slipper, and this in answer to prayer. And I had to reckon with it as a fact—a fact that yelled me off the straightforward course I'd been about to pursue and bullied me into taking devious ways.

"No!" I replied to myself ten dozen times. "The Emperor William didn't consult me about what he should do with his old diamonds; why should he expect help from me now? He's got his own machinery to work with—let him get his diamonds back himself. I'm no detective—I'm not his tool."

Billy was an hour late in reaching the house and I interrupted his petulant explanation as to why he wasn't two hours late, or three, to communicate rapidly—knowing that monsieur would be there in a minute—my decision that Mrs. Delario was to keep the diamonds and the Emperor William might twiddle his thumbs and whistle.

"You took 'em back to her?"

"Yes, and she's to keep them."

"But—what did she say—"

The elevator was rumbling, and I knew who was coming.

"But what are you going to tell monsieur?"

The bell rang—I hadn't decided what I was going to tell monsieur.

I opened the door. Standing behind Claire, his glance to me under his obsequiously lifted hat and across her head, monsieur rapidly prowled my face for the sniff of a hint that I had everything arranged and my diplomacy had been successful. Which hint I'm positive he didn't get. Claire gave a little cry on seeing me, flung herself into my arms and hid her blushes on my shoulder. I ducked my face to hers and bade my visitors enter. I carried Claire forward, leaving monsieur to dispose of his hat and coat in the hall.

I presented Billy to Claire, and she shot him dead with one glance and brought him back to life with the next. At the sound of her lovely voice uttering a thrilly "How do you do?" Billy didn't know his own name—the only name he could at the moment have articulated was Claire de Ravenol.

Claire forgot him as soon as he stammered out his "awfully glad to meet you," and dropped her little hand. I was the magnet of those lovely eyes! Being middle-aged and proper does sometimes have its compensations!

I motioned us to chairs. What was I to tell monsieur! Claire gave me a moment's respite by hurriedly beginning. "Papa says to tell you everything I know—"

She glanced at him and he nodded. "Yes—everything—from so beginning."

"You remember Vevey?"

I nodded and said "Yes."

"Well, papa came to see me there—while I was at school, you know—and he brought me a little box to keep for him—so big."

"What was in that little box?" I questioned.

Claire's eyes mutely appealed to her father.

Monsieur had evidently been waiting for this question and hastily interposed, "She does not know—it was my wish she should know nossing of se contents—to xis day she does not know—" and his whole face was filled with appeal to Billy and me.

I granted the appeal with a jerk of my head that I hoped told him, "All right—I'll keep your secret from her," and he replied to this with, "Tres bien," and a relieved look. But that didn't mean I was through with my questions to Claire.

"What did you think was in the box?" I went on.

"Papers—very valuable papers."

"Valuable in what way? Title deeds to property, for instance? Or a will? Anything of that kind?" I wanted to know what sort of a yarn he'd told her.

"Oh, no—much more valuable than that! A cipher on tissue paper. Papa said his life depended on it—and the life of the emperor of Russia," she hastily added, and blushed and cast down her eyes.

"Ze emperor of Germany," corrected monsieur quietly.

"Yes—I forgot—I thought it was the emperor of Russia."

"It is of no consequence—continue, my child, wis ze narrative."

She seemed a little off the track and I helped her on with another question: "What were you to do with those papers?"

"I was to help papa get them to America—so they wouldn't be found. So I hid the papers while I was at school—I wore them in a little bag around my neck that papa bought for me, and it was all arranged with madame that she was to bring me to Paris when papa telegraphed. And she couldn't, you know, so you brought me."

"So that was why you were so afraid of being searched at the customs house on the frontier?"

"Yes. Papa told me they might—and if they found the papers he would be handed over to the government. But they didn't find them!" She smiled in childish delight. "I got them to Paris with you all right, and then I ran on ahead and told papa and said how kind you'd been, and I said you were just going to America, and he said the governess he'd engaged had been taken sick and couldn't go to America, but the Russian spies were after him and he was afraid he'd be killed, and perhaps you would take me with you."

Billy glared at monsieur. Monsieur answered him with a shrug as much as to say, "Well, what would you?"

Claire went on, "And then papa asked you to let me go with you, and you—you—couldn't."

She was too exquisitely polite to remind me of that stern, uncompromising refusal.

"Well, papa found Mrs. Delario, and it was all right."

"And now, Claire, what was precisely the plan about that little box? What were you to do with it?"

She blushed and grew so embarrassed she could hardly go on, but her father helped her by telling her, "Conceal nossing, my child—you have done only what your faser have commanded you to." Thus encouraged, she confessed, "I was to put it in your slipper—if you had one you weren't wearing, because you know you told papa that your baggage wasn't examined—your cousin was an inspector, or something like that. And if I couldn't get it into your baggage I must put it in one of Mrs Delario's slippers—"

"I remember now!" I suddenly exclaimed. "That time I caught you in my cabin—at my suitcase—you were trying to do it then?"

Tears came to her eyes.

"Yes," she almost whispered. "I was going to put it in one of your slippers—I found you had a pair just like Mrs. Delario's."

"Oh!" I said. And at this, monsieur interposed, "It was my plan—no slipper—if one could be found not worn on ze steamer."

What Ohio Folks Say

Minerva, Ohio.—"I was suffering most severely from a pain in my back. Thinking that it came from the kidneys, I got a bottle of a well-known kidney medicine, and used it with apparent relief, but soon the pain began again. Then I got a bottle of Dr. Pierce's Anuric Tablets and took them. In the box I found literature, saying the Specialists at Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel would diagnose a case free, or something to that effect, so I wrote immediately and learned from them that it was rheumatism (due to uric acid in my system) instead of kidney trouble. I followed their advice and between three and four weeks had relief. I know, too, from the experience of others with whom I am acquainted that they also have been benefited by Dr. Pierce's medicines."—Harry E. Sutton, Minerva, Ohio.

Anuric always benefits and often cures the cause of kidney disease, as well as rheumatism and gout. Sold by druggists, or send 60 cents to Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., or 10 cents for trial package.

Sandusky, Ohio.—"I have taken Dr. Pierce's Anuric and found it very good for kidney ailments and bladder weakness. This Anuric is all that is claimed for it, and I can speak very highly of it as a medicine for the above ailments."—Z. S. Rickard, 1111 N. Depot St.

Fremont, Ohio.—"I can highly recommend Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets to any one suffering with sluggish liver and constipation. I used to be subject to this condition and I found the 'Pleasant Pellets' to give better satisfaction and results than any other medicine I ever took. They are mild and easy in action."—Mrs. Joe Young, 531 May St., N. W.

Wood for sale. F. Scholes.

Roy Wade's Sale, next Monday.

During the past week two carloads of brick have been unloaded here for the new store rooms to be erected on the Big Four corners. The material is being put on the ground just as fast as deliveries can be made. The next car will be building tile for the inside walls.

George Scattergood, assessor of DeKalb county, has called a meeting of all township assessors and their deputies at the court house on next Saturday afternoon at one o'clock for a conference with a representative of a member of the state tax board who will be present. Special instructions will be given the assessors in regard to their work which starts on Monday, March 1st.

Mrs. Al Perkins, of west of town died Monday at Fort Wayne and was buried at Harlan, Wednesday.

Milo Husselman, Justice of the Peace, at Butler, died rather suddenly Tuesday morning. He was stricken about one o'clock in the morning and died at three with a high blood pressure. He was 48 years of age.

Prof. Frank Chapman was confined to his bed a part of last week threatened with pneumonia but is some better this week. His brother came Monday to relieve him of his duties as superintendent at the school for a few days.

The M. P. Missionary society will meet this (Thursday) afternoon with Mrs. Ed Miser at 2 o'clock. The new text book is very interesting and every member and lady interested in the cause will be well paid by being present.

Friday, the 13th., was an unlucky day for G. M. Barney, and the fellow that says there is nothing in that old sign, better stay clear of "Polly." He and Mrs. Barney started to Fort Wayne in their machine and after leaving Cedarville they were held up by a broken axel. They phoned to Leo for help, were taken back to Leo and given another car to return home with. They had nearly reached Hurshtown when a blow-out came upon the scene and they were compelled to call upon a farmer to bring them on to St. Joe. Now, can you blame them for not thinking strangely of the 13th., and especially Friday.

A school teacher received the following note: "Dear Madam—Please ixcus my Tommy today. He won't come to skule because he is acting as timekeeper for his father, and it is your fault. U gave him a ixample if a field is 6 miles around how long will it take a man walking 3½ miles an hour to walk 2¼ times around it. Tommy ain't a man so we had to send his father. They went early this morning & father will walk round the field and Tommy will time him, but please don't give my boy such ixamples agin, because my husban' must go to work every day to support his family."

Friends here will be pleased to learn of the arrival of a little daughter at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George Kannal at Oxford, Pa. Mrs. Kannal will be remembered as the daughter of Rev. and Mrs. L. W. Spayd formerly of this place. The little Miss came February 9th. and has been named Katheryn Amanda.

LOW CORN KING

Anybody Can Afford

to have a good Manure Spreader, and nobody can afford to be without one. This year of all years you should own a spreader. The high price of grain makes farm manure far more valuable than ever. Take care of every bit of it. Haul it out daily if you can and put it on the fields where it belongs. Don't let it lie around the barnyard and thus leach away the plant food it contains. "Save and Have". Save the manure, save your time, your labor, and your horses—and have the increased crops and profits you hope for. Own a Low Corn King manure spreader.

Wire Fencing.

Here is a bit of advise and take it for what it is worth to you: We have had notice that all the wire mills have shut down and if you expect to build fence this spring—now is your opportunity. We have some on hands but it will not last long either. You can get yours now if you think you will need some.

SIRUP TIME.

You will open that camp this year, to be sure. Sugar is going up and will continue to do so. Open that camp and save buying sugar. We have Sap Pails—Spiles and Syrup Cans ready for you. You can't buy them any cheaper anywhere either.

The Willing Workers Class of the Lutheran Sunday School met last Friday evening with David Mumma. $1.00 was voted to the Armenian Fund. After the business session, a pleasant social hour was spent with a Valentine post office, music, stunts and refreshments.

The largest real estate deal that has been "pulled off" for sometime was made on last Wednesday when Dr. Frank Silberg, agent of the Ford car and tractor, purchased the Steward & Beams Garage, where he will install the tractor. Mr. Steward has accepted a position in Michigan, while Mr. Beams whose health is poor, will endeavor to retire for awhile.

Last Wednesday afternoon the Martha Class of the Lutheran Church met with Mrs. Neuton Miller and elected the following officers: President, Mrs John Doll; Vice-president, Mrs. Frank Horn; Secretary, Mrs. Loren Means; Treasurer, Mrs. Dema Hull; Chairman Membership Committee, Mrs. Greeley Wearley; Visiting, Mrs. Fannie Beams; Flower, Mrs. A. K. Mumma.

The Woman's Home Missionary Society of the M. E. Church met at the home of Mrs. R. U. Bowser last Friday afternoon, and elected officers for the year as follows:—President, Mrs. Louie Beam; Vice-president, Mrs. R. U. Bowser; Secretary, Mrs. Gertrude Wasson; Treasurer, Mrs. W. P. Steward; Corresponding Secy., Mrs. Gertrude Smith; Literature, Mrs. W. E. Lipe; Temperance, Mrs. Dora Green; Evangelistic, Mrs. Rebecca Kirst.

Several basket ball games were played here, last week. The Ashley High School played the High School on Tuesday night, the second game of the season; score 25-11 in favor of the home boys. It will be remembered that Ashley was the winner of the game before. A representative was here last week in the interest of the High School Basket Ball Tournament which will be held at Bloomington, Ind., on March 11-13. The local school will be represented. On Wednesday night the Bryan Athletic Basket Ball Club team played the city team here. Owing to the lights being out of order the game was not played until 9:30. The score was 30 13 in favor of the locals. On Saturday night the Auburn Y. M. C. A. Basket Ball Team played the city team, the game again resulting in favor of the local team by a score of 35-14.

Farm House Burns.

The house occupied by Joseph Bice, known as the old George Shutt farm, east of Spencerville, burned to the ground on Sunday morning. The fire started from a spark from the main chimney catching fire in the old shingle roof of the kitchen. The family was unaware of the fire until neighbors came and told them, and upon opening the kitchen door found the kitchen entirely afire. Some of the children, who were asleep when awaken found their bed clothes afire. The mother and a 10-day old babe and the entire family escaped uninjured. Scarcely anything was saved. Frank Silberg and a number of men arrived in time to use chemicals on the summer kitchen and so saved the rest of the buildings, as it was thought all would burn on account of the high winds. The St. Joe Fire Department was called but due to the distance to drive, they could not reach the fire in time to save the building.

St. Joe Farmers Meet.

Seventy farmers of this section met in a mass meeting at the town hall, Saturday afternoon and took under advisement the new schedule of rates as put into effect January 1, 1920, by the St. Joe Telephone Co. There seems to be some objections as to the difference in rates as asked for in the petition of $1.25 net for rural line and the rate of $1.35 net as granted the company by the Commission. The farmers are preparing to petition the company for the $1.25 net rate and better service. Another mass meeting will be held February 28, at which time the company will be asked to be represented and see whether an agreement cannot be reached that will be satisfactory to all patrons. There is some talk of a farmers line being built unless such an agreement can be perfected.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

But Messenger Had to Declare Himself Emphatically Before He Got That Ice Book.

The quartermaster's department had conferred upon me authority to buy for the sum of $6 an ice book good for 2,000 pounds of ice and had sent me to this building, headed up "Commissary," for the goods. The first clerk I saw did not question my good intentions or my legal and military right to buy that ice book somewhere in the building, but was doubtful of his authority to sell it to me. He lacked self-confidence.

He said: "Go to the other end of the building."

And he said: "Go to the other side of the building."

And he said: "Go to the other end of the building."

And I said: "D—— it, I've been to three ends and five sides of this building, and I go no further. If you've got an ice book—and I have reasons for believing you have—I ask you as man to man to give it us."

He said: "Sir, it is yours."—Bookman.

London Tiring of the Dance.

London jazz band proprietors are somewhat gloomy just now, fearing that the dancing boom may not last much longer. One proprietor says that the men he sends out nightly return with very gloomy reports. The attendance is not so good recently in the suburbs, but in the West end proprietors of large dancing halls say the craze will last for at least five years.

WOOD VERY LIKE MAHOGANY

Cariania Can Be Used to Advantage in the Absence of the More Valuable Lumber.

It is interesting to note that more than twenty mahoganylike woods are now offered as true mahogany, not to mention a considerable number of woods cunningly stained to imitate mahogany. In the present circumstances, therefore, when the demand for mahogany is greater than the supply, unusual interest attaches to such woods as Cariania or Colombian mahogany, which is acknowledged not to be mahogany, but which is so similar to it in color, grain effects and working qualities as to serve for the rare wood.

The statement is made that while cariania differs widely in its botanical and anatomical characters from true mahogany, its close superficial resemblance to mahogany and its physical properties at once distinguish it as a high-class cabinet wood. When properly seasoned it does not warp, check or shrink, while much of the lumber is beautifully figured. It works well, takes a filler readily, and can be highly polished.

Highway Improvement

HIGHWAY WORK IS RESUMED

Federal Aid Undertakings Actively Taken Up After Armistice, Says Secretary Houston.

Delayed in its program of good roads construction by the war and confronted at the end of that period by a condition of badly run-down highways, the federal government, cooperating with the highway departments of the several states, has resumed the vigorous prosecution of the work, and, says David F. Houston, secretary of agriculture, there is now no special obstacle to the construction, in the different states of the Union, of those roads which serve the greatest economic needs. In his annual report, Secretary Houston says:

"Good roads are essential to the prosperity and well-being of urban and rural communities alike. They are prerequisite for the orderly and systematic marketing of farm products, for the establishment of satisfactory rural schools, and for the development of a richer and more attractive rural life. Recognizing these facts, the federal government, through the passage of the federal aid road act in 1916, inaugurated a policy of direct financial participation in road-building operations in the various states. This act appropriated $75,000,000, to be matched by an equal amount from the states, for the construction of rural post roads over a period of five years, and $10,000,000—$1,000,000 a year for 10 years—for roads within or partly within the national forests. It required each state to have a responsible central highway commission with the requisite powers and funds. All the states have complied with the terms of the act, although it was necessary for them to enact additional legislation, or to amend their constitutions; to provide sufficient funds to match the federal apportionment; and to strengthen existing central highway bodies or to create new agencies.

"When these preliminary steps had been practically completed and the department and the states were about ready to proceed vigorously with the actual construction of roads, the United States entered the war. It soon
